SUBJECT TO COMPLETION, DATED MARCH 16, 2026

PROPOSED MERGER YOUR VOTE IS VERY IMPORTANT

To the Stockholders of Rallybio Corporation,

Rallybio Corporation, a Delaware corporation ("Rallybio"), and Candid Therapeutics, Inc., a Delaware corporation ("Candid") have entered into an Agreement and Plan of Merger and Reorganization, dated March 1, 2026 (the "Merger Agreement"), pursuant to which, among other matters, Farmington Merger Sub, Inc., a Delaware corporation and wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio ("Merger Sub"), will merge with and into Candid, with Candid surviving as a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio (such transaction, the "Merger"). In connection with the Merger, Rallybio will change its name to Candid Therapeutics, Inc. (together with its subsidiaries following the Merger, the "combined company").

The Merger will become effective at the time the Certificate of Merger has been duly filed with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware or such other date and time as is agreed upon by Rallybio and Candid and specified in the Certificate of Merger in accordance with the General Corporation Law of the State of Delaware ("DGCL") (such date, the "Closing Date," and such time, the "Effective Time"). At the Effective Time, (a) each outstanding share of Candid common stock, par value $0.0001 per share ("Candid Common Stock"), and each share of Candid preferred stock, par value $0.0001 per share ("Candid Preferred Stock" and, together with the Candid Common Stock, "Candid Capital Stock") (excluding shares held by Candid stockholders who have exercised and perfected appraisal rights, shares of Candid Capital Stock held as treasury stock by Candid or held or owned by Rallybio, Merger Sub or any subsidiary of Rallybio or Candid, and any shares described in the following clause (b)) will be converted into the right to receive approximately 0.0716 shares of common stock of Rallybio, par value $0.0001 per share ("Rallybio Common Stock"), based on an assumed exchange ratio of 0.0716 (the "Exchange Ratio"), assuming a reverse stock split of Rallybio Common Stock at a ratio of 1-for-2.5 to be implemented prior to the closing of the Merger (the "Closing") as may be adjusted and as discussed in the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus, and which is further subject to certain adjustments as described below, and (b) each share of Candid Common Stock issued in the Concurrent Financing (as defined and described in more detail below) will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock calculated in accordance with the exchange ratio formula set forth in the Merger Agreement (the "Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio"), which is assumed to be 0.0716 and is subject to the same assumptions as the Exchange Ratio described above and below. Rallybio will assume outstanding and unexercised options to purchase shares of Candid Common Stock, and in connection with the Merger such options will be converted into options to purchase shares of Rallybio Common Stock based on the Exchange Ratio.

Each share of Rallybio Common Stock issued and outstanding at the time of the Merger will remain issued and outstanding, and, subject to the proposed reverse stock split, will be unaffected by the Merger. In addition, on March 1, 2026, Candid entered into a subscription agreement (the "Subscription Agreement") with certain investors, pursuant to which Candid has agreed to sell, and such investors have agreed to purchase, shares of Candid Common Stock for an aggregate purchase price of $505.5 million, immediately prior to the Effective Time of the Merger (such transaction, the "Concurrent Financing"). The closing of the Concurrent Financing is conditioned upon the satisfaction or waiver of each of the conditions to the Closing as well as certain other conditions. The Concurrent Financing is more fully described in the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Subscription Agreement."

Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio has net cash ("Rallybio Net Cash") of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments (as described in more detail in the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio"), including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing.

Table of Contents

Shares of Rallybio Common Stock are currently listed on The Nasdaq Capital Market ("Nasdaq") under the symbol "RLYB." Candid will file an initial listing application for the combined company with Nasdaq. After completion of the Merger, Rallybio will be renamed "Candid Therapeutics, Inc.," and it is expected that the common stock of the combined company will trade on Nasdaq under the symbol "CDRX." On , 2026, the last trading day before the date of the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus, the closing sale price of Rallybio Common Stock was $ per share.

Rallybio stockholders are cordially invited to attend the 2026 annual meeting of Rallybio stockholders (the "Rallybio annual meeting"). The Rallybio annual meeting will be held entirely online. Rallybio stockholders will be able to attend and participate in the Rallybio annual meeting by registering at www.virtualshareholdermeeting.com/RLYB2026 where they will be able to listen to the meeting live, submit questions and vote. 2. Approve an amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to effect a reverse stock split of Rallybio's issued and outstanding common stock at a ratio in the range from 1-for-2 to 1-for-3, inclusive, with the final ratio to be mutually agreed to by Rallybio and Candid, in the form attached as Annex I to the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus (the "Reverse Stock Split Proposal" or "Proposal No. 2");
3. Approve an amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to change the name of Rallybio to "Candid Therapeutics, Inc.," in the form attached as Annex J to the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus (the "Name Change Proposal" or "Proposal No. 3");
4. Approve an amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to increase the number of authorized shares of Rallybio Common Stock from 200,000,000 shares to 500,000,000 shares, in the form attached as Annex K to the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus (the "Authorized Share Proposal" or "Proposal No. 4");
5. Elect Helen M. Boudreau, Lucian Iancovici, and Christine A. Nash, as Class II directors, each for a three-year term and until their successors are duly elected and qualified or until their earlier death, resignation or removal (the "Director Election Proposal" or "Proposal No. 5"); provided that if the Merger is consummated, the effect of the approval of the director nominees named in the Director Election Proposal will be limited because the composition of the Rallybio Board will be reconstituted upon completion of the Merger in accordance with the Merger Agreement;
6. Ratify the selection of Deloitte & Touche LLP independent registered public accounting firm for Rallybio for the fiscal year ending December 31, 2026 (the "Auditor Ratification Proposal" or "Proposal No. 6");
7. Approve the 2026 Plan (as defined in the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus) in the form attached as Annex L to the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus, which will become effective on the date immediately following the consummation of the Merger and is contingent on the completion of the Merger (the "2026 Plan Proposal" or "Proposal No. 7");
8. Approve the 2026 ESPP (as defined in the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus) in the form attached as Annex M to the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus, which will become effective on the date immediately following the consummation of the Merger and is contingent on the completion of the Merger (the "2026 ESPP Proposal" or "Proposal No. 8");
9. Approve an adjournment of the Rallybio annual meeting, if necessary, to solicit additional proxies if there are not sufficient votes in favor of the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, the Name Change Proposal and/or the Authorized Share Increase Proposal (the "Adjournment Proposal" or "Proposal No. 9"); and
10. Transact such other business as may properly come before the stockholders at the Rallybio annual meeting or any adjournment or postponement thereof.

As described in the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus, certain Rallybio stockholders who in the aggregate owned approximately 24.80% of the outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock as of March 1, 2026, and certain Candid stockholders who in the aggregate owned approximately 66.14% of the outstanding shares of Candid Capital Stock as of March 1, 2026, are parties to support agreements with Rallybio and Candid, respectively, whereby such stockholders have agreed to vote (i) in the case of Rallybio stockholders, in favor of the Merger and the other transactions and actions contemplated by the Merger Agreement (collectively, the "Contemplated Transactions"), including (a) the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, (b) the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, (c) the Name Change Proposal, (d) the Authorized Share Proposal, and (e) and the other transactions and actions contemplated by the Merger Agreement, including the Concurrent Financing and the Asset Dispositions (in each case, as defined in the Merger Agreement), and (ii) in the case of Candid stockholders, in favor of adopting the Merger Agreement and approving the Merger and the other Contemplated Transactions, in each case, subject to the terms of the support agreements. Following the effectiveness of the registration statement on Form S-4 of which the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus is a part, and pursuant to the Merger Agreement, Candid shall seek to obtain approval for the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions from stockholders holding a sufficient number of shares of Candid Capital Stock to adopt and approve such matters.

After careful consideration, each of Rallybio's board of directors (the "Rallybio Board") and Candid's board of directors (the "Candid Board") have approved the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions and have determined that it is advisable to consummate the Merger. The Rallybio Board has approved the proposals described in the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus and unanimously recommends that its stockholders vote "FOR" the proposals described in the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus.

More information about Rallybio, Candid, the Merger Agreement and Contemplated Transactions, and the foregoing proposals is contained in the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus. Rallybio urges you to read the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus carefully and in its entirety. IN PARTICULAR, YOU SHOULD CAREFULLY CONSIDER THE MATTERS DISCUSSED UNDER "RISK FACTORS" BEGINNING ON PAGE 27 OF THE ACCOMPANYING PROXY STATEMENT/ PROSPECTUS.

6. To ratify the selection of Deloitte as independent registered public accounting firm for Rallybio for the fiscal year ending December 31, 2026;
7. To approve the 2026 Plan (as defined in the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus) in the form attached as Annex L to the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus, which will become effective on the date immediately following the consummation of the Merger and is contingent on the completion of the Merger;
8. To approve the 2026 ESPP (as defined in the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus) in the form attached as Annex M to the accompanying proxy statement/prospectus, which will become effective on the date immediately following the consummation of the Merger and is contingent on the completion of the Merger;
9. To approve an adjournment of the Rallybio annual meeting, if necessary, to solicit additional proxies if there are not sufficient votes in favor of the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, the Name Change Proposal and/or the Authorized Share Proposal; and

10. To transact such other business as may properly come before the stockholders at the Rallybio annual meeting or any adjournment or postponement thereof.

The Rallybio Board has fixed _____, 2026 as the record date for the determination of stockholders entitled to notice of, and to vote at, the Rallybio annual meeting and any adjournment or postponement thereof. Only holders of record of shares of Rallybio Common Stock at the close of business on the record date are entitled to notice of, and to vote at, the Rallybio annual meeting. At the close of business on the record date, Rallybio had _____ shares of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding and entitled to vote.

Your vote is important. The affirmative vote of a majority of the total votes cast by the holders of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting, assuming a quorum is present, is required for the approval of Proposal Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7 and 8. The affirmative vote of the holders of at least seventy-five percent of the outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting is required for the approval of Proposal No. 4. The votes cast for a nominee for director by holders of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting must exceed the votes cast against by such holders for the election of directors pursuant to Proposal No. 5, assuming a quorum is present. The affirmative vote of the holders of a majority of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock present in person (by virtual attendance) or represented by proxy at the Rallybio annual meeting and entitled to vote on the matter is required for the approval of Proposal 9. Each of Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3 is a condition to completion of the Merger. The closing of the Concurrent Financing is conditioned upon the satisfaction or waiver of each of the conditions to the Closing as well as certain other conditions. Therefore, the Merger and the Concurrent Financing cannot be consummated without the approval of Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The issuance of Rallybio Common Stock in connection with the Merger and the change of control of Rallybio resulting from the Merger will not take place unless Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are approved by Rallybio stockholders and the reverse stock split is effected, Rallybio's name is changed to "Candid Therapeutics, Inc." and the Merger is consummated. Proposal Nos. 4, 7 and 8 are each conditioned on the consummation of the Merger. Therefore, if Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are not approved and the Merger is not consummated, Proposal Nos. 4, 7 and 8 will each have no effect, even if one or more are approved by Rallybio stockholders.

Even if you plan to virtually attend the Rallybio annual meeting, Rallybio requests that you sign and return the enclosed proxy or vote by mail, by phone or online to ensure that your shares will be represented at the Rallybio annual meeting if you are unable to virtually attend. You may change or revoke your proxy at any time before it is voted at the Rallybio annual meeting.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Except where specifically noted, the following information and all other information contained in this proxy statement/prospectus does not give effect to the proposed reverse stock split described in Proposal No. 2 of this proxy statement/prospectus.

The following section provides answers to frequently asked questions about the Merger. This section, however, provides only summary information. For a more complete response to these questions and for additional information, please refer to the cross-referenced sections.

Q: What is the Merger?

- A: Rallybio, Merger Sub, and Candid entered into the Merger Agreement on March 1, 2026. The Merger Agreement contains the terms and conditions of the proposed merger transaction among Rallybio, Merger Sub and Candid. Under the Merger Agreement, Merger Sub will merge with and into Candid, with Candid surviving as a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio. This transaction is referred to as the Merger.

The Merger will become effective at the time the Certificate of Merger has been duly filed with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware or such other date and time as is agreed upon by Rallybio and Candid and specified in the Certificate of Merger in accordance with the DGCL. At the Effective Time, (a) each outstanding share of Candid Common Stock and each share of Candid Preferred Stock (excluding shares held by Candid stockholders who have exercised and perfected appraisal rights as more fully described in the section titled “The Merger—Appraisal Rights” of this proxy statement/prospectus, shares of Candid Capital Stock held as treasury stock by Candid or held or owned by Rallybio, Merger Sub or any subsidiary of Rallybio or Candid, and any shares described in the following clause (b)) will be automatically converted solely into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Exchange Ratio, and (b) each share of Candid Common Stock issued in the Concurrent Financing, as more fully described in the section titled “Agreements Related to the Merger—Subscription Agreement” of this proxy statement/prospectus, will be automatically converted solely into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio. Rallybio will assume outstanding and unexercised options to purchase shares of Candid Common Stock, and in connection with the Merger they will be converted into options to purchase shares of Rallybio Common Stock based on The Exchange Ratio.

Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, upon the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments (as described in more detail in the section titled “The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio”), including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing.

Each share of Rallybio Common Stock issued and outstanding at the time of the Merger will remain issued and outstanding, and, subject to the proposed reverse stock split, will be unaffected by the Merger. In addition, on March 1, 2026, Candid entered into the Subscription Agreement with certain investors, pursuant to which Candid has agreed to sell, and such investors have agreed to purchase, shares of Candid Common Stock for an aggregate purchase price of $505.5 million immediately prior to the Effective Time. The closing of the Concurrent Financing is conditioned upon the satisfaction or waiver of each of the conditions to the Closing as well as certain other conditions. The Concurrent Financing is more fully described in the section titled “Agreements Related to the Merger—Subscription Agreement” of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Q: Why are the two companies proposing to merge?

A: Rallybio and Candid believe that combining the two companies will result in a substantially capitalized, clinical-stage biotechnology company advancing a leading portfolio of T-cell engager therapeutics for autoimmune diseases. For a more complete description of the reasons for the Merger, please see the sections titled “The Merger—Rallybio’s Reasons for the Merger” and “The Merger—Candid’s Reasons for the Merger” of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Q: Why am I receiving this proxy statement/prospectus?

A: You are receiving this proxy statement/prospectus because you have been identified as a stockholder of Rallybio as of the record date. This document serves as:

- a proxy statement of Rallybio used to solicit proxies for the Rallybio annual meeting to vote on the matters set forth herein; and
- a prospectus of Rallybio used to offer shares of Rallybio Common Stock in exchange for shares of Candid Capital Stock in the Merger.

Q: What is the Concurrent Financing?

A: On March 1, 2026, Candid entered into the Subscription Agreement with certain accredited investors (the “Investors”), pursuant to which Candid agreed to sell, and the Investors agreed to purchase, immediately prior to the Effective Time, shares of Candid Common Stock for an aggregate purchase price of $505.5 million. This transaction is referred to as the Concurrent Financing. Shares of Candid Common Stock issued pursuant to the Concurrent Financing will be converted into shares of Rallybio Common Stock in accordance with the Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio in the Merger Agreement. Candid and Rallybio have also agreed to enter into a registration rights agreement (the “Registration Rights Agreement”) with the Investors at the closing of the Concurrent Financing. Pursuant to the Registration Rights Agreement, the combined company will prepare and file a resale registration statement with the SEC within 30 calendar days following the closing of the Concurrent Financing. The combined company will use its commercially reasonable efforts to cause such registration statement to become effective as promptly as practicable. Immediately after the Closing, under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, the Investors are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method and subject to certain assumptions (as described in more detail in the section titled “The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio”).

Q: What proposals will be voted on at the Rallybio annual meeting in connection with the Merger?

A: Pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement, the following proposals must be approved by the Required Rallybio Stockholder Vote (as defined in the Merger Agreement) at the Rallybio annual meeting in order for the Merger to close:

- Proposal No. 1-The Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal to approve the issuance of shares of Rallybio Common Stock to the securityholders of Candid, pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement, a copy of which is attached as Annex A to this proxy statement/prospectus, which will (a) represent more than 20% of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding immediately prior to the Merger and (b) result in the change of control of Rallybio, pursuant to Nasdaq Listing Rules 5635(a) and 5635(b), respectively;
- Proposal No. 2-The Reverse Stock Split Proposal to approve an amendment to Rallybio’s amended and restated certificate of incorporation to effect a reverse stock split of the issued and outstanding Rallybio Common Stock at a ratio in the range from 1-for-2 to 1-for-3, inclusive, with the final ratio to be mutually agreed to by Rallybio and Candid, in the form attached as Annex I to this proxy statement/prospectus; and
- Proposal No. 3-The Name Change Proposal to approve an amendment to Rallybio’s amended and restated certificate of incorporation to change the name of Rallybio to “Candid Therapeutics, Inc.,” in the form attached as Annex J to this proxy statement/prospectus.

Each of Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3 is a condition to the completion of the Merger. The closing of the Concurrent Financing is conditioned upon the satisfaction or waiver of each of the conditions to the Closing as well as certain other conditions. The issuance of Rallybio Common Stock in connection with the Merger and the change of control of Rallybio resulting from the Merger will not take place unless Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are approved by the required Rallybio stockholders, the reverse stock split is effected, Rallybio's name is changed to "Candid Therapeutics, Inc." and the Merger is consummated.

In addition to the requirement of obtaining the approval of the required Rallybio stockholders of Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3, the Closing is subject to the satisfaction or waiver of each of the other closing conditions set forth in the Merger Agreement. In the event of a waiver of a condition, the Rallybio Board will evaluate the materiality of any such waiver to determine whether amendment of this proxy statement/prospectus and re-solicitation of stockholder approval is necessary. For a more complete description of the closing conditions under the Merger Agreement, please see the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Conditions to the Completion of the Merger" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

The presence of the holders of a majority of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote, present in person or represented by proxy, at the Rallybio annual meeting is necessary to constitute a quorum at the meeting for the Proposals.

Q: What proposals are to be voted on at the Rallybio annual meeting, other than the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, the Reverse Stock Split Proposal and the Name Change Proposal?

A: At the Rallybio annual meeting, the holders of Rallybio Common Stock will also be asked to consider the following proposals:

- Proposal No. 4 -The Authorized Share Proposal to approve an amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to increase the number of authorized shares of Rallybio Common Stock from 200,000,000 shares to 500,000,000 shares, in the form attached as Annex K to this proxy statement/prospectus;
- Proposal No. 5-The Director Election Proposal to elect three Class II directors to the Rallybio Board to hold office until the 2029 Rallybio annual meeting and until his or her respective successor has been duly elected and qualified, or until his or her earlier death, resignation or removal; provided that if the Merger is consummated, the effect of the approval of the director nominees named in the Director Election Proposal will be limited because the composition of the Rallybio Board will be reconstituted upon completion of the Merger in accordance with the Merger Agreement;
- Proposal No. 6-The Auditor Ratification Proposal to ratify the appointment of Deloitte & Touche LLP as Rallybio's independent registered public accounting firm for the fiscal year ending December 31, 2026;
- Proposal No. 7-The 2026 Plan Proposal to approve the 2026 Plan in the form attached as Annex L to this proxy statement/prospectus;
- Proposal No. 8-The 2026 ESPP Proposal to approve the 2026 ESPP in the form attached as Annex M to this proxy statement/prospectus; and
- Proposal No. 9-The Adjournment Proposal to approve an adjournment of the Rallybio annual meeting, if necessary, to solicit additional proxies if there are not sufficient votes in favor of the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, the Name Change Proposal and/or the Authorized Share Proposal.

The approval of Proposals No. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 are not conditions to the Merger. Proposal Nos. 4, 7 and 8 are each conditioned on the consummation of the Merger. Rallybio does not expect that any matter other than the Proposals will be brought before the Rallybio annual meeting.

The presence of the holders of a majority of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote, present in person or represented by proxy, at the Rallybio annual meeting is necessary to constitute a quorum at the meeting for the purpose of approving the Proposals.

As of the date of this proxy statement/prospectus, the Rallybio Board does not know of any business to be presented at the Rallybio annual meeting other than as set forth in the notice accompanying this proxy statement/prospectus. If any other matters should properly come before the Rallybio annual meeting, it is intended that the shares represented by proxies will be voted with respect to such matters in accordance with the judgment of the persons voting the proxies.

Q: What stockholder votes are required to approve the Proposals at the Rallybio annual meeting?

- A: The affirmative vote of a majority of the total votes cast by the holders of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting, assuming a quorum is present, is required for the approval of Proposal Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7 and 8. The affirmative vote of the holders of at least seventy-five percent of the outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting is required for the approval of Proposal No. 4. The votes cast for a nominee for director by holders of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting must exceed the votes cast against by such holders for the election of directors pursuant to Proposal No. 5, assuming a quorum is present. The affirmative vote of a majority of shares of Rallybio Common Stock present in person (by virtual attendance) or represented by proxy at the Rallybio annual meeting and entitled to vote on the matter is required for the approval of Proposal 9. Each of Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3 is a condition to completion of the Merger. The closing of the Concurrent Financing is conditioned upon the satisfaction or waiver of each of the conditions to the Closing as well as certain other conditions. Therefore, the Merger and the Concurrent Financing cannot be consummated without the approval of Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The issuance of Rallybio Common Stock in connection with the Merger and the change of control of Rallybio resulting from the Merger will not take place unless Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are approved by Rallybio stockholders, the reverse stock split is effected, Rallybio's name is changed to "Candid Therapeutics, Inc." and the Merger is consummated. Proposal Nos. 4, 7 and 8 are each conditioned on the consummation of the Merger. Therefore, if Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are not approved and the Merger is not consummated, Proposal Nos. 4, 7 and 8 will each have no effect, even if one or more are approved by Rallybio stockholders.

Votes will be counted by the inspector of election appointed for the meeting, who will separately count "FOR" and "AGAINST" votes, abstentions and broker non-votes. Abstentions and broker non-votes will be treated as shares present for the purpose of determining the presence of a quorum for the transaction of business at the Rallybio annual meeting, but will not be counted as votes cast and will have no effect on the outcome of the vote for each of Proposals No. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9. Abstentions and broker non-votes will have the same effect as votes "AGAINST" Proposal No. 4.

As of _____, 2026, the directors and executive officers of Rallybio owned or controlled _____ outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting. As of March 1, 2026, the Rallybio stockholders that are party to a support agreement, including the directors and executive officers of Rallybio, owned an aggregate number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock representing approximately 24.80% of the outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock. Each stockholder that entered into a Rallybio support agreement has agreed to vote all shares of Rallybio Common Stock owned by him, her or it as of the record date (i) in favor of approving the Merger and the other transactions and actions contemplated by the Merger Agreement, including the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, Reverse Stock Split Proposal, Name Change Proposal, the Authorized Share Increase Proposal, the Concurrent Financing and the Asset Dispositions (collectively, the "Contemplated Transactions"), (ii) against any proposal made in opposition to, or in competition with, the Merger Agreement or the Merger and (iii) against any acquisition proposal involving a third party.

Q: What are Rallybio contingent value rights?

- A: Immediately prior to the Effective Time, Rallybio and the designated rights agent are expected to enter into a Contingent Value Rights Agreement (the "Rallybio CVR Agreement"), pursuant to which holders of Rallybio Common Stock, pre-funded warrants, restricted stock units and in the money stock options as of the close of business on the last business day prior to the day on which the Effective Time occurs will receive one contingent value right (each, a "Rallybio CVR") for each outstanding share of Rallybio Common Stock or share of Rallybio Common Stock underlying such pre-funded warrant or equity award held by such equityholder on such date.

Pursuant to the Rallybio CVR Agreement, each Rallybio CVR holder will be entitled to receive on a pro rata basis all of the net proceeds received, if any, by Rallybio as a result of payment of (i) any upfront, milestone, or royalty payments received under any disposition agreement related to the Legacy Assets (as defined in the section titled "Agreements Related to the Merger—Rallybio Contingent Value Rights Agreement"), and (ii) any cash proceeds received from Recursion Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Recursion") related to the earlier sale of Rallybio's REV102 in July 2025. For a period of one year after the Closing, the combined company will use commercially reasonable efforts to effect the disposition of the Legacy Assets.

The Rallybio CVR Payments (as defined in the section titled "Agreements Related to the Merger—Rallybio Contingent Value Rights Agreement"), if any, will become payable to the designated rights agent for subsequent distribution to the Rallybio CVR holders. In the event that no such proceeds are received during the CVR Term (as defined in the Rallybio CVR Agreement), holders of the Rallybio CVRs will not receive any payment pursuant to the Rallybio CVR Agreement. There can be no assurance that any Rallybio CVR holders will receive any Rallybio CVR Payments.

The right to the contingent payments contemplated by the Rallybio CVR Agreement is a contractual right only and is not transferable, except in the limited circumstances specified in the Rallybio CVR Agreement. The Rallybio CVRs are not evidenced by a certificate or any other instrument and are not registered with SEC. The Rallybio CVRs do not have any voting or dividend rights and do not represent any equity or ownership interest in Rallybio or any of its respective affiliates. No interest will accrue on any amounts payable in respect of the Rallybio CVRs.

Q: What will Rallybio stockholders receive in the Merger?

- A: Rallybio stockholders will continue to own and hold their existing shares of Rallybio Common Stock. Each share of Rallybio Common Stock issued and outstanding at the time of the Merger will remain issued and outstanding, and, subject to the proposed reverse stock split, will be unaffected by the Merger.

Further, holders of Rallybio Common Stock, pre-funded warrants, restricted stock units and in the money stock options of record as of the close of business on the last business day prior to the day on which the Effective Time occurs will receive one Rallybio CVR for each outstanding share of Rallybio Common Stock held by such stockholder or underlying such pre-funded warrant or equity award on such date, as described in more detail in the section titled "Agreements Related to the Merger—Rallybio Contingent Value Rights Agreement."

For a more complete description of the treatment of Rallybio securities (as defined below) in the Merger, please see the sections titled "The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio" and "Market Price and Dividend Information" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Q: What will Candid securityholders receive in the Merger?

- A: Candid stockholders will receive shares of Rallybio Common Stock, and Candid optionholders' outstanding and unexercised options to purchase shares of Candid Common Stock as of immediately prior to the Effective Time will be assumed by Rallybio and will be converted into options to purchase shares of Rallybio Common Stock, with appropriate adjustments to reflect the Exchange Ratio, as determined in accordance with the Merger Agreement. Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger and the Concurrent Financing, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments (as described in more detail in the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio"), including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing.

For a more complete description of the treatment of Candid Common Stock and Candid stock options in the Merger, please see the sections titled "The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio" of this proxy statement/prospectus. For a description of the effect of the Concurrent Financing on Candid's current securityholders, please see the sections titled "Agreements Related to the Merger—Subscription Agreement" and "Agreements Related to the Merger—Registration Rights Agreement" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Q: Will the common stock of the combined company trade on an exchange?

- A: Shares of Rallybio Common Stock are currently listed on Nasdaq under the symbol "RLYB." Candid will file an initial listing application for the common stock of the combined company with Nasdaq. At the Effective Time, Rallybio will be renamed "Candid Therapeutics, Inc." and it is expected that the common stock of the combined company will trade on Nasdaq under the symbol "CDRX"; however, the parties may waive the closing condition in the Merger Agreement that the common stock of the combined company be approved for listing on Nasdaq prior to the Closing. For a description of the effect of a waiver of the Nasdaq listing closing condition, please see the section titled "Risk Factors—Risks Related to the Combined Company" of this proxy statement/prospectus. On _____, 2026, the last trading day before the date of this proxy statement/prospectus, the closing sale price of Rallybio Common Stock was $ _____ per share.

Q: Who will be the directors of the combined company following the Merger?

- A: The Merger Agreement provides that the parties will take all necessary action so that immediately after the Effective Time, the board of directors of the combined company comprises seven members, with each member designated by Candid; provided, that the total number of directors to comprise the board of directors of the combined company immediately after the Effective Time may be changed by Candid at any time prior to the Effective Time by written notice to Rallybio. Candid currently expects that immediately following the Effective

Time, the combined company board of directors will consist of six members comprising Candid's current directors: Ken Song, M.D., Angie You, Ph.D., Dan Puckett, Michael Rome, Ph.D., Aaron Royston, M.D. and Jeffrey Tong, Ph.D. and one vacancy. For a more complete discussion of the expected members of the combined company board of directors, please see the section titled "Management Following the Merger" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Q: Who will be the executive officers of the combined company immediately following the Merger?

A: The Merger Agreement provides that the parties will take all necessary action so that immediately after the Effective Time, the persons designated by Candid are appointed to the positions of officers of the combined company. Candid currently expects that the following individuals will serve as the executive officers of the combined company following the Merger:

NAME	TITLE
Ken Song, M.D.	President and Chief Executive Officer
Tim Lu, M.D., Ph.D.	Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Officer
Arvind Kush	Chief Financial Officer and Chief Business Officer
Bernie Huyghe, Ph.D.	Chief Technology Officer

Q: What risks should I consider in deciding whether to vote in favor of the Merger?

A: You should carefully review the section titled "Risk Factors" of this proxy statement/prospectus and the documents incorporated by reference herein, which set forth certain risks and uncertainties related to the Merger, risks and uncertainties to which the combined company's business will be subject, and risks and uncertainties to which each of Rallybio and Candid, as independent companies, are subject.

Q: When do you expect the Merger to be consummated?

A: The Merger is anticipated to close in mid-2026, but the exact timing cannot be predicted. For more information, please see the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Conditions to the Completion of the Merger" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Q: What are the material U.S. federal income tax consequences of the Merger to holders of Rallybio Common Stock?

A: Rallybio stockholders will not sell, exchange or dispose of any shares of Rallybio Common Stock as a result of the Merger. Thus, there will be no material U.S. federal income tax consequences to Rallybio stockholders as a result of the Merger.

Q: What are the material U.S. federal income tax consequences of the issuance of the Rallybio CVRs, including any distributions of Rallybio Common Stock under the Rallybio CVRs?

A: Although the U.S. federal income tax treatment of the Rallybio CVRs is uncertain and the matter is not free from doubt, Rallybio intends to treat a holder's receipt of the Rallybio CVRs as a distribution of property with respect to the holder's existing shares of Rallybio Common Stock for U.S. federal income tax purposes. Please review the information in the section titled "Agreements Related to the Merger—Rallybio Contingent Value Rights Agreement" for a discussion of the material U.S. federal income tax consequences of the Rallybio CVRs to holders of Rallybio Common Stock.

Q: What are the material U.S. federal income tax consequences of the reverse stock split to holders of Rallybio Common Stock?

A: A holder of Rallybio Common Stock should not recognize gain or loss upon the reverse stock split, except to the extent such holder receives cash in lieu of a fractional share of Rallybio Common Stock, and subject to the discussion in the section titled "Proposal No. 2—The Reverse Stock Split Proposal." Please review the information in the section titled "Proposal No. 2—The Reverse Stock Split Proposal—Material U.S. Federal Income Tax Consequences of the Reverse Stock Split" for a more complete description of the material U.S. federal income tax consequences of the reverse stock split to holders of Rallybio Common Stock.

Q: What do I need to do now?

A: Rallybio urges you to read this proxy statement/prospectus carefully, including the annexes and the documents incorporated by reference, and to consider how the Merger affects you.

If you are a Rallybio stockholder of record, as of the record date, you may provide your proxy instructions in one of four different ways:

- You can vote using the proxy card, simply complete, sign and date the accompanying proxy card and return it promptly in the envelope provided. If you return your signed proxy card before the Rallybio annual meeting, Rallybio will vote your shares in accordance with the proxy card.
- You can vote by proxy over the internet, follow the instructions provided on the proxy card.
- You can vote by telephone by calling the toll-free number found on the proxy card.
- You may attend the Rallybio annual meeting online and vote by registering at www.virtualshareholdermeeting.com/RLYB2026. Upon entry of your control number and other required information, you will receive further instructions via email that provide you access to the Rallybio annual meeting and information on how to vote and submit questions during the Rallybio annual meeting. Simply attending the Rallybio annual meeting will not, by itself, vote your shares or revoke your proxy.

We provide internet proxy voting to allow you to vote your shares online, with procedures designed to ensure the authenticity and correctness of your proxy vote instructions. However, please be aware that you must bear any costs associated with your internet access, such as usage charges from internet access providers and telephone companies.

If you hold your shares in "street name" (as described below), you may provide your proxy instructions by following the instructions on your vote instruction form provided by your broker, bank or other agent. Please provide your proxy instructions only once, unless you are revoking a previously delivered proxy instruction, and as soon as possible so that your shares can be voted at the Rallybio annual meeting.

If you are a beneficial owner of shares registered in the name of your broker, bank or other agent, you should have received a voting instruction card and voting instructions with these proxy materials from that organization rather than from Rallybio. Simply complete and mail the voting instruction card to ensure that your vote is counted. To vote at the Rallybio annual meeting, you may visit www.virtualshareholdermeeting.com/RLYB2026, press the "Attend Meeting" button and follow the instructions. You may be instructed to obtain a legal proxy from your broker, bank, or other nominee and submit a copy in advance of the meeting. Further instructions will be provided to you via email.

Whether or not you plan to attend the Rallybio annual meeting, Rallybio encourages you to vote by proxy to ensure your vote is counted. Even if you have submitted a proxy before the Rallybio annual meeting, you may still attend the Rallybio annual meeting and vote. In such case, your previously submitted proxy will be disregarded.

Q: What happens if I do not return a proxy card or otherwise vote or provide proxy instructions, as applicable?

A: If you are a Rallybio stockholder, the failure to return your proxy card or otherwise vote or provide proxy instructions will reduce the aggregate number of votes required to approve each of the Proposals other than for Proposal No. 4, which will have the same effect as a vote "AGAINST" such Proposal.

Q: May I attend the Rallybio annual meeting and vote?

A: Stockholders of record as of _____, 2026 will be able to attend and participate in the Rallybio annual meeting online by accessing www.virtualshareholdermeeting.com/RLYB2026. To join the Rallybio annual meeting, you will need to have your control number which is included on your proxy card. If your shares are held in "street name," you should contact your bank, broker or other nominee if you did not receive a control number. If your shares are held in "street name" you will also need to provide a legal proxy to vote during the meeting.

Q: Who counts the votes?

- A: Broadridge Financial Solutions ("Broadridge") has been engaged as Rallybio's inspector of election. If you are a stockholder of record, your executed proxy card is returned directly to Broadridge for tabulation. If you hold your shares through a broker, your broker returns one proxy card to Broadridge on behalf of all its clients.

Q: If my shares of Rallybio Common Stock are held in "street name" by my broker, will my broker vote my shares for me?

- A: If you hold shares beneficially in street name and do not provide your broker or other agent with voting instructions, your shares may constitute "broker non-votes." A "broker non-vote" occurs when shares held by a broker or other agent are not voted with respect to a particular proposal because the broker or other agent does not have or did not exercise discretionary authority to vote on the matter and has not received voting instructions from its clients. Matters for which the broker does not have discretionary authority to vote are referred to as "non-routine" matters.

Rallybio expects that Proposal Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8 and 9 will be considered to be "non-routine" matters, and thus a Rallybio stockholder's broker, bank or other agent may not vote shares on those Proposals in the absence of such holders' voting instructions. If a Rallybio stockholder does not instruct their broker how to vote with respect to these Proposals, those votes will be counted as broker "non-votes," and will have no effect on the outcome of each Proposal other than Proposal No. 4, which will have the same effect as a vote "AGAINST" such Proposal. Rallybio expects that Proposal No. 6 is considered to be a "routine" matter, and thus if a Rallybio stockholder does not return voting instructions to their broker, such holder's shares may be voted by his or her broker in its discretion. To make sure that your vote is counted, you should instruct your broker or other agent to vote your shares, following the procedures provided by your broker.

Q: What are broker non-votes and do they count for determining a quorum?

- A: Generally, a "broker non-vote" occurs when shares held by a broker are not voted with respect to a particular proposal because the broker does not have or did not exercise discretionary authority to vote on the matter and has not received voting instructions from its clients.

Broker non-votes will be treated as shares present for the purpose of determining the presence of a quorum for the transaction of business at the Rallybio annual meeting, but will not be counted as votes cast and will have no effect on the outcome of the vote for each of Proposals No. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9. Broker non-votes will have the same effect as votes "AGAINST" Proposal No. 4.

Q: May I change my vote after I have submitted a proxy or provided proxy instructions?

- A: Rallybio stockholders of record, unless such stockholder's vote is subject to a support agreement, may change their vote at any time before their proxy is voted at the Rallybio annual meeting in one of four ways:

- You may submit another properly completed proxy with a later date by mail or via the internet.
- You can provide your proxy instructions via telephone at a later date.
- You may send an instrument in writing revoking the proxy or another duly executed proxy bearing a later date to Rallybio's corporate secretary. Any written notice of revocation or subsequent proxy card must be received by the corporate secretary prior to the taking of the vote at the annual meeting. Such written notice of revocation or subsequent proxy card should be sent to Rallybio's Corporate Secretary at Rallybio Corporation, 234 Church Street, New Haven, CT 06510, Attention: Secretary.
- You may attend the Rallybio annual meeting online and vote by registering at www.virtualshareholdermeeting.com/RLYB2026. Upon entry of your control number and other required information, you will receive further instructions via email that provide you access to the Rallybio annual meeting and information on how to vote and submit questions during the Rallybio annual meeting. Simply attending the Rallybio annual meeting will not, by itself, vote your shares or revoke your proxy.

All properly executed proxies that are not revoked will be voted at the Rallybio annual meeting and at any adjournments or postponements of the Rallybio annual meeting in accordance with the instructions contained in the proxy. If a holder of Rallybio Common Stock executes and returns a proxy and does not specify otherwise, the shares represented by that proxy will be voted "FOR" all of the Proposals in accordance with the recommendations of the Rallybio Board.

If a Rallybio stockholder who owns shares of Rallybio Common Stock in "street name" has instructed a broker to vote its shares of Rallybio Common Stock, the stockholder must follow directions received from its broker to change those instructions.

Q: Who is soliciting and paying for this proxy solicitation?

A: Rallybio and Candid are paying 40% and 60%, respectively, of the cost of (i) filing and printing of this proxy statement/prospectus and any amendments and supplements hereto and paid to the financial printer or the SEC and (ii) the proxy solicitation firm engaged in connection with the Rallybio annual meeting. Arrangements will also be made with brokerage firms and other custodians, nominees and fiduciaries who are record holders of Rallybio Common Stock for the forwarding of solicitation materials to the beneficial owners of Rallybio Common Stock. Rallybio will reimburse these brokers, custodians, nominees and fiduciaries for the reasonable out-of-pocket expenses they incur in connection with the forwarding of solicitation materials. Rallybio has retained Georgeson LLC ("Georgeson") to assist it in soliciting proxies using the means referred to above. Rallybio and Candid will pay the fees of Georgeson, which Rallybio expects to be approximately $40,000, plus reimbursement of reasonable and customary out-of-pocket expenses. In addition to solicitation by mail, the directors, officers, employees and agents of Rallybio may solicit proxies from Rallybio stockholders by personal interview, telephone, email, fax or otherwise.

Q: Who can help answer my questions?

The Companies

Rallybio

Rallybio is a clinical-stage biotechnology company comprised of experienced biopharma industry leaders with extensive research, development, and rare disease expertise with a mission to develop and commercialize life-transforming therapies for patients with severe and rare diseases. Rallybio's lead program, RLYB116, is a differentiated complement component 5 ("C5") inhibitor with the potential to treat diseases of complement dysregulation. In addition, RLYB332, a long-acting matriptase-2 ("MTP-2") antibody for the treatment of diseases of iron overload, is currently in preclinical development.

Candid

Candid is a global clinical-stage biotechnology company focused on building the leading portfolio of TCE therapeutics to treat autoimmune diseases, which affect an estimated 5-10% of the global population. Despite available treatments, many patients experience persistent disease activity, progressive organ damage, and lifelong dependence on immunosuppressive therapies that provide incomplete disease control and cause significant adverse events. Cizutamig, which targets B-cell maturation antigen ("BCMA"), is Candid's lead clinical-stage TCE program and is advancing into global Phase 2 studies in generalized myasthenia gravis ("gMG") and systemic autoimmune rheumatic diseases—interstitial lung disease ("SARD-ILD"). TCEs harness a patient's own T cells to deplete pathogenic B-cells, with the potential to deliver either deep depletion of B-cells, which could provide durable disease remission ("immune reset"), or partial depletion of B-cells, which could provide for controlled, sustained disease management ("immune dimming").

Candid has built a diversified pipeline of four wholly-owned TCE programs in development targeting distinct B-cell antigens—BCMA, CD20, and CD19. Candid's most advanced clinical stage program, cizutamig, is a BCMA TCE that is being investigated in multiple Phase 1 dose-escalation trials in patients with gMG and systemic lupus erythematosus ("SLE") as well as investigator-initiated trials ("IITs") in SARD-ILD, systemic sclerosis ("SSc"), and other diseases. Biopsies obtained post treatment with cizutamig show deep B-cell depletion, including in plasma cells, bone marrow and lymph nodes. In patients with gMG, Candid has seen clinical improvements with standardized physician and patient disease activity indices. In patients with SARD-ILD, Candid has seen improvements in lung function as measured by increases in force vital capacity ("FVC"). Cizutamig has demonstrated a favorable tolerability profile in patients with autoimmune disease with low rates of adverse events related to cytokine release and no deaths or dose-limiting adverse events. Candid plans to initiate global Phase 2 clinical trials in gMG and SARD-ILD by the middle of 2026. In gMG, Candid plans to conduct a head-to-head study comparing cizutamig to VYVGART®, a neonatal Fc receptor ("FcRn") antagonist therapy.

Candid's second clinical-stage program, CND261, is a CD20 TCE that is being investigated in Phase 1 dose-escalation studies in patients with rheumatoid arthritis ("RA"), SLE, as well as an IIT in ANCA-associated vasculitis. CND261 was engineered with the goal of achieving deeper B-cell depletion than approved CD20-targeted monoclonal antibodies ("mAbs") such as Rituxan® or GAZYVA®. Lymph node biopsies post treatment with CND261 in patients with autoimmune disease shows deep depletion of CD20 positive B-cells.

CND261 has demonstrated a favorable tolerability profile in patients with autoimmune disease with low rates of adverse events related to cytokine release and no deaths or dose-limiting adverse events. Beyond these two clinical programs, Candid has built a pipeline of next-generation trispecific TCEs, each designed to target two different antigens expressed on B-cells. CND319 is a TCE that targets CD19 and CD20 for B-cell depletion. In non-human primate studies, single doses of CND319 show deep tissue B-cell depletion with minimal cytokine release. Candid expects to initiate first-in-human studies for CND319 in the middle of 2026. CND460 is a TCE that targets CD19 and BCMA and is currently undergoing IND-enabling studies with first-in-human trials planned for the first half of 2027.

Candid has built a portfolio of four TCE programs at various stages of development. Candid’s current pipeline is summarized in the table below.

Drug Candidate	Clinical Focus	Discovery	IND-enabling	Phase 1	Phase 2	Phase 3	Anticipated Near-Term Milestones
Cizutamig (BCMA/CD3)	Autoantibody driven autoimmune diseases ¹						• 1H '26: Complete subcutaneous Ph1 study • Mid '26: Start Ph2 studies

Merger Sub

Merger Sub is a direct, wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio and was formed solely for the purpose of carrying out the Merger. Merger Sub’s principal executive offices are located at 234 Church Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06510, and its telephone number is (203) 859-3820.

On March 1, 2026, Rallybio, Merger Sub, and Candid entered into the Merger Agreement. Subject to the terms and conditions in the Merger Agreement, at the Effective Time, Merger Sub will merge with and into Candid, with Candid surviving as a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio. This transaction is referred to as the Merger.

The Merger will become effective at the time the Certificate of Merger has been duly filed with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware or such other date and time as is agreed upon by Rallybio and Candid and specified in the Certificate of Merger in accordance with the DGCL, subject to the satisfaction or waiver of certain conditions to the closing, including, among other things, approval by Rallybio’s stockholders of the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, the Reverse Stock Split Proposal and the Name Change Proposal.

Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments (as described in more detail in the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio"), including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing.

Rallybio's Reasons for the Merger (see page 166)

In the course of its evaluation of the Merger, the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, the Rallybio Board held numerous meetings, consulted with Rallybio management, its legal counsel and its financial advisors and reviewed and assessed a significant amount of information and, in reaching its decision to approve the Merger, the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, the Rallybio Board considered various reasons for the Merger, as described later in this proxy statement/prospectus under the section titled "The Merger—Rallybio's Reasons for the Merger."

Candid's Reasons for the Merger (see page 169)

In the course of its evaluation of the Merger, the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, the Candid Board held meetings and conducted discussions, consulted with Candid senior management and legal counsel, and considered a wide variety of factors and, in reaching its decision to approve the Merger, the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, the Candid Board considered the following factors:

- the Candid Board's belief that, after reviewing various financing options to enhance stockholder value, the Merger and Concurrent Financing represented the most favorable alternative reasonably available to Candid;
- Candid's prospects if it were to remain an independent privately held company, including its need to obtain additional financing and the terms on which it would be able to obtain such financing, if at all;
- the cash resources of the combined company expected to be available upon the closing of the Concurrent Financing and consummation of the Merger (including the ability to support Candid's current and planned clinical trials and operations);
- the access, as a public company, to a broader range of investors to support the development of Candid's product candidates than if Candid continued to operate as a privately held company;
- the potential to provide its current stockholders with greater liquidity by owning stock in a public company;
- the expectation that substantially all of Candid's employees, including its management, will serve in similar roles at the combined company;
- the terms and conditions of the Merger Agreement;
- the anticipated Nasdaq listing of the combined company's common stock and the adoption of the name "Candid Therapeutics, Inc." for the combined company; and
- the likelihood that the Merger will be consummated on a timely basis.

For additional information, please see the section titled "The Merger—Candid's Reasons for the Merger" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Interests of Rallybio's Directors and Executive Officers in the Merger (see page 177)

In considering the recommendation of the Rallybio Board with respect to issuing shares of Rallybio Common Stock in the Merger and other matters to be acted upon by the Rallybio stockholders at the Rallybio annual meeting, the Rallybio stockholders should be aware that Rallybio's directors and executive officers have interests in the Merger that are different from, or in addition to, the interests of Rallybio stockholders generally. These interests include the following:

- Under the Merger Agreement, Rallybio's directors and executive officers are entitled to continued indemnification, expense advancements and insurance coverage.

- In connection with the Merger, each option to purchase Rallybio Common Stock, restricted stock unit with respect to Rallybio Common Stock and performance-based stock unit with respect to Rallybio Common Stock held by Rallybio's directors and executive officers as of the Effective Time will vest in full upon the Closing.
- Each Rallybio executive officer may be eligible to receive enhanced severance benefits pursuant to their respective employment agreements with Rallybio in the event of a qualifying termination of employment following the Merger.

These interests are discussed in more detail in the section titled "The Merger-Interests of Rallybio's Directors and Executive Officers in the Merger" of this proxy statement/prospectus. The Rallybio Board was aware of these potential conflicts of interests and considered them, among other matters, in reaching its decision to approve the Merger Agreement and the Merger, and to recommend that the Rallybio stockholders approve the proposals to be presented to the Rallybio stockholders for consideration at the Rallybio annual meeting as contemplated by this proxy statement/prospectus.

Interests of Candid's Directors and Executive Officers in the Merger (see page 181)

In considering the recommendation of the Candid Board with respect to approving the Merger, Rallybio stockholders should be aware that Candid's directors and executive officers have interests in the Merger that are different from, or in addition to, the interests of Candid stockholders generally. These interests may present them with actual or potential conflicts of interest, and these interests, to the extent material, are described below:

- As of February 28, 2026, the directors and executive officers of Candid as a group beneficially owned in the aggregate approximately 7.1% of the outstanding shares of Candid Capital Stock. In addition, Dr. Song, his spouse and children are beneficiaries of the Song Beneficiary Trust U/T/A November 6, 2024 (the "Song Beneficiary Trust"), which is managed by an independent third-party trustee and which holds approximately 6.5% of the outstanding shares of Candid Capital Stock.

The Candid Board was aware of these potential conflicts of interests and considered them, among other matters, in reaching its decision to approve the Merger Agreement and the Merger, and to recommend that the Candid stockholders approve the Merger.

Opinion of Citizens JMP Securities, LLC (see page 171)

Rallybio retained Citizens JMP Securities, LLC ("Citizens") as a financial advisor in connection with the Merger. The Rallybio Board selected Citizens to act as Rallybio's financial advisor based on Citizens' qualifications, reputation, experience and expertise in the biopharmaceuticals industry, its knowledge of and involvement in recent transactions in the biopharmaceutical industry, and its relationship and familiarity with Rallybio and its business. Citizens is an internationally recognized investment banking firm that has substantial experience in transactions similar to this transaction.

On March 1, 2026, Citizens delivered to the Rallybio Board its written opinion that, as of such date and based upon and subject to the various assumptions made, and the qualifications and limitations upon the review undertaken by Citizens in preparing its opinion, the Exchange Ratio to be paid by Rallybio pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement is fair, from a financial point of view, to Rallybio. The full text of the written opinion of Citizens, which describes the assumptions made and the qualifications and limitations upon the review undertaken by Citizens in preparing its opinion, is attached as Annex B to this proxy statement/prospectus and is incorporated herein by reference.

Citizens' financial advisory services and opinion were provided for the information and assistance of the Rallybio Board (in their capacity as directors and not in any other capacity) in connection with and for purposes of the Rallybio Board's consideration of the Merger and the opinion of Citizens addressed only the fairness, from a financial point of view, as of the date thereof, to Rallybio of the Exchange Ratio to be paid by Rallybio pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement. The opinion of Citizens did not address any other term or aspect of the Merger Agreement or the Merger and did not and does not constitute a recommendation to any stockholder of Rallybio or Candid as to whether or how such holder should vote with respect to the Merger or otherwise act with respect to the Merger or any other matter.

The full text of the written opinion of Citizens should be read carefully in its entirety for a description of the assumptions made and qualifications and limitations upon the review undertaken by Citizens in preparing its opinion.

The Merger Agreement

Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio (see page 187)

At the Effective Time, each outstanding share of Candid Capital Stock (excluding shares held by stockholders who have exercised and perfected appraisal rights, shares held as treasury stock by Candid or held or owned by Rallybio, Merger Sub or any subsidiary of Rallybio or Candid, and shares issued in the Concurrent Financing) will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Exchange Ratio. Additionally, shares of Candid Capital Stock issued in the Concurrent Financing will be converted solely into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio, which is calculated by multiplying the total amount of Concurrent Financing Merger Shares (as defined below) by the percentage of the proceeds resulting from the Concurrent Financing ("Concurrent Financing Proceeds") (as defined below) represented by the applicable stockholder's investment in the Concurrent Financing, as set forth on the Allocation Certificate (as defined in the Merger Agreement).

No fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock will be issued in connection with the Merger, and any holder of Candid Capital Stock who would otherwise be entitled to receive a fraction of a share of Rallybio Common Stock (after aggregating all fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock issuable to such holder) will receive from Rallybio, in lieu of such fraction of a share: (i) one share of Rallybio Common Stock if the aggregate amount of fractional shares to which such holder would otherwise be entitled is equal to or exceeds 0.50; or (ii) no shares of Rallybio Common Stock if such aggregate amount is less than 0.50, with no cash being paid for any fractional share eliminated by such rounding.

Based on an assumed Exchange Ratio of 0.0716, which assumes (i) a reverse stock split of Rallybio Common Stock of 1-for-2.5, to be implemented immediately prior to the Closing, as may be adjusted, (ii) a valuation of Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing of $37.5 million), (iii) a fixed valuation of Candid of $750.0 million (iv) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid, and (v) proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million, Rallybio expects that it will issue approximately 62,246,687 shares of Rallybio Common Stock in the Merger, excluding any shares that may be subsequently issued in connection with the exercise of Candid stock options assumed by Rallybio and assuming no stockholders of Candid exercise and perfect their appraisal rights.

The Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio Formulas pursuant to which shares of Candid Capital Stock will be converted into shares of Rallybio Common Stock is derived based on (i) a Candid fixed valuation of $750.0 million and (ii) an initial Rallybio valuation of $47.5 million, subject to certain adjustments based on Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing. The Rallybio valuation used to determine the Exchange Ratio will be increased or decreased on a dollar-for-dollar basis to reflect the amount by which Rallybio Net Cash at Closing is greater than or less than the Rallybio Target Net Cash (as defined in the Merger Agreement) of $37.5 million.

Immediately after the Closing, under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, the pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than holders of shares issued in connection with the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, the pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company, and the holders of shares issued in connection with the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments. The Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas assume an implied value of the combined company of approximately $1.303 billion, subject to certain adjustments.

For more information about the Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio, see the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Treatment of Rallybio Equity Awards (see page 179)

The Merger Agreement provides that, prior to the Effective Time, Rallybio will take all actions necessary to provide that all Rallybio equity awards will be fully vested as of the Effective Time and that all options to purchase Rallybio common stock will remain exercisable for no longer than 90 days following the termination of service of the holder of such option.

Treatment of Candid Stock Options (see page 181)

Under the terms of the Merger Agreement, each Candid stock option that is outstanding and unexercised immediately prior to the Effective Time under the Candid 2024 Plan, whether or not vested, will be converted into and become an option to purchase shares of Rallybio Common Stock at the Effective Time. Rallybio will assume the Candid 2024 Plan and all such Candid stock options in accordance with the terms of the Candid 2024 Plan and the terms of the stock option agreement by which such Candid stock option is evidenced.

applicable law; and (C) Candid receives from such person an executed confidentiality agreement containing provisions, in the aggregate, at least as favorable to Candid as those contained in the Confidentiality Agreement.

Termination and Termination Fees (see page 205)

Each of Candid or Rallybio may terminate the Merger Agreement under certain circumstances, which would prevent the Merger from being consummated.

Concurrently with the execution and delivery of the Merger Agreement, the Investors entered into the Subscription Agreement with Candid, pursuant to which such Investors have agreed to purchase, immediately prior to the Merger, shares of Candid Common Stock representing an aggregate commitment of approximately $505.5 million in the Concurrent Financing. The closing of the Concurrent Financing is conditioned upon the satisfaction or waiver of the conditions set forth in the Subscription Agreement and the satisfaction or waiver of all conditions to the Closing set forth in the Merger Agreement.

Rallybio Contingent Value Rights Agreement (see page 212)

Prior to the Effective Time, Rallybio and the designated rights agent are expected to enter into the Rallybio CVR Agreement, pursuant to which holders of Rallybio Common Stock, pre-funded warrants, restricted stock units and in the money stock options as of the close of business on the last business day prior to the day on which the Effective Time occurs will receive one Rallybio CVR for each outstanding share, or share underlying such pre-funded warrant or equity award, held by such holder. Each Rallybio CVR holder will be entitled to receive on a pro rata basis all of the net proceeds received, if any, by Rallybio as a result of payment of (i) any upfront, milestone, or royalty payments received under any disposition agreement related to the Legacy Assets, and (ii) any cash proceeds received from Recursion related to the earlier sale of Rallybio's REV102 in July 2025. For a period of one year after the Closing, the combined company will use commercially reasonable efforts to effect the disposition of any remaining Legacy Assets.

Pursuant to the Rallybio CVR Agreement, each Rallybio CVR holder will be entitled to certain rights to receive 100% of the Rallybio CVR Payments actually received by Rallybio during an annual period (or portion thereof) beginning on the effective date of the Rallybio CVR Agreement and ending on December 31 of any given calendar year during the period beginning on the Closing and ending on December 31, 2030 (each such annual period, a "CVR Payment Period"). Such proceeds are subject to certain permitted deductions, including for applicable tax payments, certain expenses incurred by Rallybio or its affiliates, losses incurred or reasonably expected to be incurred by Rallybio or its affiliates due to thirdparty claims, demands, actions, or other proceedings relating to or in connection with any disposition, any liabilities borne by Rallybio or any of its affiliates pursuant to contracts related to Legacy Assets and any amounts payable to the designated rights agent.

The Rallybio CVR Payments, if any, will become payable to the designated rights agent for subsequent distribution to the Rallybio CVR holders. In the event that no such proceeds are received during a CVR Payment Period, holders of the Rallybio CVRs will not receive any payment pursuant to the Rallybio CVR Agreement for such CVR Payment Period. There can be no assurance that any Rallybio CVR holders will receive any Rallybio CVR Payments.

The right to the contingent payments contemplated by the Rallybio CVR Agreement is a contractual right only and is not transferable, except in the limited circumstances specified in the Rallybio CVR Agreement. The Rallybio CVRs are not evidenced by a certificate or any other instrument and are not registered with SEC. The Rallybio CVRs do not have any voting or dividend rights and do not represent any equity or ownership interest in Rallybio or any of its respective affiliates. No interest will accrue on any amounts payable in respect of the Rallybio CVRs.

Management Following the Merger (see page 181)

Effective as of the Closing, the combined company's executive officers are expected to be the individuals designated by Candid, including:

NAME	TITLE
Ken Song, M.D.	President and Chief Executive Officer
Tim Lu, M.D., Ph.D.	Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Officer
Arvind Kush	Chief Financial Officer and Chief Business Officer
Bernie Huyghe, Ph.D.	Chief Technology Officer

Material U.S. Federal Income Tax Consequences of the Merger (see page 183)

Since the Rallybio stockholders will not sell, exchange or dispose of any shares of Rallybio Common Stock as a result of the Merger, there will be no material U.S. federal income tax consequences to Rallybio stockholders as a result of the Merger.

Risk Factors (see page 27)

Both Rallybio and Candid are subject to various risks associated with their businesses and their industries. In addition, the Merger, including the possibility that the Merger may not be completed, poses a number of risks to each company and its respective securityholders, including the following risks:

Risks Related to the Merger

- The Exchange Ratio will not be adjusted based on the market price of Rallybio Common Stock, so the consideration at the Closing may have a greater or lesser value than at the time the Merger Agreement was signed;
- If the conditions to the Closing are not met, the Merger may not occur;
- The Merger may be completed even though a material adverse effect may result from the announcement of the Merger, industry-wide changes and/or other causes;
- Some executive officers and directors of Rallybio have interests in the Merger that are different from the stockholders of Rallybio and that may influence them to support or approve the Merger without regard to the interests of the stockholders of Rallybio;
- Rallybio stockholders may not realize a benefit from the Merger commensurate with the ownership dilution they will experience in connection with the Merger;
- If the Merger is not completed, Rallybio's stock price may decline significantly;
- Rallybio and Candid securityholders will have a reduced ownership and voting interest in, and will exercise less influence over the management of, the combined company following the completion of the Merger as compared to their current ownership and voting interests in the respective companies;
- The Merger may not be completed on the terms or timeline currently contemplated, or at all;
- Lawsuits may be filed against Rallybio and the members of the Rallybio Board arising out of the proposed Merger, which may delay or prevent the proposed Merger;
- During the pendency of the Merger Agreement, Rallybio and Candid may not be able to enter into a business combination with another party at a favorable price due to specific restrictions in the Merger Agreement;
- Certain provisions of the Merger Agreement may discourage third parties from submitting competing proposals for either of Candid or Rallybio, including proposals that may be superior to the arrangements contemplated by the Merger Agreement;
- Because the lack of a public market for the shares of Candid Capital Stock makes it difficult to evaluate the fairness of the Merger, the stockholders of Candid may receive consideration in the Merger that is less than the fair market value of such Candid Capital Stock or Rallybio may pay more than the fair market value of such Candid Capital Stock;
- The opinion delivered by Citizens to the Rallybio Board prior to the entry into the Merger Agreement does not reflect changes in circumstances that may occur after the date thereof;
- Rallybio or Candid may waive one or more of the conditions to the Merger without recirculation of this proxy statement/prospectus or resoliciting stockholder approval;
- Transfers of the combined company's securities utilizing Rule 144 ("Rule 144") of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (the "Securities Act") may be limited; and
- Rallybio's winddown of its historical operations, the sale of assets, the suspension of development activities and the proposed Merger, resulting in the conversion of Candid into a public company, will make Rallybio subject to the SEC requirements applicable to reporting shell company business combinations. As a result, the combined company will be subject to more stringent reporting requirements, offering limitations and resale restrictions.

Risks Related to Rallybio

- Rallybio has incurred significant losses since its inception and anticipates that, if it continues to progress the development of its product candidates, it will continue to incur losses in the foreseeable future. Rallybio has not commercialized any products and has never generated revenue from the commercialization of any product. Rallybio is not currently profitable, and may never achieve or sustain profitability;
- If Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates, it will require significant additional capital to fund its operations. If Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates and fails to obtain necessary financing, it may not be able to complete the development or commercialization of RLYB116 or any other product candidate. Given Rallybio's limited resources and access to capital, Rallybio may decide to prioritize development of certain product candidates, the choice of which may prove to be wrong and adversely affect our business;
- Raising additional capital may cause dilution to Rallybio's stockholders, restrict its operations or require it to relinquish rights to its intellectual property or product candidates;
- Rallybio's failure to meet the listing standards of Nasdaq, could result in the delisting of its common stock. Delisting could adversely affect the liquidity of Rallybio's common stock and the market price of Rallybio's common stock could decrease, and Rallybio's ability to obtain sufficient additional capital to fund its operations and to continue to operate as a going concern would be substantially impaired;
- Rallybio is heavily dependent on the success of RLYB116, which is in early-stage clinical development. If Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates, and it is not able to develop, obtain marketing approval for, or successfully commercialize our product candidates, or if Rallybio experiences significant delays in doing so, Rallybio's business will be materially harmed;
- Preclinical studies and clinical trials are expensive, time consuming and difficult to design and implement, and involve uncertain outcomes. If Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates, it may incur additional costs or experience delays in completing, or ultimately be unable to complete, the development of its product candidates;
- Enrollment and retention of patients in rare disease clinical trials is an expensive and time-consuming process and could be made more difficult or rendered impossible by multiple factors outside Rallybio's control;
- If Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates, results of preclinical studies, clinical trials or analyses that Rallybio may announce or publish from time to time, may not be indicative of results obtained in later trials, and any interim results Rallybio may publish could be different than final results;
- If Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates, any product candidates that Rallybio develops or the administration thereof, may cause serious adverse events or undesirable side effects, which may halt their clinical development, delay or prevent marketing approval, or, if approved, require them to be taken off the market, include safety warnings, or otherwise limit their sales;
- The marketing approval processes of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (the "FDA"), the European Medicines Agency (the "EMA"), and comparable foreign regulatory authorities, including the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency in the United Kingdom (the "MHRA"), are lengthy, time-consuming, and inherently unpredictable, and if Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates, and is ultimately unable to obtain marketing approval for RLYB116 or any of Rallybio's other product candidates, Rallybio's business will be substantially harmed;

- Rallybio's product candidates target rare diseases and conditions, and if Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates, the market opportunities for RLYB116 or any of Rallybio's other product candidates, if approved, may be smaller than Rallybio anticipates. Rallybio must be able to successfully identify patients and capture a significant market share to achieve profitability and growth;
- Rallybio faces significant competition from biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies, and if Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates, Rallybio's operating results will suffer if Rallybio fails to compete effectively;
- If Rallybio continues to progress the development of its product candidates, it may pursue business development transactions and collaborate with third parties for the development and commercialization of Rallybio product candidates. Rallybio may not succeed in identifying and acquiring businesses or assets, in-licensing intellectual property rights or establishing and maintaining collaborations, which may significantly limit Rallybio's ability to successfully develop and commercialize Rallybio's other product candidates, if at all, and these transactions could disrupt its business, cause dilution to its stockholders or reduce its financial resources;
- If Rallybio is unable to obtain, maintain and enforce patent protection for its technology and product candidates, or if the scope of the patent protection obtained is not sufficiently broad, Rallybio's competitors could develop and commercialize technology and products similar or identical to Rallybio's, and Rallybio's ability to successfully develop and commercialize its technology and product candidates may be adversely affected which may also impact the value of any potential CVR;
- Rallybio equityholders may not receive any payment on the Rallybio CVRs and the Rallybio CVRs may otherwise expire valueless; and
- The tax treatment of the CVRs is uncertain.

Risks Related to Candid

- Candid has a limited operating history, has not completed any clinical trials and has no drugs approved for commercial sale, which may make it difficult for investors to evaluate Candid's current business and predict its future success and viability;
- Candid expects to incur significant losses for the foreseeable future and may never achieve or maintain profitability;
- Candid will need to obtain substantial additional funding to complete the development and any commercialization of its current and any future drug candidates, which may cause dilution to Candid's stockholders. If Candid is unable to raise this capital when needed, it may be forced to delay, reduce or eliminate its research and development programs or other operations;
- Candid's approach to the development of drug candidates to treat autoimmune diseases is novel and unproven, and Candid does not know whether it will be able to develop any drugs of commercial value, or if competing technological approaches will limit the commercial value of its drug candidates;
- Candid is early in its development efforts and only has two drug candidates, cizutamig and CND261, in early clinical development. All of Candid's other drug products, including CND319 and CND460, are in the preclinical or discovery stage. If Candid is unable to advance its drug candidates in clinical development, obtain regulatory approval and ultimately commercialize its drug candidates, or experiences significant delays in doing so, Candid's business will be materially harmed;
- Clinical trials are expensive, time-consuming, difficult to design and implement, and have an uncertain outcome. Any difficulties or delays in the commencement or completion, or the termination or suspension, of Candid's current or planned clinical trials could result in increased costs to Candid, delay or limit Candid's ability to generate revenue or adversely affect Candid's commercial prospects;
- Candid's drug candidates may cause serious adverse events or undesirable side effects or have other properties that may delay or prevent regulatory approval, cause Candid to suspend or discontinue clinical trials, limit the commercial profile of an approved label, or result in significant negative consequences following regulatory approval, if any;

- Cizutamig's mechanism of action results in deep and prolonged B-cell depletion, including memory B-cells, which may lead to hypogammaglobulinemia, loss of vaccine-mediated immunity, and increased infection risk that could limit its clinical utility or require complex patient management strategies;
- Candid has conducted, or plans to conduct, its initial clinical studies for cizutamig, CND261, and its other drug candidates outside of the United States. However, the FDA and other foreign equivalents may not accept data from such trials, in which case Candid's development plans will be delayed, which could materially harm Candid's business;
- Enrollment and retention of patients in clinical trials is an expensive and time-consuming process subject to various external factors beyond Candid's control that may cause delays or complications;
- Since the number of patients that have been and will be dosed in Candid's ongoing clinical trials is small, the results from such clinical trials, once completed, may be less reliable than or may not be predictive of results achieved in larger clinical trials, which may hinder Candid's efforts to obtain regulatory approval for its drug candidates;
- Results of any patient who receives Candid's drug candidate in an IIT, compassionate use program or expanded access program should not be viewed as representative of how the drug candidate will perform in Candid's clinical trials and may not be able to be used to establish safety or efficacy for regulatory approval;
- The affected populations for Candid's drug candidates may be smaller than Candid or third parties currently project, which may affect the addressable markets for Candid's drug candidates;
- Candid's success is dependent on its ability to successfully pursue business development, strategic partnerships and investment opportunities as Candid matures. Candid is currently party to such arrangements, and may enter into additional collaboration and licensing arrangements in the future, and may not realize the benefits of such collaborations, alliances, acquisitions or licensing arrangements.
- Candid contracts with third parties for the manufacturing and supply of certain of its drug candidates for use in preclinical testing and planned clinical trials, which supply may become limited or interrupted or may not be of satisfactory quality and quantity;
- Candid faces significant competition from other biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies, and Candid's operating results will suffer if Candid fails to compete effectively;
- As a company with operations and business relationships outside of the United States, Candid's business is subject to economic, political, regulatory and other risks associated with international operations;
- Candid depends substantially on intellectual property rights granted under its agreements with Genor, EpimAb, and Wuxi Biologics. If Candid loses its existing licenses or is unable to acquire or license additional proprietary rights from third parties, Candid may not be able to continue developing its drug candidates;
- Candid will need to expand its organization, and may experience challenges in managing this growth as it builds its capabilities, which could disrupt its operations; and
- Candid's future success depends on its ability to retain its key personnel and to attract, retain and motivate qualified personnel.

Risks Related to the Combined Company

- The combined company will need to raise substantial additional financing in the future to fund its operations, which may not be available to it on favorable terms or at all;
- Following the Merger, the combined company may be unable to successfully integrate the businesses of Rallybio and Candid and realize some or all of the anticipated benefits of the Merger;
- The market price of the combined company's common stock is expected to be volatile, and the market price of the common stock may drop following the Merger;
- The combined company will incur costs and demands upon management as a result of complying with the laws, rules and regulations affecting public companies;

- If the assets subject to the Rallybio CVR Agreement are not disposed of in a timely manner, the combined company may have to incur time and resources to wind down or dispose of such assets;
- Nasdaq may delist the combined company's securities from trading on its exchange, which could limit investors' ability to make transactions in its securities and subject the combined company to additional trading restrictions;
- Provisions in the combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation, the combined company's amended and restated bylaws and Delaware law may have anti-takeover effects that could discourage an acquisition of the combined company by others, even if an acquisition would be beneficial to the combined company's stockholders, and may prevent attempts by the combined company's stockholders to replace or remove the combined company's current management;
- The combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation will designate the state or federal courts within the State of Delaware as the exclusive forum for certain types of actions and proceedings that may be initiated by the combined company's stockholders, which could limit the combined company's stockholders' ability to obtain a favorable judicial forum for disputes with the combined company or its directors, officers or employees;
- Rallybio and Candid do not anticipate that the combined company will pay any cash dividends in the foreseeable future;
- An active trading market for the combined company's common stock may not develop and its stockholders may not be able to resell their shares of common stock for a profit, if at all;
- Future sales of shares by existing stockholders could cause the combined company's stock price to decline;
- If equity research analysts do not publish research or reports, or publish unfavorable research or reports, about the combined company, its business or its market, its stock price and trading volume could decline;
- The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial statements included in this proxy statement/prospectus are presented for illustrative purposes only and may not be an indication of the combined company's financial condition or results of operations following the completion of the Merger;
- If the combined company fails to maintain proper and effective internal controls, its ability to produce accurate financial statements on a timely basis could be impaired;
- If the combined company fails to attract and retain management and other key personnel, it may be unable to continue to successfully develop or commercialize its drug candidates or otherwise implement its business plan;
- The combined company is expected to take advantage of reduced disclosure and governance requirements applicable to emerging growth companies and smaller reporting companies, which could result in its common stock being less attractive to investors;
- Changes in tax laws may materially adversely affect the combined company's business, prospects, financial condition and operating results; and
- The combined company's ability to use net operating loss carryforwards and other tax attributes may be limited, including as a result of the Merger.

These risks and other risks are discussed in greater detail under the section titled "Risk Factors" of this proxy statement/prospectus. Rallybio and Candid both encourage you to read and consider all of these risks carefully.

Regulatory Approvals (see page 183)

In the United States, Rallybio must comply with applicable federal and state securities laws and the rules and regulations of Nasdaq in connection with (i) the issuance of shares of Rallybio Common Stock to Candid stockholders in connection with the transactions contemplated by the Merger Agreement and the change of control resulting from the Merger and (ii) the filing of this proxy statement/prospectus with the SEC.

Completion of the Merger is conditioned on the expiration or termination of any applicable waiting period (and any extension thereof) under the HSR Act and the absence of any law or order restraining, enjoining, or otherwise prohibiting the consummation of the Merger. The HSR Act provides that certain transactions may not be completed until notification and report forms are furnished to the U.S. Department of Justice ("DOJ") and the U.S. Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") and the HSR Act waiting period is terminated or expires. On March 13, 2026 Rallybio and Candid each filed a notification and report form under the HSR Act with the DOJ and the FTC. The applicable waiting period required under the HSR Act will expire at 11:59 p.m., Eastern Time, on April 13, 2026, unless early termination is granted, Rallybio withdraws and refiles its notification and report form, or a Second Request (as defined below) is issued.

Nasdaq Listing (see page 183)

Pursuant to the Merger Agreement, Rallybio has agreed to use commercially reasonable efforts, (i) to maintain its existing listing on Nasdaq until the Closing and to obtain approval of the listing of the combined company on Nasdaq, (ii) to the extent required by the rules and regulations of Nasdaq, prepare and submit to Nasdaq a notification form for the listing of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock being issued in connection with the Merger and Contemplated Transactions, (iii) use commercially reasonable efforts to cause such shares to be approved for listing (subject to official notice of issuance) on the Nasdaq market at or prior to the Effective Time, (iv) to effect the reverse stock split, and (v) to the extent required by Nasdaq Marketplace Rule 5110, to file an initial Nasdaq Listing Application for the Rallybio Common Stock on Nasdaq and to use commercially reasonable efforts to cause such listing application to be conditionally approved prior to the Effective Time.

Anticipated Accounting Treatment (see page 184)

The Merger is expected to be accounted for under accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America ("GAAP") as an in-substance reverse recapitalization. For accounting purposes, Candid is expected to be considered the accounting acquirer. The treatment as an in-substance reverse recapitalization is based on the assessment that as a result of Rallybio's discontinuation of its research and development activities and settlement of its other remaining operating assets and liabilities, immediately prior to the Closing, Rallybio is expected to have nominal assets, apart from cash and cash equivalents and marketable securities. Under a reverse recapitalization, Candid is considered to effect a financing transaction in exchange for issuing equity.

Appraisal Rights (see page 184)

Holders of Rallybio Common Stock are not entitled to appraisal rights in connection with the Merger under the DGCL.

Candid stockholders are entitled to appraisal rights in connection with the Merger under Section 262 of the DGCL. See "The Merger—Appraisal Rights" elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus for additional information.

Comparison of Stockholder Rights (see page 399)

Both Rallybio and Candid are incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware and, accordingly, the rights of the stockholders of each are currently, and will continue to be, governed by the DGCL. If the Merger is completed, Candid stockholders will become Rallybio stockholders, and their rights will be governed by the DGCL, the amended and restated bylaws of combined company and the amended and restated certificate of incorporation of the combined company, as amended, as more fully described under the section titled "Comparison of Rights of Holders of Rallybio Capital Stock and Candid Capital Stock" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

RISK FACTORS

The combined company will be faced with a market environment that cannot be predicted and that involves significant risks, many of which will be beyond its control. In addition to the other information contained or incorporated by reference in this proxy statement/prospectus, you should carefully consider the material risks described below before deciding how to vote your shares of Rallybio Common Stock. You should also read and consider the other information in this proxy statement/prospectus. Please see the section titled “Where You Can Find More Information” beginning on page 420 of this proxy statement/prospectus for further information.

Risks Related to the Merger

The Exchange Ratio will not be adjusted based on the market price of Rallybio Common Stock, so the consideration at the Closing may have a greater or lesser value than at the time the Merger Agreement was signed.

The Exchange Ratio will not change based on changes in the trading price of Rallybio Common Stock. Therefore, if before the completion of the Merger, the market price of Rallybio Common Stock increases from the market price on the date of the Merger Agreement, Candid stockholders could then receive merger consideration with substantially higher value for their shares of Candid common stock than the parties had negotiated when they established the Exchange Ratio. The Merger Agreement does not include a price-based termination right. Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments (as described in more detail in the section titled “The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio”), including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing.

If the conditions to the Closing are not met, the Merger may not occur.

Even if Proposal Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are approved by the stockholders of Rallybio, specified conditions must be satisfied or, to the extent permitted by applicable law, waived to complete the Merger. These conditions are set forth in the Merger Agreement and each material condition to the completion of the Merger is described in the section titled “The Merger Agreement—Conditions to the Completion of the Merger.” Rallybio and Candid cannot assure you that all of the conditions will be satisfied or waived. If the conditions are not satisfied or waived, the Merger may not occur or will be delayed, and Rallybio and Candid each may lose some or all the intended benefits of the Merger.

The Merger may be completed even though a material adverse effect may result from the announcement of the Merger, industry-wide changes and/or other causes.

In general, either Rallybio or Candid can refuse to complete the Merger if there is a Rallybio Material Adverse Effect (as defined in the Merger Agreement) or a Candid Material Adverse Effect (as defined in the Merger Agreement), as applicable, between March 1, 2026, the date of the Merger Agreement, and the Closing. However, certain types of changes do not permit either party to refuse to complete the Merger, even if such change could be said to have a material adverse effect on Rallybio or Candid, including:

- general business, political or economic conditions generally affecting the industry in which Rallybio or Candid operate, including with respect to the imposition of, or adjustments to, tariffs or other trade restrictions;
- acts of war, the outbreak or escalation of armed hostilities, acts of terrorism, earthquakes, wildfires, hurricanes or other natural disasters, health emergencies, including pandemics and related or associated epidemics, disease outbreaks or quarantine restrictions;

- changes in financial, banking or securities markets;
- any change in the stock price or trading volume of Rallybio Common Stock (it being understood, however, that any effect causing or contributing to any change in stock price or trading volume of Rallybio Common Stock may be taken into account in determining whether a material adverse effect with respect to Rallybio has occurred, unless such effects are otherwise excepted from the definition of Rallybio Material Adverse Effect);
- any failure by Rallybio to meet internal or analysts' expectations or projections or the results of operations of Rallybio (it being understood, however, that any effect causing or contributing to the failure of Rallybio to meet internal or analysts' expectations or projections or the results of operations of Rallybio may be taken into account in determining whether a material adverse effect with respect to Rallybio has occurred, unless such effects are otherwise excepted from the definition of Rallybio Material Adverse Effect);
- any change in, or any compliance with or action taken for the purpose of complying with, any applicable law or GAAP (or interpretations of any applicable law or GAAP);
- the announcement of the Merger Agreement or the pendency of the Contemplated Transactions; or
- the taking of any action required to be taken by the Merger Agreement.

If a material adverse change occurs with respect to either party or both parties and Rallybio and Candid still complete the Merger, the stock price of the combined company following the Closing may suffer and may reduce the value of the Merger to the stockholders of Rallybio, Candid or both.

Some executive officers and directors of Rallybio have interests in the Merger that are different from the stockholders of Rallybio and that may influence them to support or approve the Merger without regard to the interests of the stockholders of Rallybio.

Certain executive officers and directors of Rallybio are parties to arrangements that provide them with interests in the Merger that are different from the stockholders of Rallybio, including severance benefits, the acceleration of equity award vesting and continued indemnification.

In addition, Robert Hopfner, a current member of Rallybio's board, is affiliated with an investment fund participating in the concurrent financing. See "The Merger—Interests of Rallybio's Directors and Executive Officers in the Merger" for more information.

The Rallybio Board was aware of and considered these interests, among other matters, in reaching its determination (i) that the terms of the Merger Agreement and the Merger and the other Contemplated Transactions are fair to, advisable and in the best interest of Rallybio and its stockholders, (ii) to approve and declare advisable the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, including the Merger and the issuance of shares of Rallybio Common Stock to the stockholders of Candid pursuant to the Merger Agreement and (iii) to recommend, upon the terms and subject to the terms and conditions set forth in the Merger Agreement, that the stockholders of Rallybio vote to approve Nos. 1, 2 and 3. These interests, among other factors, may have influenced the directors and executive officers of Rallybio to support or approve the Merger.

For more information regarding the interests of Rallybio executive officers and directors in the Merger, see the section titled "The Merger—Interests of Rallybio's Directors and Executive Officers in the Merger."

Rallybio stockholders may not realize a benefit from the Merger commensurate with the ownership dilution they will experience in connection with the Merger.

If the combined company is unable to realize the full strategic and financial benefits currently anticipated from the Merger, Rallybio stockholders will have experienced substantial dilution of their ownership interests without receiving any commensurate benefit, or only receiving part of the commensurate benefit to the extent the combined company is able to realize only part of the strategic and financial benefits currently anticipated from the Merger.

If the Merger is not completed, Rallybio's stock price may decline significantly.

The market price of Rallybio Common Stock is subject to significant fluctuations. During the 12-month period ended March 1, 2026, the closing per share sales price of Rallybio Common Stock on Nasdaq ranged from a high of $7.54 on February 27, 2026 to a low of $2.00 (after giving effect to Rallybio's 1-for-8 reverse stock split approved by Rallybio's stockholders on January 26, 2026 at a Special Meeting of Stockholders and effective as of 12:01 Eastern

Time on February 6, 2026) on April 8, 2025. Market prices for securities of pharmaceutical, biotechnology and other life science companies have historically been particularly volatile. In addition, the market price of Rallybio Common Stock will likely be volatile based on whether stockholders and other investors believe that Rallybio can complete the Merger or otherwise raise additional capital to support Rallybio's operations if the Merger is not consummated and another strategic transaction cannot be identified, negotiated and consummated in a timely manner, if at all. The volatility of the market price of Rallybio Common Stock is exacerbated by low trading volume.

Additional factors that may cause the market price of Rallybio Common Stock to fluctuate include:

- the entry into, or termination of, key agreements, including commercial partner agreements;
- announcements by commercial partners or competitors of new commercial products, clinical progress or lack thereof, significant contracts, commercial relationships or capital commitments;
- the loss of key employees;
- future sales of its common stock;
- general and industry-specific economic conditions that may affect its research and development expenditures;
- the failure to meet industry analyst expectations; and
- period-to-period fluctuations in financial results.

Moreover, the stock markets in general have experienced substantial volatility that has often been unrelated to the operating performance of individual companies. These broad market fluctuations may also adversely affect the trading price of Rallybio Common Stock. In the past, following periods of volatility in the market price of a company's securities, stockholders have often instituted class action securities litigation against such companies.

Rallybio and Candid equityholders will have a reduced ownership and voting interest in, and will exercise less influence over the management of, the combined company following the completion of the Merger as compared to their current ownership and voting interests in the respective companies.

After the completion of the Merger, the current stockholders of Rallybio and Candid will own a smaller percentage of the combined company than their ownership of their respective companies prior to the Merger. Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments (as described in more detail in the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio"), including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing.

The Merger may not be completed on the terms or timeline currently contemplated, or at all.

The consummation of the Merger is subject to numerous conditions, including (1) the effectiveness of the registration statement of which this proxy statement/prospectus forms a part, (2) the approval by Rallybio's stockholders of the Rallybio Stockholder Matters, (3) the approval by Candid's stockholders of the Candid Stockholder Matters, and (4) other customary closing conditions and there can be no assurance that the Merger will be consummated. See the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Conditions to the Completion of the Merger."

If the Merger is not completed for any reason, the price of Rallybio Common Stock may decline to the extent that the market price of Rallybio Common Stock reflects or previously reflected positive market assumptions that the Merger would be completed and the related benefits would be realized. In addition, Rallybio and Candid have expended and will continue to expend significant management time and resources and have incurred and will continue to incur significant expenses due to legal, advisory, printing and financial services fees related to the Merger. These expenses must be paid regardless of whether the Merger is consummated.

Lawsuits may be filed against Rallybio and the members of the Rallybio Board arising out of the proposed Merger, which may delay or prevent the proposed Merger.

Putative stockholder complaints, including stockholder class action complaints, and other complaints may be filed against Rallybio, the Rallybio Board, Candid, the Candid Board and others in connection with the transactions contemplated by the Merger Agreement. The outcome of litigation is uncertain, and Rallybio may not be successful in defending against any such future claims. Lawsuits that may be filed against Rallybio, the Rallybio Board, Candid, or the Candid Board could delay or prevent the Merger, divert the attention of Rallybio's management and employees from Rallybio's day-to-day business and otherwise adversely affect Rallybio's financial condition.

During the pendency of the Merger Agreement, Rallybio and Candid may not be able to enter into a business combination with another party at a favorable price because of restrictions in the Merger Agreement, which could adversely affect their respective businesses.

Covenants in the Merger Agreement impede the ability of Rallybio and Candid to make acquisitions, subject to specified exceptions relating to fiduciary duties, or complete other mergers, sales of assets or other business combinations pending completion of the Merger. As a result, if the Merger is not completed, the parties may be at a disadvantage to their competitors during that period. In addition, while the Merger Agreement is in effect, each party is generally prohibited from soliciting, initiating, knowingly encouraging or entering into specified extraordinary transactions, such as a merger, sale of assets or other business combination, with any third party, subject to specified exceptions, even if any such transaction could be favorable to such party's stockholders or stockholders, as applicable. For a more complete description of the restrictions on pursuing alternative transactions please see the section titled "The Merger Agreement."

Certain provisions of the Merger Agreement may discourage third parties from submitting competing proposals, including proposals that may be superior to the arrangements contemplated by the Merger Agreement.

The terms of the Merger Agreement prohibit each of Rallybio and Candid from soliciting competing proposals or cooperating with persons making unsolicited takeover proposals, except in certain limited circumstances. With respect to Rallybio, the Rallybio Board may respond to an unsolicited competing proposal if it determines in good faith, after consultation with its outside financial advisor and outside legal counsel, that the unsolicited competing proposal constitutes, or is reasonably likely to result in, a superior competing proposal and, after consultation with its outside legal counsel, that failure to take such action would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of the Rallybio Board. With respect to Candid, following receipt of a bona fide acquisition proposal by any person that the Candid Board has determined constitutes, or is reasonably likely to result in, a superior offer, Candid may solicit acquisition proposals and furnish information to, and enter into discussions with, any person (including persons not making such proposal) if the Candid Board concludes in good faith, after consultation with its outside legal counsel and financial advisor, that failure to take such action would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of the Candid Board.

In certain circumstances, and subject to compliance with the Merger Agreement, the Rallybio Board or the Candid Board may change its recommendation to its respective stockholders if it determines such recommendation change is required to avoid a breach of its fiduciary duties. Additionally, subject to compliance with the procedures set forth in the Merger Agreement, including paying the applicable termination fee, Candid may terminate the Merger Agreement in order to enter into an agreement with respect to a Superior Offer.

Upon termination of the Merger Agreement in certain circumstances, Candid may be required to pay to Rallybio a termination fee of (x) $50.0 million, including (i) where the Candid Board changes or withdraws its recommendation in favor of the Merger or recommends to enter into an alternative transaction, (ii) in certain circumstances where Candid enters into a Permitted Alternative Agreement (as defined in the Merger Agreement); or (iii) if (a) the Merger Agreement is terminated because Candid (1) fails to obtain the requisite stockholder approval of the Merger Agreement and the transactions contemplated thereby or (2) breaches the Merger Agreement, (b) an alternative acquisition proposal was announced or disclosed prior to obtaining Candid's stockholder approval, and (c) within 12 months of the termination of the Merger Agreement, Candid enters into a definitive agreement with respect to an alternative transaction; or (y) $10.0 million, if (i) the Merger Agreement is terminated because the Merger has not been consummated by the End Date (as defined in the Merger Agreement), (ii) an alternative acquisition proposal was announced or disclosed prior to obtaining Candid's stockholder approval, and (iii) within 12 months of the termination of the Merger Agreement, Candid enters into a definitive agreement with respect to an alternative transaction.

Upon termination of the Merger Agreement in certain circumstances, a termination fee of $1.425 million may be payable by Rallybio to Candid if (i)(a) the Merger Agreement is terminated because the Merger has not been consummated by the End Date (as defined in the Merger Agreement) or Rallybio (1) fails to obtain the requisite stockholder approval of the Rallybio Stockholder Matters or (2) breaches the Merger Agreement, (b) an alternative acquisition proposal was announced or disclosed prior to such termination, and (c) within 12 months of the termination of the Merger Agreement, Rallybio enters into a definitive agreement with respect to an alternative transaction, (ii) Rallybio fails to include its board recommendation in this proxy statement/prospectus, or (iii) the Rallybio Board of directors changes or withdraws its recommendation in favor of the Merger or approves an alternative transaction, or willfully and intentionally breaches its non-solicitation or certain other obligations under the Merger Agreement.

Candid and Rallybio have also each agreed to reimburse the other party for up to $500,000 for third-party expenses, as applicable, if the Merger Agreement is terminated in certain circumstances.

These termination fees and expense reimbursement provisions may discourage third parties from submitting competing proposals to Rallybio or Candid or their respective stockholders and may cause the Rallybio Board or the Candid Board, as the case may be, to be less inclined to recommend a competing proposal. For more information regarding the potential termination fees, see the section titled "The Merger Agreement-Termination and Termination Fees."

Because the lack of a public market for the shares of Candid Capital Stock makes it difficult to evaluate the fairness of the Merger, the stockholders of Candid may receive consideration in the Merger that is less than the fair market value of the shares of Candid Capital Stock or Rallybio may pay more than the fair market value of the Candid Capital Stock.

The outstanding shares of Candid Capital Stock are privately held and is not traded in any public market. The lack of a public market makes it extremely difficult to determine the fair market value of the shares of Candid Capital Stock. Because the percentage of Rallybio equity to be issued to Candid stockholders was determined based on negotiations between the parties, it is possible that the value of the Rallybio Common Stock to be received by Candid stockholders will be less than the fair market value of the shares of Candid Capital Stock, or Rallybio may pay more than the aggregate fair market value for the shares of Candid Capital Stock.

The opinion delivered by Citizens to the Rallybio Board prior to the entry into the Merger Agreement does not reflect changes in circumstances that may occur after the date thereof.

The Rallybio Board has not obtained an updated opinion either as of the date of this proxy statement/prospectus or as of any other date subsequent to the date of the opinion of Citizens, Rallybio's financial advisor. Changes in circumstances, including without limitation the operations and prospects of Rallybio or Candid, stock prices, general market and economic conditions and other factors, some or all of which may be beyond the control of Rallybio and Candid, are not reflected in the opinion of Citizens. The opinion of Citizens does not speak as of any date other than the date thereof.

Rallybio or Candid may waive one or more of the conditions to the Merger without recirculation of this proxy statement/prospectus or resoliciting stockholder approval.

Conditions to Rallybio's or Candid's obligations to complete the Merger may be waived, in whole or in part, to the extent permitted by law, in certain circumstances unilaterally or by agreement of Rallybio and Candid. In the event of a waiver of a condition, the Rallybio Board will evaluate the materiality of any such waiver to determine whether amendment of this proxy statement/prospectus and re-solicitation of stockholder approval is necessary.

In the event that the Rallybio Board, in its own reasonable discretion, determines any such waiver is not significant enough to require recirculation of this proxy statement/prospectus and re-solicitation of its stockholders, it will have the discretion to complete the Merger without seeking further stockholder approval, which decision may have a material adverse effect on the Rallybio stockholders. For example, if Rallybio and Candid agree to waive the requirement that the shares of Rallybio Common Stock to be issued in the Merger have been approved for listing (subject to official notice of issuance) on Nasdaq as of the Closing, and their respective boards of directors elect to proceed with the Closing, Nasdaq may notify the combined company of its determination to delist the combined company's securities based upon the failure to satisfy the initial inclusion criteria in the Nasdaq application. The combined company may appeal the determination to a hearings panel but such appeal will not stay the suspension and delisting action and Nasdaq may notify the combined company that its common stock will be immediately suspended from trading and delisted.

In addition, in order to meet the initial listing requirements of Nasdaq or as otherwise determined in the discretion of the combined company board pursuant to the terms of the Lock-Up Agreements, the Rallybio Board or combined company board may release stockholders from their Lock-Up Agreements and waive the requirement that such Lock-Up Agreements be in full force and effect immediately following the Effective Time. Such release would increase the number of shares that may be sold in the public market immediately after the Merger and any such sales could cause the combined company's stock price to decline.

Transfers of the combined company's securities utilizing Rule 144 may be limited.

A significant portion of the combined company's securities will be restricted from immediate resale. Holders should be aware that transfers of Rallybio's securities pursuant to Rule 144 may be limited as Rule 144 is not available, subject to certain exceptions, for the resale of securities initially issued by shell companies (other than business combination related shell companies) or issuers that have previously been a shell company. Rallybio's winddown of its general and administrative operations that will not be needed after Closing and the proposed Merger (including the issuance of the Rallybio CVRs in connection therewith) will make Rallybio subject to the SEC requirements applicable to reporting shell company business combinations. Rallybio anticipates that following the consummation of the Merger, the combined company will no longer be a shell company. As a result, Rallybio anticipates that holders of restricted securities of the combined company, including affiliates of the combined company, will not be able to sell such securities pursuant to Rule 144 without registration until one year after the combined company files Form 10 information with the SEC. For more information, see the section titled "Securities Act Restrictions on Resale of Combined Company Common Stock."

Rallybio's winddown of its historical operations, the sale of assets, the suspension of development activities and the proposed Merger, resulting in the conversion of Candid into a public company, will make Rallybio subject to the SEC requirements applicable to reporting shell company business combinations. As a result, the combined company will be subject to more stringent reporting requirements, offering limitations and resale restrictions.

According to SEC guidance, the requirements applicable to reporting shell company business combinations apply to any company that sells or otherwise disposes of its historical assets or operations in connection with or as part of a plan to combine with a non-shell private company in order to convert the private company into a public one. Rallybio has taken steps to winddown its general and administrative operations that will not be needed after Closing and expects to issue the Rallybio CVRs in connection with the Closing and, as such, Rallybio's plan to merge with Candid, resulting in the conversion of Candid into a public company, will be subject to the SEC requirements applicable to reporting shell company business combinations, which are as follows:

- the combined company will need to file a Current Report on Form 8-K to report the Form 10 type information ("Super 8-K") after the Closing reflecting its status as an entity that is not a shell company;
- the combined company will not be eligible to use a Form S-3 until 12 full calendar months after the Closing;
- the combined company will need to wait at least 60 calendar days after the filing of the Super 8-K to file a Form S-8 for any equity plans or awards, such as the 2026 Plan and the 2026 ESPP;
- the combined company will be an "ineligible issuer" for three years following the Closing, which will prevent the combined company from (i) incorporating by reference in its Form S-1 filings, (ii) using a free writing prospectus or (iii) taking advantage of the well-known seasoned issuer ("WKSI") status, even if otherwise eligible based on its public float;
- investors who (i) were affiliates of Candid at the time the Merger was submitted for the vote or consent of Candid's stockholders, (ii) receive securities of the combined company in the Merger and (iii) publicly offer or sell such securities will be deemed to be engaged in a distribution of such securities, and therefore would be underwriters with respect to resales of those securities; and

- Rule 144(i)(2) will limit the ability of holders of restricted securities, and any affiliates of the public company to publicly resell Rule 145(c) securities per Rule 145(d), as well as any other “restricted” or “control” securities of the combined company per Rule 144, until one year after the Form 10 information is filed with the SEC. Non-affiliate Rallybio stockholders prior to the Merger will not be subject to such restrictions on public resales of their shares.

The foregoing SEC requirements will increase the combined company’s time and cost of raising capital, offering stock under equity plans, and complying with securities laws. Furthermore, such requirements will add burdensome restrictions on the resale of the combined company common stock by affiliates of Candid and any holders of “restricted” or “control” securities of the combined company.

For more information about the conditions to the completion of the Merger, see the section titled “The Merger Agreement—Conditions to the Completion of the Merger.”

Rallybio equityholders may not receive any payment on the Rallybio CVRs and the Rallybio CVRs may otherwise expire valueless.

The right of Rallybio equityholders to receive any future payment for or derive any value from the Rallybio CVRs will be contingent solely upon (i) Rallybio’s and Candid’s (or the combined company’s) ability to monetize all or any part of the Legacy Assets pursuant to one or more disposition agreements entered into within the time period specified in the Rallybio CVR Agreement, and the timing and amount of the consideration received thereunder and (ii) the receipt of cash proceeds from Recursion under the Membership Interest Purchase Agreement, dated July 8, 2025, by and among Recursion Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Exscientia Ventures I, Inc., Rallybio and Rallybio IPB, LLC (the “Membership Interest Purchase Agreement”). If Rallybio and/or Candid or the combined company (x) are not successful in entering into disposition agreements related to the Legacy Assets (as defined below) or receiving payments thereunder, or if such payments are not sufficient to result in the payment of any Rallybio CVR Payments as a result of permitted deductions thereto and (y) do not receive cash proceeds from Recursion pursuant to the Membership Interest Purchase Agreement, in each case within the time period specified in the Rallybio CVR Agreement, no payments will be made in respect of the Rallybio CVRs, and the Rallybio CVRs will expire valueless.

Following the effective time, the combined company will have sole authority over whether and how to monetize the Legacy Assets (if at all), and the combined company’s only obligations will be to carry out the obligations set forth in the Rallybio CVR Agreement.

Furthermore, the Rallybio CVRs will be unsecured obligations of the combined company and all payments under the Rallybio CVRs and all other obligations under the Rallybio CVR Agreement and the Rallybio CVRs and any rights or claims relating thereto will be subordinated in right of payment to the prior payment in full of all current or future senior obligations of the combined company.

The tax treatment of the CVRs is uncertain.

Rallybio intends to treat a holder’s receipt of the Rallybio CVRs as a distribution of property with respect to the holder’s existing shares of Rallybio Common Stock for U.S. federal income tax purposes, which could be taxable to Rallybio stockholders without the corresponding receipt of cash. However, the U.S. federal income tax treatment of the Rallybio CVRs is uncertain. There is no legal authority directly addressing the U.S. federal income tax treatment of the receipt of, and payments under, the Rallybio CVRs, and there can be no assurance that the Internal Revenue Service (“IRS”) would not assert, or that a court would not sustain, a position that could result in adverse U.S. federal income tax consequences to holders of the Rallybio CVRs. For more information regarding the U.S. federal income tax consequences of the CVRs, see the section titled “Agreements Related to the Merger—Rallybio Contingent Value Rights Agreement.”

Risks Related to Rallybio

Unless otherwise indicated or the context otherwise requires, references in this section to “Rallybio,” the “Company,” “we,” “us,” “our” and other similar terms refer to Rallybio and its subsidiaries.

Risks Related to Our Financial Position and Need for Additional Capital

We have incurred significant losses since our inception and anticipate that, if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we will continue to incur losses in the foreseeable future. We have not commercialized any products and have never generated revenue from the commercialization of any product. We are not currently profitable, and we may never achieve or sustain profitability.

We are a clinical-stage biotechnology company with a limited operating history. As a result, we are not profitable and we have incurred significant operating losses since inception, including net losses of $9.0 million and $57.8 million for the years ended December 31, 2025 and 2024, respectively. Our loss for the year ended December 31, 2025 included a $23.0 million gain in connection with the JV Sale (as defined below) in 2025. As of December 31, 2025, we had an accumulated deficit of $302.0 million. Investment in biopharmaceutical product development is highly speculative because it entails substantial upfront capital expenditures and significant risk that any potential product candidate will fail to gain regulatory approval and become commercially viable. Since inception, we have devoted substantially all of our resources to raising capital, conducting discovery and research activities, acquiring product candidates, establishing and protecting our intellectual property, preparing for and conducting clinical trials, and establishing arrangements with third parties for the manufacture of our product candidates. We do not have any product candidates approved for sale and have not generated any revenue from product sales.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we expect to incur significant additional operating losses in the foreseeable future as we advance our programs and operate our business. The costs of advancing product candidates through each clinical phase tend to increase substantially over the duration of the clinical development process. The total costs to advance a single product candidate to marketing approval in even a single jurisdiction are substantial. Because of the numerous risks and uncertainties associated with pharmaceutical product development, we are unable to accurately predict the timing or amount of increased expenses or when, or if, we will be able to generate revenue from the commercialization of any product candidates or achieve or maintain profitability. Our expenses will increase substantially if and as we:

- plan for and conduct any future clinical trials for any of our product candidates, including the ongoing RLYB116 confirmatory clinical PK/PD trial;
- seek regulatory approvals for RLYB116 and any other product candidates;
- advance our discovery and preclinical development activities for our product candidates;
- discover and develop additional product candidates;
- hire additional clinical, scientific, and commercial personnel;
- acquire or in-license other product candidates or technologies;
- maintain, expand, and protect our intellectual property portfolio;
- secure manufacturing sources and supply chain capacity sufficient to produce adequate clinical and commercial quantities of our product candidates; and
- establish a sales, marketing, and distribution infrastructure to commercialize our products, if approved.

We do not know when or whether we will become profitable. Our ability to generate revenue and become profitable depends upon our ability to successfully complete the development of our product candidates and to obtain the necessary regulatory approvals for their commercialization, which is subject to substantial additional risks and uncertainties, as described under “—Risks Related to Discovery, Development, Clinical Testing, Manufacturing, and Regulatory Approval.”

Each of our product candidates will require additional preclinical and/or clinical development, regulatory approval in multiple jurisdictions, the securing of clinical and commercial manufacturing supply, the building of a commercial organization, and substantial investment before we generate any revenue from product sales. As a result, if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we expect to continue to incur net losses and negative cash flows in the foreseeable future. These net losses and negative cash flows have had, and will continue to have, an adverse effect on our stockholders' equity and working capital. The amount of our future net losses will depend, in part, on the rate of future growth of our expenses and our ability to generate revenues. If we are unable to develop and commercialize one or more product candidates, either alone or through current or future collaborations, or if revenues from any product that receives marketing approval are insufficient, we will not achieve profitability. Even if we successfully commercialize RLYB116 or any of our other product candidates, we may continue to incur substantial research and development and other expenses to develop other current or future product candidates. Even if we do achieve profitability, we may not be able to sustain or increase profitability on a quarterly or annual basis or meet outside expectations for our profitability. Our failure to become and remain profitable would decrease the value of the Company and could impair our ability to raise capital, maintain our research and development efforts, expand our business, execute our business plan or continue our operations.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we will require significant additional capital to fund our operations. If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates and fail to obtain necessary financing, we may not be able to complete the development or commercialization of RLYB116 or any other product candidate. Given our limited resources and access to capital, we may decide to prioritize development of certain product candidates, the choice of which may prove to be wrong and adversely affect our business.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we expect to spend significant amounts of capital to complete the development of, and if approved, commercialize, one or more product candidates, including RLYB116. We are obligated to make certain payments under our agreements with Affibody, Sobi, and Kymab Limited ("Sanofi"), including milestone and royalty payments in connection with achievement of certain development and commercial milestones as well as the sale of resulting products under such agreements. We may also spend significant capital to develop laboratory tests to identify patients for inclusion in our clinical trials or who are likely to respond to our product candidates.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we believe that our existing cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities as of December 31, 2025, will be sufficient to fund our operating expenses and capital expenditure requirements for at least 12 months beyond the date of the filing of this proxy statement/prospectus. This estimate and our expectation to advance the preclinical and clinical development of RLYB116 and any other product candidates are based on assumptions that may prove to be wrong, or we may be subject to changing circumstances. We could exhaust our available capital resources sooner than we expect. Our business is subject to numerous risks and uncertainties, and we may be unable to accurately estimate the actual amount of funds we will require for development and commercialization of our product candidates. Our future capital requirements, both near and long-term, will depend on many factors, including, but not limited to:

- the initiation, progress, timing, costs and results of our clinical trials through all phases of development;
- the outcome, timing and cost of meeting regulatory requirements established by the FDA, EMA, and other comparable foreign regulatory authorities, including any regulatory designations allowing for priority review and any additional clinical trials required by the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities;
- the willingness of the FDA, EMA and other comparable foreign regulatory authorities to accept our clinical trial designs, as well as data from our completed and planned preclinical studies and clinical trials, as the basis for review and approval of RLYB116 and any other product candidates;
- the cost and timing of the manufacture and supply of non-clinical, clinical and commercial quantities of RLYB116 and our other product candidates;
- the identification, assessment, acquisition and/or development of additional research programs and additional product candidates;
- the cost of filing, prosecuting, and enforcing our patent claims and other intellectual property rights;
- the cost of defending potential intellectual property disputes, including patent infringement actions brought by third parties against us;
- the costs associated with potential clinical trial liability or product liability claims, including the costs associated with obtaining insurance against such claims and with defending against such claims;
- the effect of competing technological and market developments;
- the cost of making royalty, milestone or other payments under our current or any future in-license agreements;
- our ability to maintain our collaboration with AbCellera on favorable terms and establish new collaborations;

- the extent to which we in-license or acquire additional product candidates or technologies; and
- the costs of operating as a public company.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we will require significant additional capital, which we may raise through equity offerings, debt financings, marketing and distribution arrangements, strategic alliances and licensing arrangements or other sources. Depending on our business performance, the economic climate and market conditions, we may be unable to raise additional funds when needed on favorable terms, or at all. Furthermore, pursuant to Instruction I.B.6, a company with a public float of less than $75 million measured at certain time periods may not issue securities under Registration Statements on Form S-3 in excess of one-third of its public float in a 12-month period. For purposes of the prior sentence, "public float" means the aggregate market value of a company's shares held by non-affiliates. We are subject to the limitations of Instruction I.B.6 which may limit the amount of funds we can raise using Registration Statements on Form S-3. Moreover, uncertain geopolitical events, such as the war in Ukraine and conflict in Israel, and uncertain global economic conditions, including as a result of changes in tariffs and other trade restrictions, have impacted the global economy, and a severe or prolonged economic downturn could result in a variety of challenges for our business, including disruptions in the financial markets, which could adversely impact our ability to raise additional capital when needed or on favorable terms, if at all. If we do not succeed in raising additional funds on acceptable terms, we may need to significantly delay, scale back or discontinue the development of one or more of our product candidates or the commercialization of any product that may be approved for marketing, or we could be forced to discontinue operations. In addition, attempting to secure additional financing may divert the time and attention of our management from day-to-day activities and harm our product candidate development efforts.

Because we have limited financial resources, we have focused and may continue to focus on a limited set of research programs and product candidates and for a limited set of indications. We may forego or delay pursuit of opportunities with certain other product candidates or for other indications that could have greater commercial potential or a greater likelihood of success. Our capital allocation decisions may cause us to fail to realize value from, or advance, viable commercial products or profitable market opportunities.

Raising additional capital may cause dilution to our stockholders, restrict our operations or require us to relinquish rights to our intellectual property or product candidates.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, until such time, if ever, as we generate significant revenue from product sales, we expect to finance our operations through the sale of equity, debt financings, collaborations, strategic alliances and licensing arrangements or other sources. We do not currently have any committed external source of funds. In addition, we may seek additional capital due to favorable market conditions or strategic considerations, even if we believe that we have sufficient funds for our current or future operating plans.

To the extent that we raise additional capital through the future sale of equity or convertible debt securities, including sales of our common stock pursuant to the Sales Agreement with TD Securities (USA) LLC, each equityholder's ownership interest will be diluted, and the terms of these securities may include liquidation or other preferences that adversely affect their rights as a common stockholder. In addition, debt financing and preferred equity financing, if available, may involve agreements that include covenants limiting or restricting our ability to take specific actions, such as incurring additional debt, making capital expenditures or declaring dividends. If we raise additional funds through debt financing, we may be subject to covenants limiting or restricting our ability to take specific actions, such as incurring additional debt, making capital expenditures or declaring dividends, and we may need to dedicate a substantial additional portion of any operating cash flows to the payment of principal and interest on such indebtedness. Any future indebtedness, combined with our other financial obligations, could increase our vulnerability to adverse changes in general economic, industry and market conditions, limit our flexibility in planning for, or reacting to, changes in our business and the industry and impose a competitive disadvantage compared to our competitors that have less debt or better debt servicing options. If we raise additional funds through collaborations, strategic alliances or licensing arrangements with third parties, we may be required to relinquish valuable rights to our intellectual property, future revenue streams or product candidates or grant licenses on terms that may not be favorable to us. If we are unable to raise additional funds when needed, we may be required to delay, limit, reduce or terminate development or future commercialization efforts for one or more of our product candidates.

We have a limited operating history and no history of commercializing pharmaceutical products, which may make it difficult to evaluate the prospects for our future viability.

Rallybio was founded in January 2018 and our operations to date have been limited primarily to research and development activities, and raising capital. We have not yet demonstrated the ability to successfully complete a large-scale, pivotal clinical trial, obtain marketing approval, manufacture a commercial-scale product, or arrange for a third-party to do so on our behalf, or conduct sales and marketing activities necessary for successful commercialization. Consequently, predictions about our future success or viability may not be as accurate as they could be if we had a longer operating history or a history of successfully developing and commercializing pharmaceutical products.

As a business with a limited operating history, we may encounter unforeseen expenses, difficulties, complications, delays and other known and unknown challenges. If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we will eventually need to transition from a company with a research and development focus to a company capable of supporting commercial activities. We may not be successful in such a transition and, as a result, our business may be adversely affected.

Our quarterly and annual financial results may fluctuate, which makes our results difficult to predict and may cause our results to fall short of expectations.

Our financial condition and operating results have varied in the past and will continue to fluctuate from quarter-to-quarter and year-to-year in the future due to a variety of factors, many of which are beyond our control. Factors relating to our business that may contribute to these fluctuations include the following, as well as other factors described elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus:

- variations in the level of expense related to any ongoing development of our product candidates or research pipeline;
- delays or failures in advancement of any existing or future product candidates into the clinic or in clinical trials;
- the feasibility of developing, manufacturing and commercializing our product candidates;
- our relationships, and any associated exclusivity terms, with strategic collaborators;
- our execution of any additional collaboration, licensing or similar arrangements, and the timing of payments we may make or receive under existing or future arrangements, or the termination or modification of any such existing or future arrangements;
- if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, our operation in a net loss position in the foreseeable future;
- if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, our ability to consistently manufacture our product candidates, including in sufficient quantities for clinical or commercial purposes;
- our dependence on, and the need to attract and retain, key management and other personnel;
- strategic decisions by us or our competitors, such as acquisitions, divestitures, spin-offs, joint ventures, strategic investments or changes in business strategy;
- potential advantages that our competitors and potential competitors may have in developing and commercializing competing products, securing funding for or obtaining the rights to critical intellectual property;
- if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, regulatory developments affecting our product candidates or those of our competitors;
- If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, and any of our product candidates receives regulatory approval, the terms of such approval and market acceptance and demand for such product candidates;
- developments or disputes concerning patents or other proprietary rights, litigation matters and our ability to obtain and maintain patent protection for our product candidates;
- business interruptions such as power outages, strikes, civil unrest, wars, acts of terrorism or natural disasters; and
- our ability to use our net operating loss ("NOL") and income tax credit carryforwards to offset income tax.

Due to these and other factors, the results of any of our prior quarterly or annual periods should not be relied upon as indications of our future operating performance, and a period-to-period comparison of our results of operations may not be a meaningful indication of our future performance. In any particular quarter or quarters, our operating results could be below the expectations of securities analysts or investors, which could cause our stock price to decline.

Our ability to use our net operating loss and income tax credit carryforwards to offset future income tax liabilities may be subject to certain limitations.

We have incurred substantial NOLs during our history. To the extent that we continue to generate taxable losses, unused losses will carry forward and can be used to offset future taxable income, if any, until such unused losses expire, if at all. NOLs generated in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2017 are not subject to expiration. Federal NOLs generated in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2017 generally may not be carried back to prior taxable years. The deduction for NOLs arising in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2017 is generally limited to 80% of current year taxable income. We also have substantial federal and state research and development and other tax credit carryforwards. These tax credit carryforwards could expire unused and be unavailable to offset future income tax liabilities. In addition, in general, under Sections 382 and 383 of the Code, a corporation that undergoes an "ownership change" is subject to limitations on its ability to use its pre-change NOLs and tax credit carryforwards to offset future taxable income. Some of our historical NOLs may be subject to annual limitations on our ability to use them due to prior ownership changes. Additionally, the Merger may result in such an ownership change, and we may experience such ownership changes in the future as a result of future transactions in our stock, some of which may be outside our control. If we undergo an ownership change, our ability to use our NOLs and income tax credit carryforwards could be further limited. For these reasons, we may not be able to use a material portion of our NOLs or tax credit carryforwards, even if we attain profitability.

Risks Related to Discovery, Development, Clinical Testing, Manufacturing, Marketing Approval and Commercialization

We are heavily dependent on the success of RLYB116, which is in early-stage clinical development. If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, and are not able to develop, obtain marketing approval for, or successfully commercialize our product candidates, or if we experience significant delays in doing so, our business will be materially harmed.

Our lead program, RLYB116, is in early-stage clinical development and we do not currently have any products that generate revenues or any other sources of revenue. To date, we have invested a significant portion of our efforts and financial resources in the development of RLYB212 and RLYB116. If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, our future success is substantially dependent on our ability to successfully complete preclinical and clinical development for, obtain marketing approval for, and successfully commercialize, RLYB116 and our other product candidates, which may never occur. None of our product candidates are approved for commercial sale and we may never be able to develop a marketable product.

Before obtaining marketing approvals for the commercial sale of our product candidates, we must demonstrate the safety and efficacy of our product candidates for use in each target indication through lengthy, complex and expensive preclinical studies and clinical trials. Failure can occur at any time during the preclinical study and clinical trial processes. Because our product candidates are in an early stage of development, there is a high risk of failure, and we may never succeed in developing marketable products. If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, our ability to generate product revenue will depend heavily on the successful development and eventual commercialization of our product candidates, which may never occur. Ongoing and future preclinical studies and clinical trials of our product candidates may not show sufficient safety or efficacy or be of sufficient quality to obtain or maintain marketing approvals. For example, PK data from the Phase 2 clinical trial for RLYB212 demonstrated an inability of the RLYB212 dose regimen to achieve predicted target concentrations, as well as the minimum target concentration required for efficacy. There can be no assurance that any of our product candidates, even if approved, will prove to be commercially viable therapeutics.

RLYB116 is designed for SC self-administration. The formulation or physical properties of RLYB116 may ultimately be determined to be inadequate to support this route of administration. If SC administration is not feasible, then we may need to identify additional formulations or routes of administration, which could delay initiation of our future clinical trials or commercialization and result in significant additional costs. Further, alternative formulations and routes of administration may be required to differentiate our product candidates from competitors and/or secure access to support successful commercialization.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, the success of our product candidates will depend on several factors, including the following:

- successful and timely initiation of preclinical studies, and successful and timely initiation of, enrollment in, and completion of our clinical trials with results that support a finding of safety and effectiveness and an acceptable risk-benefit profile of our product candidates in the intended populations within the timeframes we have projected;
- regulatory grants of authorization to proceed under Investigational New Drug Applications ("INDs") or CTAs such that we can commence planned or future clinical trials of our product candidates;
- sufficiency of our financial and other resources to complete the necessary preclinical studies and clinical trials;
- our ability to successfully utilize certain delivery systems, such as pre-filled syringes ("PFSs"), pen-injectors and/or autoinjectors, for certain of our product candidates and to obtain marketing approval of any such drug/device combination product;
- the outcome, timing, and cost of meeting regulatory requirements, including any post-marketing commitments, established by the FDA, EMA and other comparable foreign regulatory authorities;
- establishing commercially viable arrangements with third-party manufacturers for clinical and commercial supply;
- obtaining and maintaining patent and trade secret protection and regulatory exclusivity for our product candidates;
- establishing sales, marketing and distribution capabilities, whether alone or through a collaboration, to support commercialization of our product candidates, if and when approved;
- acceptance of the product candidates, if and when approved, by patients, the medical community and third-party payors;
- effectively differentiating and competing with other therapies approved and/or used for the same indications as our product candidates, particularly RLYB116;
- obtaining and maintaining third-party coverage and reimbursement;
- enforcing and defending intellectual property rights and claims; and
- maintaining an acceptable safety profile of the product candidates following approval.

If we do not successfully address one or more of these factors in a timely manner or at all, we could experience significant delays or an inability to commercialize our product candidates, which would materially harm our business. Due to the uncertain and time-consuming clinical development and marketing approval process, we may not successfully develop any of our product candidates and may choose to discontinue the development of any of our product candidates prior to receiving marketing approval. If we discontinue development of a product candidate, we will not receive anticipated revenues from that product candidate and we may not receive any return on our investment in that product candidate. We may discontinue a product candidate for clinical reasons if it does not prove to be safe and effective for its targeted indications, or if such product candidates do not achieve the necessary efficacy at tolerated doses required for patient benefit. For example, we discontinued RLYB212 development based on PK data from the Phase 2 clinical trial that demonstrated an inability of the RLYB212 dose regimen to achieve predicted target concentrations, as well as the minimum target concentration required for efficacy. In addition, there may be important facts about the safety, efficacy and risk versus benefit of our product candidates that are not known to us at this time. Any unexpected safety events or our failure to generate sufficient data in our clinical trials to demonstrate efficacy may cause a product candidate to fail clinical development. Furthermore, even if that product candidate meets its safety and efficacy endpoints, we may discontinue its development for various reasons, such as changes in the competitive environment or the standard of care and the prioritization of our resources.

The U.S. Supreme Court's June 2024 decision in Loper Bright Enterprises v. Raimondo overturned the longstanding Chevron doctrine, under which courts were required to give deference to regulatory agencies' reasonable interpretations of ambiguous federal statutes. The Loper decision could result in additional legal challenges to regulations and guidance issued by federal agencies, including the FDA, on which we rely. Any such legal challenges, if successful, could have a material impact on our business. Additionally, the Loper decision may result in increased regulatory uncertainty, inconsistent judicial interpretations, and other impacts to the agency rulemaking process, any of which could adversely impact our business and operations. We cannot predict the likelihood, nature or extent of government regulation that may arise from future legislation or administrative action or as a result of legal challenges, either in the United States or abroad. If we are slow or unable to adapt to changes in existing requirements or the adoption of new requirements or policies, or if we are not able to maintain regulatory compliance, our business could be materially harmed.

Preclinical studies and clinical trials are expensive, time consuming and difficult to design and implement, and involve uncertain outcomes. If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we may incur additional costs or experience delays in completing, or ultimately be unable to complete, the development of our product candidates.

Before obtaining marketing approval from the FDA, EMA or other comparable regulatory authorities for the sale of our product candidates, we must complete preclinical studies and extensive clinical trials to demonstrate the safety and efficacy of our product candidates. To initiate clinical trials for any future product candidates, we must submit the results of preclinical studies to the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities, along with other information, including information about CMC and our proposed clinical trial protocol, as part of an IND or similar regulatory filing that must be accepted by the FDA, EMA or other applicable regulatory authorities before we may proceed with clinical development. In the event that regulators require us to complete additional preclinical studies or we are required to satisfy other regulator requests, such as obtaining alignment on the device regulatory pathway for our FNAIT prevention program, the start of our clinical trials may be delayed or prevented. Even after we receive and incorporate guidance from these regulatory authorities, the FDA, EMA or other regulatory authorities could (i) disagree that we have satisfied their requirements to commence our clinical trial, (ii) change their position on the acceptability of our data, trial design or the clinical endpoints selected, which may require us to complete additional preclinical studies or clinical trials or (iii) impose stricter requirements for approval than we currently expect.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we may experience events that could delay or prevent our ability to complete current clinical trials or initiate and complete new trials, any of which may impact our product development timelines, result in increased costs, affect our ability to obtain marketing approval according to our plans, and delay commercialization of our product candidates. These events include, but are not limited to:

- the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities requiring us to submit additional data or imposing other requirements before permitting us to commence a trial;
- delays in receiving or denial by regulatory agencies of permission to proceed with our planned clinical trials or any other clinical trials we may initiate, or placement of a clinical trial on hold;
- negative results from our non-clinical trials or clinical trials;
- challenges, delays and cost involved in identifying, recruiting and retaining suitable participants and clinical trial sites in sufficient numbers to participate in clinical trials;
- delays in reaching an agreement on acceptable terms with prospective CROs and clinical trial sites, the terms of which can be subject to extensive negotiation and may vary significantly among different CROs and trial sites;
- delays in obtaining an independent IRB approval at each site within the United States, or Independent Ethics Committee ("IEC") approval at sites outside the United States;
- delays or problems in analyzing data, or the need for additional analysis or data or the need to enroll additional patients;
- failure by us, our CROs, trial sites or investigators to adhere to clinical trial, regulatory, legal or contractual requirements and perform trials in accordance with the FDA's Good Clinical Practice ("GCP") requirements and trial protocol;

- inadequate quantity or quality of product candidate or other materials necessary to conduct clinical trials, for example as a result of delays in defining and implementing the manufacturing process for materials used in clinical trials or for the manufacture of larger quantities or other delays or issues arising in the manufacturing of sufficient supply of finished drug product;
- lack of adequate funding to continue a clinical trial, including as a result of unanticipated costs or increases in costs of clinical trials;
- occurrence of serious adverse events including unexpected serious adverse events, associated with the product candidate or reports from non-clinical or clinical testing of our own or competing therapies that raise safety or efficacy concerns, or delays or failures in addressing patient safety concerns that arise during the course of a trial;
- changes in regulatory requirements and guidance that require changes to planned or ongoing preclinical and clinical studies, or the conduct of additional studies; and
- difficulties recruiting and retaining employees, consultants or contractors with the required level of expertise.

In addition, we could encounter delays if a clinical trial is suspended or terminated by us, the IRBs or IECs of the institutions in which such trials are being conducted, the FDA, EMA or other regulatory authorities, or recommended for termination by a Data and Safety Monitoring Board ("DSMB") for such trial. Such authorities may impose a suspension or termination or recommend an alteration to clinical trials due to several factors, including failure to conduct the clinical trial in accordance with regulatory requirements or our clinical protocols, the identification of safety issues or adverse side effects, failure to demonstrate a benefit from using a drug, changes in governmental regulations or administrative actions.

Furthermore, we rely and will rely on CROs and clinical trial sites to ensure the proper and timely conduct of our clinical trials and, while we have agreements governing their committed activities, we have limited influence over their actual performance, as described in the section titled "Risks Related to Our Dependence on Third Parties."

Principal investigators for our clinical trials could serve as scientific advisors or consultants to us from time to time and receive compensation in connection with such services. Under certain circumstances, we may be required to report some of these relationships to the FDA. The FDA may conclude that a financial relationship between us and a principal investigator has created a conflict of interest or otherwise affected interpretation of a clinical trial. The FDA may therefore question the integrity of the data generated at the applicable clinical trial site, and the utility of the clinical trial itself may be jeopardized. This could result in a delay in approval, or rejection, of our marketing applications by the FDA and may ultimately lead to the denial of marketing approval of our product candidates.

Any delays in completing our clinical trials will increase our costs, slow down our product candidate development and approval process and jeopardize our ability to commence product sales and generate revenues. In addition, many of the factors that cause, or lead to, termination or suspension of, or a delay in the commencement or completion of, clinical trials may also ultimately lead to the denial of regulatory approval of our product candidates. Any delays to our clinical trials could shorten any period during which we may have the exclusive right to commercialize our product candidates and our competitors may be able to bring products to market before we do, and the commercial viability of our product candidates could be significantly reduced. Any of these occurrences may harm our business, financial condition and prospects significantly.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, results of preclinical studies, clinical trials or analyses that we may announce or publish from time to time, may not be indicative of results obtained in later trials, and any interim results we may publish could be different than final results.

The results of preclinical studies, clinical trials or analyses of the results from such trials, may not be predictive of the results of later clinical trials. Product candidates in later clinical trials may fail to show the desired safety and efficacy traits despite having progressed through preclinical studies and prior clinical trials or having shown promising results based on analyses of data from earlier trials. Late-stage clinical trials may include a larger number of patients and could differ in other significant ways from early-stage clinical trials, including changes to inclusion and exclusion criteria, patient population, efficacy endpoints, dosing regimen and statistical design. A number of companies in the biopharmaceutical industry have suffered significant setbacks in later-stage clinical trials due to lack of efficacy or adverse safety profiles, notwithstanding earlier promising results. In addition, conclusions based on promising data from analyses of clinical results, such as the prospective and post hoc analysis of results may be shown to be incorrect in subsequent clinical trials that have pre-specified end points or may not be considered adequate by regulatory authorities. We have completed Phase 1 clinical studies for RLYB116, however, even if we complete later clinical trials as planned, we cannot be certain that their results will support the safety and efficacy requirements sufficient to obtain regulatory approval, and, as a result, our clinical development plans may be materially harmed.

Similarly, interim, "top-line" and preliminary data from our clinical trials that we announce or publish may change as more patient data become available or as additional analyses are conducted. The data obtained in such clinical trials are subject to additional audit and verification procedures and following such procedures, such interim data could be materially different from the final data.

Enrollment and retention of patients in rare disease clinical trials is an expensive and time-consuming process and could be made more difficult or rendered impossible by multiple factors outside our control.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, identifying and qualifying patients to participate in clinical trials of our product candidates is critical to our success. We currently are conducting, and plan to conduct, clinical trials with our product candidates in rare disease indications, which can make completion of such trial more difficult. The timely completion of clinical trials in accordance with their protocols depends, among other things, on the speed at which we can recruit eligible patients to participate in testing our product candidates and our ability to enroll a sufficient number of patients who remain in the study until its conclusion. Clinical trial recruitment delays often result in increased costs, delays in advancing product development, delays in testing the effectiveness of technologies, delays in obtaining marketing approval or termination of clinical trials.

Patient enrollment and retention in clinical trials depends on many factors, including:

- the design of the clinical trial, including the patient eligibility criteria defined in the protocol;
- the size and nature of the patient population required for analysis of the trial's primary endpoints;
- the existing body of safety and efficacy data with respect to the product candidate;
- the proximity of patients to clinical sites;
- our ability to recruit clinical trial investigators with the appropriate competencies and experience;
- clinicians' and patients' perceptions as to the potential advantages of the product candidate being studied in relation to other available therapies, including any new drugs or medical devices that may be approved for the indications we are investigating;
- competing clinical trials being conducted by other companies or institutions, particularly for RLYB116;
- our ability to obtain and maintain patient consents;
- the risk that patients enrolled in clinical trials will drop out of the trials before completion; and
- other factors we may not be able to control that may limit patients, principal investigators or staff, or clinical site availability.

Additionally, we may have difficulty identifying and enrolling patients for any planned clinical trials because the conditions for which we plan to evaluate our current product candidates are rare diseases and we anticipate that there will be limited patient pools from which to draw for clinical trials. Further, because screening for many of these diseases is not widely adopted, and because it can be difficult to diagnose these diseases in the absence of screening, we may have difficulty finding patients who are eligible to participate in our studies or trials. Our clinical trials for RLYB116 may compete with other clinical trials for product candidates that are being tested for the same indications. This competition will reduce the number and types of patients available to us because some patients who might have opted to enroll in our trials may instead opt to enroll in a trial being conducted by one of our competitors. Furthermore, any negative results we may report in clinical trials of any of our product candidates may make it difficult or impossible to recruit and retain patients in other clinical trials of that same or a similar product candidate.

Outside of the United States, our ability to initiate, enroll and complete a clinical trial successfully is subject to numerous additional risks, including:

- difficulty in establishing or managing relationships with CROs and physicians;

- different standards for the conduct of clinical trials;
- our inability to locate qualified local consultants, physicians and partners; and
- the potential burden of complying with a variety of foreign laws, medical standards and regulatory requirements, including the regulation of pharmaceutical and biotechnology products and treatment.

We may not be able to initiate or continue clinical trials required by the FDA, EMA or other regulatory authorities if we cannot enroll a sufficient number of eligible patients to participate in the clinical trials. If we have difficulty enrolling a sufficient number of patients to conduct our clinical trials as planned, we may need to delay, limit or terminate ongoing or planned clinical trials. Delays or failures in planned patient enrollment or retention may result in increased costs or program delays, which could have a harmful effect on our ability to develop our product candidates or could render further development impossible.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, any product candidates that we develop or the administration thereof, may cause serious adverse events or undesirable side effects, which may halt their clinical development, delay or prevent marketing approval, or, if approved, require them to be taken off the market, include safety warnings, or otherwise limit their sales.

Adverse events or undesirable side effects caused by any product candidates we develop could cause us or regulatory authorities or IRBs, IECs or DSMBs, where applicable, to interrupt, delay, or halt clinical trials and, if we seek approval of any such product candidate, could result in a more restrictive label, imposition of a Risk Evaluation and Mitigation Strategy ("REMS") program by the FDA or the delay or denial of regulatory approval by the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities. Additionally, the administration process or related procedures associated with our product candidates also may cause adverse side effects. Even if we determine that serious adverse events are unrelated to study treatment, such occurrences could affect patient recruitment or the ability of enrolled patients to complete the trial. Results of any clinical trial we conduct could reveal a high and unacceptable severity and prevalence of side effects. For example, complement inhibitors have, by design, immunosuppressive effects and, in some cases, may be administered to patients with significantly compromised health. As a result, administration of RLYB116 could make patients more susceptible to infection. The chronic dosing of patients with RLYB116 could lead to an immune response that causes adverse reactions or impairs the activity and/or efficacy of RLYB116. Patients may develop an allergic reaction to the drug and/or develop antibodies directed at RLYB116, or may require immunization with a meningococcal vaccine and prophylactic antibiotics. An immune response that causes adverse reactions or impairs the activity of RLYB116 could cause a delay in or termination of our development plans.

Some potential therapeutics that initially showed therapeutic promise in early-stage trials have later been found to cause side effects that prevented their further development. In addition, side effects could affect patient recruitment or the ability of enrolled patients to complete a trial or result in potential clinical trial or product liability claims. Inadequate training or failures by clinical trial personnel in recognizing or managing the potential side effects of our product candidates could result in patient injury or death. Furthermore, clinical trials by their nature utilize a sample of the potential patient population. With a limited number of subjects and limited duration of exposure, rare and severe side effects of our product candidates or those of our competitors may only be uncovered when a significantly larger number of patients have been exposed to the drug.

If we or others later identify undesirable side effects caused by any product candidate that we develop after the product is approved, several negative consequences could result, which could materially harm our business, including:

- regulatory authorities may suspend or withdraw approvals of such product candidate;
- regulatory authorities may require additional warnings on the label, limit the approved use of such product candidate, or otherwise restrict distribution or marketing such as through requiring adoption of a REMS program;
- we may be required to conduct additional clinical trials;
- we could be sued and held liable for harm caused to patients; and
- our reputation may suffer.

We cannot predict whether our product candidates will cause toxicities in humans that would preclude or lead to the revocation of marketing approval based on preclinical studies or early-stage clinical trials. Even if the side effects do not preclude the drug from obtaining or maintaining marketing approval, undesirable side effects may inhibit market acceptance of the approved product due to its tolerability versus other therapies. Any of these events could prevent us from achieving or maintaining market acceptance of a product candidate, if approved, and could significantly harm our business, results of operations, and prospects.

The marketing approval processes of the FDA, EMA and comparable foreign regulatory authorities, including the MHRA, are lengthy, time-consuming and inherently unpredictable, and if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, and we are ultimately unable to obtain marketing approval for RLYB116 or any of our other product candidates, our business will be substantially harmed.

In the United States, we are not permitted to market a product candidate until we receive approval of a Biologics License Application ("BLA") or a New Drug Application ("NDA") from the FDA. The process of obtaining BLA and NDA approval is expensive, often takes many years and can vary substantially based upon the type, complexity and novelty of the products involved. Approval policies or regulations may change, and the FDA and other regulatory authorities have substantial discretion in the approval process, including the ability to delay, limit or deny approval of a product candidate for many reasons. In addition, the FDA may require post-approval clinical trials or studies as a condition of approval, which also may be costly. The FDA approval for a limited indication or approval with required warning language, such as a boxed warning, could significantly impact our ability to successfully market our product candidates. The FDA also may require adoption of a REMS requiring prescriber training, post-market registries, or otherwise restricting the marketing and dissemination of these products. Certain of our product candidates will rely on delivery systems, such as PFSS, pen-injectors and/or autoinjectors, and may ultimately be regulated as a drug/device combination product. Although the FDA and similar foreign regulatory agencies have systems in place for the review and approval of combination products, we may experience delays in the development and commercialization of our product candidates due to regulatory timing constraints and uncertainties in the product development and approval process. Despite the time and expense invested in the clinical development of product candidates, regulatory approval is never guaranteed for our product candidates. Assuming successful clinical development, we intend to seek product approvals in countries outside the United States, including in Europe. As a result, we would be subject to regulation by the EMA, as well as the other regulatory agencies in these countries.

Of the large number of drugs in development, only a small percentage successfully complete the marketing approval processes and are commercialized. This lengthy approval process, as well as the unpredictability of future clinical trial results, may result in our failing to obtain marketing approval to market our product candidates and we may be forced to abandon our development efforts for our product candidate, which would significantly harm our business, results of operations, and prospects.

The time required to obtain approval by the FDA, EMA and other comparable foreign regulatory authorities is unpredictable but typically takes many years following the commencement of clinical trials and depends upon numerous factors. In addition, approval policies, regulations, or the type and amount of clinical data necessary to gain approval may change during a product candidate's clinical development and may vary among jurisdictions. We have not obtained marketing approval for any product candidate and it is possible that we will never obtain marketing approval for any product candidate.

Prior to obtaining approval to commercialize a product candidate in the United States or abroad, we must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authority, that such product candidates are safe and effective for their intended uses. Data obtained from preclinical studies and clinical trials are susceptible to varying interpretations, and regulatory authorities may not interpret our data as favorably as we do, which may further delay, limit, or prevent development efforts, clinical trials, or marketing approval. Even if we believe the preclinical or clinical data for our product candidates are sufficient to support approval, such data may not be considered sufficient to support approval by the FDA, EMA and other comparable regulatory authorities.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authority can delay, limit, or deny approval of RLYB116 or any of our other product candidates that we develop or require us to conduct additional preclinical or clinical testing or abandon a program for many reasons, including, but not limited to:

- the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities may disagree with the design or implementation of our clinical trials;
- we may be unable to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities that our product candidate is safe and effective for its proposed indication;
- serious and unexpected drug-related side effects experienced by participants in our clinical trials or by individuals using drugs similar to our product candidates, or other products containing an active ingredient in our product candidates;
- negative or ambiguous results from our clinical trials or results that may not meet the level of statistical significance required by the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities for approval;
- the population studied in the clinical trial may not be sufficiently broad or representative to assure safety and efficacy in the full population for which we seek approval;
- the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities may not accept clinical data from trials which are conducted at clinical facilities or in countries where the standard of care is potentially different from that of the United States or the applicable foreign jurisdiction;
- we may be unable to demonstrate that our product candidate's clinical and other benefits outweigh its safety risks;
- the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities may disagree with our interpretation of data from preclinical studies or clinical trials;
- the data collected from clinical trials of our product candidates may not be acceptable or sufficient to support the submission of a BLA or NDA or to obtain regulatory approval in the United States or elsewhere, and we may be required to conduct additional clinical trials;
- the FDA's or the applicable foreign regulatory authority's disagreement regarding the formulation, the labeling, and/or the specifications of our product candidates;
- additional time may be required to obtain regulatory approval for our product candidates because they are combination products;
- the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities may fail to approve or find deficiencies with the manufacturing processes or facilities of third-party manufacturers with which we contract for clinical and commercial supplies; and
- the policies, regulations, and guidelines of the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities regarding the development, approval, and marketing of drugs and biologics may significantly change, including but not limited to, in the U.S., as a result of the 2025 change in presidential administration, which may render our clinical data insufficient for approval or restrict us from marketing our product candidates in the manner in which we anticipate.

We have never obtained marketing approval for a product candidate. If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, any delay in obtaining, or an inability to obtain, marketing approvals would prevent us from commercializing our product candidates, generating revenues, and achieving and sustaining profitability.

Our product candidates target rare diseases and conditions, and if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, the market opportunities for RLYB116 or any of our other product candidates, if approved, may be smaller than we anticipate. We must be able to successfully identify patients and capture a significant market share to achieve profitability and growth.

Our product candidates target rare diseases and conditions. With respect to RLYB116, we estimate that there are approximately 8,000 patients with immune PTR and up to 10,000 patients with refractory APS in the United States. Our projections of the number of eligible patients are based on our beliefs and estimates. These estimates have been derived from a variety of sources, including scientific literature, population statistics and market research, and may prove to be incorrect. Further, new sources may reveal a change in the estimated number of eligible patients, and the number of patients may turn out to be lower than expected. Additionally, the potentially addressable patient population for our current programs or future product candidates may be limited or may not be amenable to treatment with our product candidates, and new patients may become increasingly difficult to identify or gain access to. For example, even if we obtain FDA approval for RLYB116, the drug may be approved for a target population that is more limited than what we currently anticipate. Furthermore, even if we obtain significant market share for any product candidate, if approved, the potential target populations for our product candidates are for rare diseases, and we may never achieve profitability.

Further, in many cases there are either limited screening or diagnostic tests for the indications our product candidates are being developed to potentially treat. The lack of screening and diagnostic tests, coupled with the fact that there is frequently limited awareness among certain health care providers concerning the rare diseases we may seek to treat, often means that a proper diagnosis can, and frequently does, take years to identify (or an appropriate diagnosis may never be made for certain patients). As a result, even if one of our product candidates is approved for commercial sale, we may not be able to grow our revenues due to difficulty in identifying eligible patients. There can be no guarantee that any of our programs will be effective at identifying patients that will benefit from our product candidates, and even if we can identify patients that our product candidates can help, the number of patients that our product candidates may ultimately treat may turn out to be lower than we expect, they may not be otherwise amenable to treatment with our product candidates, or new patients may become increasingly difficult to identify, all of which may adversely affect our ability to grow and generate revenue and adversely affect our results of operations and our business. In addition, even in instances where we are able to expand the number of patients being treated, the number may be offset by the number of patients that discontinue use of the applicable product in a given period resulting in a net loss of patients and potentially decreased revenue.

We face significant competition from biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies, and if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, our operating results will suffer if we fail to compete effectively.

The biotechnology and pharmaceutical industries are highly competitive and subject to significant and rapid technological change. Our success is highly dependent on our ability to acquire, develop, and obtain marketing approval for new products on a cost-effective basis and to market them successfully. If a product candidate we develop is approved, we will face intense competition. There are many public and private biopharmaceutical companies, universities, government agencies and other research organizations actively engaged in the research and development of products that may be like our product candidates or address similar markets. Mergers and acquisitions in the pharmaceutical, biotechnology and diagnostic industries may result in even more resources being concentrated among a smaller number of our competitors. These competitors also compete with us in establishing clinical trial sites and patient registration for clinical trials, as well as in acquiring technologies complementary to, or necessary for, our programs. Smaller or early-stage companies may also prove to be significant competitors, particularly through collaborative arrangements with large and established companies. In addition, the number of companies seeking to develop and commercialize products and therapies competing with our product candidates is likely to increase. However, we seek to build our portfolio with key differentiating attributes to provide a competitive advantage in the markets we target. If we successfully develop and, if approved, commercialize RLYB116, this therapy may compete with anticoagulants such as Warfarin, or potentially be used in conjunction, with currently marketed treatments and any new therapies that may become available in the future.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, competition could render any product candidate we develop obsolete, less competitive, or uneconomical. In addition, product candidates developed by our competitors may prove to be more safe or more effective than our product candidates. Our competitors may, among other things:

- have significantly greater name recognition and financial, manufacturing, marketing, product development, technical, commercial infrastructure, and human resources than we do;
- more effectively recruit and retain qualified scientific and management personnel;
- more effectively establish clinical trial sites and patient registration;
- develop and commercialize products that are safer, more effective, less expensive, more convenient, or easier to administer, or have fewer or less severe side effects;
- obtain quicker regulatory approval;
- better protect their patents and intellectual property or acquire technologies that are complementary to, or necessary for, our programs;

- implement more effective approaches to sales, marketing, pricing, coverage, market access, and reimbursement; or
- form more advantageous strategic alliances or collaborations.

If we are not able to effectively compete for any of the foregoing reasons, our business will be materially harmed.

Disruptions in the FDA and other government agencies caused by funding shortages or global health concerns could hinder their ability to hire and retain key leadership and other personnel, or otherwise prevent new products and services from being developed or commercialized in a timely manner, which, if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, could negatively impact our business.

The ability of the FDA to review and approve new products can be affected by a variety of factors, including government budget and funding levels, ability to hire and retain key personnel and accept the payment of user fees, and statutory, regulatory, and policy changes and other events that may otherwise affect the FDA's ability to perform routine functions. Average review times at the agency have fluctuated in recent years as a result. In addition, government funding of other government agencies that fund research and development activities is subject to the political process, which is inherently fluid and unpredictable.

Disruptions at the FDA and other agencies may also slow the time necessary for new drugs to be reviewed or approved by necessary government agencies, which would adversely affect our business. For example, in recent years, including for 43 days beginning on October 1, 2025 and for 35 days beginning on December 22, 2018, the U.S. government has shut down several times and certain regulatory agencies, such as the FDA, have had to furlough critical employees and stop critical activities. The Trump Administration has reduced the number of employees serving in government agencies, including the FDA. If a prolonged government shutdown occurs, or if the U.S. government takes other personnel actions, it could significantly impact the ability of the FDA to timely review and process our regulatory submissions, which could have a material adverse effect on our business.

Even if we obtain marketing approval for a product candidate in the United States, we or our current or future collaborators may never obtain approval for or commercialize the product candidate in any other jurisdiction, which would limit our ability to realize its full market potential.

In order to market any product in a particular jurisdiction, we or our current or future collaborators must establish and comply with numerous and varying regulatory requirements regarding safety and efficacy on a country-by-country basis. Approval by the FDA in the United States does not ensure approval by comparable regulatory authorities in other countries or jurisdictions. However, the failure to obtain approval in one jurisdiction may negatively impact our or our collaborators' ability to obtain approval elsewhere. In addition, clinical trials conducted in one country may not be accepted by regulatory authorities in other countries, and regulatory approval in one country does not guarantee regulatory approval in any other country.

Approval processes vary among countries and can involve additional product testing and validation and additional administrative review periods. Seeking foreign regulatory approval could result in difficulties and increased costs for us and require additional preclinical studies or clinical trials which could be costly and time-consuming. Regulatory requirements can vary widely from country to country and could delay or prevent the introduction of our products in those countries. We do not have any product candidates approved for sale in any jurisdiction, including in international markets, and we do not have experience in obtaining regulatory approval in international markets. If we or our collaborators fail to comply with regulatory requirements in international markets or to obtain and maintain required approvals, or if regulatory approvals in international markets are delayed, our target market will be reduced and we will be unable to realize the full market potential of any product we develop.

Even if we obtain marketing approval for any of our product candidates, we will still face extensive and ongoing regulatory requirements and obligations and continued regulatory review, which may result in significant additional expense. We may be subject to penalties if we fail to comply with regulatory requirements or experience unanticipated problems with any product candidates.

Any product candidate for which we obtain marketing approval will be subject to extensive and ongoing requirements of the FDA and other regulatory authorities. These requirements include submissions of safety and other post-marketing information and reports, establishment registration and drug listing requirements, continued compliance with the FDA's current cGMP requirements regarding the distribution of samples to physicians and recordkeeping and Good Laboratory Practice ("GLP") and GCP requirements for non-clinical studies and any clinical trials that we conduct post-approval.

The FDA may also require costly post-marketing studies or clinical trials and surveillance to monitor the safety or efficacy of a product. Additionally, the FDA closely regulates the post-approval marketing and promotion of drugs to ensure drugs are marketed only for the approved indications and in a manner that is consistent with the provisions of the approved labeling. If we market our products for uses beyond their approved indications or otherwise inconsistent with the FDA-approved labeling, we may be subject to enforcement action for off-label marketing by the FDA and other federal and state enforcement agencies, including the DOJ. Violation of the FDCA and other statutes, including the False Claims Act, and equivalent legislation in other countries relating to the promotion and advertising of prescription products may also lead to investigations or allegations of violations of federal and state and other countries' health care fraud and abuse laws and state consumer protection laws. Even if it is later determined we were not in violation of these laws, we may be faced with negative publicity, incur significant expenses defending our actions and have to divert significant management resources from other matters.

In addition, later discovery of previously unknown adverse events or other problems with our products, manufacturers, or manufacturing processes or failure to comply with regulatory requirements, may yield various results, including, but not limited to:

- restrictions on manufacturing such products;
- restrictions in the labeling or on the marketing of products;
- restrictions on product distribution or use;
- requirements to conduct post-marketing studies or additional post-marketing clinical trials;
- issuance of warning letters or untitled letters;
- refusal to approve pending applications or supplements to approved applications that we submit, or delays in such approvals;
- recalls or market withdrawals of products;
- fines, restitution, or disgorgement of profits or revenues;
- suspension or termination of ongoing clinical trials;
- suspension or withdrawal of marketing approvals;
- refusal to permit the import or export of our products;
- product seizure; and
- injunctions, consent decrees, or the imposition of civil or criminal penalties.

If we obtain FDA approval for RLYB116, safety risks not identified in our prior clinical trials may first appear after we obtain approval and commercialize RLYB116. Any new post-marketing adverse events may significantly impact our ability to market the drugs and may require that we recall and discontinue commercialization of RLYB116. Furthermore, if any confirmatory post-marketing trial fails to confirm the clinical profile or clinical benefits of RLYB116, the FDA may withdraw its approval, which would materially harm our business.

We also cannot predict the likelihood, nature, or extent of government regulation that may arise from future legislation or administrative or executive action, either in the United States or abroad. Further, the FDA's, EMA's and other comparable regulatory authorities' policies may change, and additional government regulations may be enacted that could prevent, limit, or delay regulatory approval of a product candidate or increase the costs and regulatory burden of commercialization. If we are slow or unable to adapt to changes in existing requirements or the adoption of new requirements or policies, or if we are not able to maintain regulatory compliance, we may lose any marketing approval that we may have obtained, and we may not achieve or sustain profitability, which would adversely affect our business, prospects, financial condition, and results of operations. Furthermore, non-compliance by us or any collaborator with regulatory requirements, including safety monitoring or pharmacovigilance, may also result in significant financial penalties, which would adversely affect our business.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we may seek Fast Track designation, Breakthrough Therapy designation, or Priority Medicines (“PRIME”) program designation for our product candidates, but we might not receive any such designation, and even if we do, such designation may not actually lead to a faster development or regulatory review or approval process.

If a drug is intended for the treatment of a serious or life-threatening condition, and non-clinical or clinical data demonstrate the potential to address an unmet medical need for this condition, the product candidate may qualify for FDA Fast Track designation, for which sponsors must apply. Sponsors of fast-track products may have more frequent interactions with the FDA, and, in some circumstances, the FDA may initiate review of sections of a fast track product's application before the application is complete. We may submit an application for Fast Track designation for RLYB116. The FDA has broad discretion whether to grant this designation, and we may not receive it. Moreover, even if we receive Fast Track designation, Fast Track designation does not ensure that we will receive marketing approval and we may not experience a faster development or regulatory review or approval process with Fast Track designation compared to conventional FDA procedures. In addition, the FDA may withdraw Fast Track designation if it believes that the designation is no longer supported by data from our clinical development program. Fast Track designation alone does not guarantee qualification for the FDA's priority review procedures.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we also may seek a Breakthrough Therapy designation for some of our product candidates if future results support such designation. A Breakthrough Therapy is defined as a drug (including biologic) that is intended, alone or in combination with one or more other drugs, to treat a serious condition, and preliminary clinical evidence indicates that the drug may demonstrate substantial improvement over existing therapies on one or more clinically significant endpoints, such as substantial treatment effects observed early in clinical development. Sponsors of products that have been designated as breakthrough therapies are eligible to receive more intensive FDA guidance on establishing an efficient drug development program, an organization commitment involving senior managers, and may be eligible for rolling review. Drugs designated as breakthrough therapies by the FDA may also be eligible for other expedited review programs, including accelerated approval and priority review, if supported by clinical data at the time the BLA or NDA is submitted to the FDA.

Designation as a Breakthrough Therapy is within the discretion of the FDA. Accordingly, even if we believe that a product candidate meets the criteria for designation as a Breakthrough Therapy, the FDA may disagree and instead determine not to make such designation. Even if we receive Breakthrough Therapy designation, the receipt of such designation may not result in a faster development or regulatory review or approval process compared to drugs considered for approval under conventional FDA procedures and does not assure ultimate approval by the FDA. In addition, even if a product candidate qualifies as a Breakthrough Therapy, the FDA may later decide that such product candidate no longer meets the conditions for qualification or decide that the time period for FDA review or approval will not be shortened.

In the European Union (“EU”) we may seek PRIME designation for some of our product candidates in the future. PRIME is a voluntary program aimed at enhancing the EMA's role to reinforce scientific and regulatory support in order to optimize development and enable accelerated assessment of new medicines that are of major public health interest with the potential to address unmet medical needs. The program focuses on medicines that target conditions for which there exists no satisfactory method of treatment in the EU or even if such a method exists, it may offer a major therapeutic advantage over existing treatments. PRIME is limited to medicines under development and not authorized in the EU and the applicant intends to apply for an initial MA application through the centralized procedure. To be accepted for PRIME, a product candidate must meet the eligibility criteria in respect of its major public health interest and therapeutic innovation based on information that can substantiate the claims. The benefits of a PRIME designation include the appointment of a Committee for Medicinal Products for Human Use (“CHMP”) rapporteur to provide continued support and help to build knowledge ahead of a MA application, early dialogue and scientific advice at key development milestones, and the potential to qualify products for accelerated review, meaning reduction in the review time for an opinion on approvability to be issued earlier in the application process. PRIME enables an applicant to request parallel EMA scientific advice and Health Technology Assessment (“HTA”) advice to facilitate timely market access. Even if we receive PRIME designation for any of our product candidates, the designation may not result in a materially faster development process, review or approval compared to conventional EMA procedures. Further, obtaining PRIME designation does not assure or increase the likelihood of EMA's grant of a marketing authorization.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we may be unsuccessful in obtaining or may be unable to maintain the benefits associated with orphan drug designation, including the potential for market exclusivity. If our competitors are able to obtain orphan drug exclusivity for products that constitute the same drug and treat the same indications as RLYB116 or any of our other product candidates, we may not be able to have competing products approved by the applicable regulatory authority for a significant period of time.

Regulatory authorities in some jurisdictions, including the United States and the EU may designate drugs for relatively small patient populations as orphan drugs. Under the U.S. Orphan Drug Act, the FDA may designate a drug as an orphan drug if it is a drug intended to treat a rare disease or condition, which is generally defined as a patient population of fewer than 200,000 individuals annually in the United States, or a patient population of more than 200,000 in the United States where there is no reasonable expectation that the cost of developing the drug will be recovered from sales in the United States. In the EU, the EMA's Committee for Orphan Medicinal Products evaluates, and the EC grants, an orphan drug designation principally to promote the development of products that are intended for the diagnosis, prevention or treatment of a life-threatening or chronically debilitating condition affecting not more than five in 10,000 persons in the EU. In addition, the product under consideration is indicated for a condition where there exists no satisfactory method of diagnosis, prevention or treatment authorized in the EU or, if such method exists, that the medicinal product will be of significant benefit to those affected by that condition. We may seek orphan drug designation in the United States and the EU for certain of our product candidates but may be unsuccessful in doing so. There can be no assurance that the FDA or the EMA's Committee for Orphan Medicinal Products will consider orphan designation for any indication for which we apply or re-apply, or that we will be able to maintain such designation. In the United States, orphan drug designation entitles a party to financial incentives such as opportunities for grant funding towards clinical trial costs, tax advantages and user-fee waivers. Orphan drug designation neither shortens the development time or regulatory review time of a drug nor gives the drug any advantage in the regulatory review or approval process.

If a product candidate with an orphan drug designation subsequently receives the first marketing approval for the indication for which it has such designation, the product is entitled to a period of marketing exclusivity, which precludes the EMA or the FDA from approving another marketing application for the same drug or biologic for the same orphan designation for that time period, except in limited circumstances, such as a showing of clinical superiority to the product with orphan drug exclusivity or where the manufacturer is unable to assure sufficient product quantity. In the United States, the exclusivity period is seven years. The applicable exclusivity period is ten years in Europe, but such exclusivity period can be reduced to six years in Europe if a product no longer meets the criteria for orphan designation or if the product is sufficiently profitable so that market exclusivity is no longer justified. Moreover, orphan drug exclusive marketing rights in the United States may be lost if the FDA later determines that the request for designation was materially defective or if the manufacturer is unable to assure sufficient quantity of the drug to meet the needs of patients with the rare disease or condition. Similarly, in the EU, the market exclusivity can be broken if the holder of the MA for the original orphan medicinal product is unable to supply sufficient quantities of the medicinal product. In addition, in both the United States and EU, if a different drug is subsequently approved for marketing for the same or a similar indication as any of our product candidates that receive marketing approval, we may face increased competition and lose market share regardless of orphan drug exclusivity, which only protects against approval of the "same" drug for the same indication.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we may seek accelerated approval by the FDA for one or more of our product candidates. Accelerated approval by the FDA, even if granted for any of our product candidates, may not lead to a faster development or regulatory review or approval process and it does not increase the likelihood that our product candidates will receive marketing approval.

We may in the future seek an accelerated approval for our one or more of our product candidates. Under the accelerated approval program, the FDA may grant accelerated approval to a product candidate designed to treat a serious or life-threatening condition that provides meaningful therapeutic benefit over available therapies upon a determination that the product candidate has an effect on a surrogate endpoint or intermediate clinical endpoint that is reasonably likely to predict clinical benefit. As a condition of approval, the FDA requires that a sponsor of a product receiving accelerated approval perform a post-marketing confirmatory clinical trial or trials. In addition, the FDA currently requires as a condition for accelerated approval the pre-submission of promotional materials to FDA for review.

Prior to seeking accelerated approval for any of our product candidates, we intend to seek feedback from the FDA and will otherwise evaluate our ability to seek and receive accelerated approval. There can be no assurance that after our evaluation of the feedback and other factors we will decide to pursue or submit a BLA for accelerated approval or any other form of expedited development, review or approval. Furthermore, if we decide to submit an application for accelerated approval there can be no assurance that such submission or application will be accepted or that the FDA will determine that the product candidate is eligible for or grant accelerated approval. A failure to obtain any planned accelerated approval for our product candidates would result in a longer time period to commercialization of our product candidates, if approved, could increase the cost of development of our product candidates and could harm our competitive position in the marketplace. If we receive accelerated approval for any of our product candidates, the FDA may withdraw accelerated approval if, among other things, a confirmatory trial required to verify the predicted clinical benefit of the product fails to verify such benefit or if such trial is not conducted with due diligence. Withdrawal of any accelerated approval could substantially harm our business.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, the successful commercialization of any product candidate we develop will depend in part on the extent to which regulatory authorities and private health insurers establish coverage and reimbursement. Failure to obtain or maintain coverage and reimbursement for our product candidates, if approved, could limit our ability to market those products and decrease our or our ability to generate revenue.

If any product candidate is approved for marketing, coverage and reimbursement for such product by governmental healthcare programs, such as Medicare and Medicaid, private health insurers, and other third-party payors would be essential for most patients to be able to afford the prescription medication. Our ability to achieve acceptable levels of coverage and reimbursement for products or procedures using our products will therefore have an effect on our ability to successfully commercialize any product candidates we develop. We cannot be sure that coverage and reimbursement will be available for our product candidates, if and when such candidates obtain marketing approval, and any reimbursement that may become available may not be adequate and may be decreased or eliminated in the future.

Moreover, increasing efforts by governmental and third-party payors in the United States to cap or reduce healthcare costs may cause third-party payors to limit both coverage and the level of reimbursement for newly approved products and, as a result, such payors may not cover or provide adequate payment for any product we commercialize. We expect to experience pricing pressures in connection with the sale of our product candidates due to the trend toward managed health care and additional legislative, administrative, or regulatory changes. The downward pressure on healthcare costs in general, particularly prescription drugs and biologics and related administration procedures, has become intense and new products face increasing challenges in entering the market successfully. Third-party payors are increasingly challenging the price and examining the cost-effectiveness of new products in addition to their safety and efficacy. To obtain or maintain coverage and reimbursement for any product, we may need to conduct expensive pharmacoeconomic studies to demonstrate the medical necessity and cost-effectiveness of our product.

We may also need to provide discounts to purchasers to encourage purchasing of any approved product and rebates to third party payors to increase the possibility of favorable coverage and adequate cost sharing thresholds for patients. We may be required to provide discounts or rebates on any approved product under government healthcare programs or to certain government and private purchasers in order to obtain coverage under federal health care programs such as Medicaid. Participation in such programs would require us to track and report certain drug prices. We may be subject to fines and other penalties if we fail to report such prices accurately.

No uniform policy for coverage and reimbursement for products exists among third-party payors in the United States. Therefore, coverage and reimbursement for products can differ significantly from payor to payor, and one third-party payor's decision to cover a particular product does not ensure that other payors will also provide similar coverage. Additionally, the process for determining whether a third-party payor will provide coverage for a product is typically separate from the process for setting the price of such product or establishing the reimbursement rate that the payor will pay for the product once coverage is approved. As a result, the coverage determination process is often a time-consuming and costly process that will require us to provide scientific and clinical support for the use of our product candidates to each payor separately, with no assurance that coverage and reimbursement will be obtained or will be consistent across payors. And, even if products are covered, third party payors may implement various mechanisms to control utilization (e.g., requiring prior approval for coverage for each patient). Additionally, coverage and reimbursement for screening and diagnostic tests associated with any products would be assessed and determined separately. Furthermore, rules and regulations regarding reimbursement change frequently, in some cases at short notice, and we believe that changes in these rules and regulations are likely. If coverage or reimbursement is not available or is available only at limited levels, we may not be able to successfully commercialize our product candidates and may not be able to obtain a satisfactory financial return on our product candidates.

We may also be subject to extensive governmental price controls and other market regulations outside of the United States, and we believe the increasing emphasis on cost-containment initiatives in other countries have and will continue to put pressure on the pricing and usage of medical products. In many countries, the prices of medical products are subject to varying price control mechanisms as part of national health systems. Other countries allow companies to fix their own prices for medical products but monitor and control company profits. Additional foreign price controls or other changes in pricing regulation could restrict the amount that we are able to charge for our products. Accordingly, in markets outside of the United States, the reimbursement for products we commercialize may be reduced compared with the United States and may be insufficient to generate commercially reasonable revenue and profits.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, even if a product candidate we develop receives marketing approval, it may fail to achieve market acceptance by physicians, patients, third-party payors or others in the medical community necessary for commercial success.

Even if our product candidates receive regulatory approval, they may not gain market acceptance among physicians, patients, healthcare payors and the medical community. Various factors will influence whether our product candidates are accepted in the market if approved for commercial sale, including, but not limited to:

- the efficacy, safety and tolerability of our products, and potential advantages compared to alternative treatments;
- the clinical indications for which the product is approved, and product labeling or product insert requirements of the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities, including any limitations or warnings contained in a product's approved labeling;
- the effectiveness of sales and marketing efforts;
- the prevalence and severity of any side effects;
- the cost of treatment in relation to alternative treatments, including any similar treatments;
- our ability to offer our products for sale at competitive prices;
- the availability and access to screening and/or diagnostic tests;
- the convenience and ease of administration compared to alternative treatments;
- the willingness of the target patient population to try new therapies and of physicians to prescribe these therapies;
- the strength of marketing and distribution support;
- the availability of third-party coverage and reimbursement for any of our products that are approved and any screening and/or diagnostic testing, as appropriate; and
- any restrictions on the use of our product together with other medications.

Market acceptance of our product candidates is heavily dependent on patients' and physicians' perceptions that our product candidates are safe and effective treatments for their targeted indications and willingness to use screening and/or diagnostic tests to identify at-risk target populations for our therapeutics. The perceptions of any product are also influenced by perceptions of competitors' products that are in the same class or that have a similar mechanism of action. Because we expect sales of our product candidates, if approved, to generate substantially all our revenues in the foreseeable future, the failure of our product candidates to find market acceptance would harm our business and could require us to seek additional financing.

If approved, our product candidates that are regulated as biologics may face competition from biosimilars approved through an abbreviated regulatory pathway.

The Biologics Price Competition and Innovation Act of 2009 ("BPCIA") was enacted as part of the Affordable Care Act ("ACA") to establish an abbreviated pathway for the approval of biosimilar and interchangeable biological products. The regulatory pathway establishes legal authority for the FDA to review and approve biosimilar biologics, including the possible designation of a biosimilar as “interchangeable” based on its similarity to an approved biologic. Under the BPCIA, a reference biological product is granted 12 years of data exclusivity from the time of first licensure of the product, and the FDA will not accept an application for a biosimilar or interchangeable product based on the reference biological product until four years after the date of first licensure of the reference product. In addition, the approval of a biosimilar product may not be made effective by the FDA until 12 years from the date on which the reference product was first licensed. During this 12-year period of exclusivity, another company may still develop and receive approval of a competing biologic, so long as their BLA does not rely on the reference product, sponsor’s data or submit the application as a biosimilar application. Any new policies or processes adopted by the FDA could have a material adverse effect on the future commercial prospects for our biological products.

We believe that any of the product candidates we develop that is approved in the United States as a biological product under a BLA should qualify for the 12-year period of exclusivity. However, there is a risk that this exclusivity could be shortened due to congressional action or otherwise, or that the FDA will not consider the subject product candidates to be reference products for competing products, potentially creating the opportunity for biosimilar competition sooner than anticipated. Moreover, the extent to which a biosimilar, once approved, will be substituted for any one of the reference products in a way that is similar to traditional generic substitution for non-biological products is not yet clear, and will depend on a number of marketplace and regulatory factors that are still developing. The approval of a biosimilar of our product candidates could have a material adverse impact on our business due to increased competition and pricing pressure.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, and are unable to establish sales, marketing and distribution capabilities either on our own or in collaboration with third parties, we may not be successful in commercializing any product candidates we develop, if approved.

In order to market and successfully commercialize any product candidates we develop, if approved, we must build our sales and marketing capabilities or enter into collaborations with third parties for these services. We currently have no sales, marketing or distribution capabilities and as a company have no experience in marketing products. If we commercialize any of our product candidates that may be approved ourselves, we will need to develop an in-house marketing organization and sales force across rare disease therapeutic areas, which will require significant expenditures, management resources, and time. There are significant expenses and risks involved with establishing our own sales and marketing capabilities, including our ability to hire, train, retain, and appropriately incentivize a sufficient number of qualified individuals, generate sufficient sales leads and provide our sales and marketing team with adequate access to physicians who may prescribe our products, effectively manage a geographically dispersed sales and marketing team, and other unforeseen costs and expenses. We will have to compete with other pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies to recruit, hire, train, and retrain marketing and sales personnel. Any failure or delay in the development of a product candidate that affects the expected timing of commercialization of the product candidate or results in the failure of the product candidate to be commercialized could result in us having prematurely or unnecessarily incurred costly commercialization expenses. Our investment would be lost if we are unable to retain or reposition our sales and marketing personnel.

We may also enter into collaborations for the sales and marketing of our product candidates, if approved. To the extent that we depend on collaborators for sales and marketing activities, any revenues we receive will depend upon the success of those collaborators’ sales and marketing teams and the collaborators’ prioritization of our products and compliance with applicable regulatory requirements, and there can be no assurance that the collaborators’ efforts will be successful. If we are unable to build our own sales and marketing team or enter into a collaboration for the commercialization of product candidates we develop, if approved, we may be forced to delay the commercialization of our product candidates or reduce the scope of our sales or marketing activities, which would have an adverse effect on our business, operating results and prospects.

Under the current presidential administration, we face uncertainty regarding potential regulatory developments that may adversely affect our business if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates.

There have been significant and wide-ranging changes in law, regulation and policy under the current Trump administration. Current and future adopt legislation, regulation, or policy could adversely affect our business or creates a more challenging and costly environment to pursue the development and commercialization of our current or future product candidates. For example, the federal government, including the FDA, may implement legislative, regulatory, or policy changes regarding the standards for approving biologic products that we may be unable to satisfy or regarding the marketing of approved biologics that may limit or prohibit the advertising and promotion of our current or future product candidates, if approved. Additionally, the Trump administration has undertaken significant efforts to reduce the size and spending of the federal government, including at the FDA. A significant reduction in the FDA's workforce or the FDA's budget or other disruptions at the FDA could impact the FDA's ability to engage in routine regulatory and oversight activities and result in delays or limitations on our ability to proceed with clinical development programs and obtain regulatory approvals. It is difficult to predict how executive actions that may be taken under the current Trump administration may affect the FDA's ability to exercise its regulatory authority. If such executive actions impose constraints on the FDA's ability to engage in routine oversight and product review activities in the normal course, our business may be negatively impacted.

Risks Related to Our Dependence on Third Parties

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we may pursue business development transactions and collaborate with third parties for the development and commercialization of our product candidates. We may not succeed in identifying and acquiring businesses or assets, in-licensing or out-licensing intellectual property rights or establishing and maintaining collaborations, which may significantly limit our ability to successfully develop and commercialize our product candidates, if at all, and these transactions could disrupt our business, cause dilution to our stockholders or reduce our financial resources.

We acquired all rights to RLYB116 and RLYB114 from Sobi in 2019. We also obtained worldwide exclusive rights to RLYB332 from Sanofi in 2022. If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we may acquire or in-license rights to product candidates, products or technologies, acquire other businesses or enter into collaborations with third parties. We may not be able to enter into such transactions on favorable terms, or at all. Any such acquisitions, in-licenses or collaborations may not strengthen our competitive position, and these transactions may be viewed negatively by analysts, investors, customers, or other third parties with whom we have relationships. We may decide to incur debt in connection with an acquisition, or in-license or issue our common stock or other equity securities as consideration for the acquisition, which would reduce the percentage ownership of our existing stockholders.

We could incur losses resulting from undiscovered liabilities of the acquired business that are not covered by the indemnification we may obtain from the sellers of the acquired business. In addition, we may not be able to successfully integrate the acquired personnel, technologies, and operations into our existing business in an effective, timely, and non-disruptive manner. Such transactions may also divert management attention from day-to-day responsibilities, increase our expenses, and reduce our cash available for operations and other uses. We cannot predict the number, timing or size of future acquisitions or in-licenses or the effect that any such transactions might have on our operating results.

We may not realize the anticipated benefits of any current or future collaboration, each of which involves or will involve numerous risks, including:

- a collaborator may shift its priorities and resources away from our product candidates due to a change in business strategies, or a merger, acquisition, sale, or downsizing;
- a collaborator may seek to renegotiate or terminate its relationship with us due to unsatisfactory clinical results, manufacturing issues, a change in business strategy, a change of control or other reasons;
- a collaborator may cease development in therapeutic areas that are the subject of our collaboration;
- a collaborator may not devote sufficient capital or resources towards our product candidates, or may fail to comply with applicable regulatory requirements;
- a collaborator may change the success criteria for a product candidate, thereby delaying or ceasing development of such candidate;
- a significant delay in initiation of certain development activities by a collaborator will also delay payment of milestones tied to such activities, thereby impacting our ability to fund our own activities;
- a collaborator could develop a product that competes, either directly or indirectly, with our product candidates;

- a collaborator with commercialization obligations may not commit sufficient financial resources or personnel to the marketing, distribution, or sale of a product;
- a collaborator with manufacturing responsibilities may encounter regulatory, resource, or quality issues and be unable to meet demand requirements;
- a collaborator may terminate a strategic alliance;
- a dispute may arise between us and a collaborator concerning the research, development, or commercialization of a product candidate resulting in a delay in milestones or royalty payments or termination of the relationship and possibly resulting in costly litigation or arbitration, which may divert management's attention and resources; and
- a collaborator may use our products or technology in such a way as to invite litigation from a third-party.

If any collaborator fails to fulfill its responsibilities in a timely manner, or at all, our research, clinical development, manufacturing, or commercialization efforts related to that collaboration could be delayed or terminated, or it may be necessary for us to assume responsibility for expenses or activities that would otherwise have been the responsibility of our collaborator. If we are unable to establish and maintain collaborations on acceptable terms or to successfully transition away from terminated collaborations, we may have to delay or discontinue further development of one or more of our product candidates, undertake development and commercialization activities at our own expense, or find alternative sources of capital, which would have a material adverse impact on our clinical development plans and business. If we fail to establish and maintain collaborations related to our product candidates, we could bear all of the risk and costs related to the development of any such product candidate, and we may need to seek additional financing, hire additional employees and otherwise develop expertise for which we have not budgeted. This could negatively affect the development and commercialization of our product candidates.

We may face significant competition in identifying and acquiring businesses or assets, in-licensing intellectual property rights and seeking appropriate collaboration partners for our product candidates, and the negotiation process may be time-consuming and complex. In order for us to successfully partner our product candidates, potential collaborators must view these product candidates as economically valuable in markets they determine to be attractive in light of the terms that we are seeking and other products or product candidates available for licensing from or in connection with collaborations with other companies. Our success in acquiring business or assets or in partnering with collaborators may depend on our history or perceived capability of successful product development. Even if we are successful in our efforts to acquire businesses or assets, in-license intellectual property rights or establish collaborations, we may not be successful in developing such product candidates or technologies or able to maintain such collaborations if, for example, development or approval of a product candidate is delayed or sales of an approved product are disappointing.

Our reliance on a central team consisting of a limited number of employees and third parties who provide various administrative, research and development, and other services across our organization presents operational challenges that may adversely affect our business.

As of December 31, 2025, we had 14 full-time employees, upon whom we rely for various administrative, research and development, business development and other support services shared among our subsidiaries. The size of our centralized team may limit our ability to devote adequate personnel, time, and resources to support the operations of all of our subsidiaries, including their research and development activities, the management of financial, accounting, and reporting matters, and the oversight of our third-party vendors and partners. If our centralized team or our third-party vendors and partners performing such functions fail to provide adequate administrative, research and development, or other services across our entire organization, our business, financial condition, and results of operations could be harmed.

Our employees and independent contractors, including principal investigators, CROs, consultants and vendors, may engage in misconduct or other improper activities, including noncompliance with regulatory standards and requirements, which could have a material adverse effect on our business.

Misconduct by our employees and independent contractors, including principal investigators, CROs, consultants, vendors and any third parties we may engage in connection with research, development, regulatory, manufacturing, quality assurance and other pharmaceutical functions and commercialization, could include intentional, reckless or negligent conduct or unauthorized activities that violate various laws, including: (i) the laws and regulations of the FDA, and other similar regulatory authorities, including those laws that require the reporting of true, complete and accurate information to such authorities; (ii) manufacturing standards; (iii) data privacy, security, fraud and abuse and other healthcare laws and regulations; or (iv) laws that require the reporting of true, complete and accurate financial information and data. Sales, marketing and business arrangements in the healthcare industry are subject to extensive laws and regulations intended to prevent fraud, misconduct, kickbacks, self-dealing and other abusive practices. These laws and regulations may restrict or prohibit a wide range of pricing, discounting, marketing and promotion, sales commission, customer incentive programs, and other business arrangements. Activities such as the improper use or misrepresentation of information obtained in the course of clinical trials, creation of fraudulent data in preclinical studies or clinical trials, or illegal misappropriation of drug product, could also result in regulatory sanctions and cause serious harm to our reputation. It is not always possible to identify and deter misconduct by employees and other third parties, and the precautions we take to detect and prevent this activity may not be effective in controlling unknown or unmanaged risks or losses or in protecting us from governmental investigations or other actions or lawsuits stemming from a failure to comply with such laws or regulations. Additionally, we are subject to the risk that a person or government agency could allege such fraud or other misconduct, even if none occurred. If any such actions are instituted against us or them and we are not successful in defending ourselves or asserting our rights, those actions could have a significant impact on our business and results of operations, including the imposition of significant civil, criminal, and administrative penalties, damages, monetary fines, possible exclusion from participation in Medicare, Medicaid, other U.S. federal healthcare programs or healthcare programs in other jurisdictions, individual imprisonment, other sanctions, contractual damages, reputational harm, diminished profits and future earnings, and curtailment of our operations.

We currently rely and will rely on third parties for the manufacture of drug substance and drug product for our preclinical studies and clinical trials and, if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, expect to continue to do so for commercialization of any product candidates that we may develop that are approved for marketing. Our reliance on third parties may increase the risk that we will not have sufficient quantities of such drug substance, product candidates, or any products that we may develop and commercialize, or that such supply will not be available to us at an acceptable cost, which could delay, prevent, or impair our development or commercialization efforts.

We have limited personnel with experience in manufacturing, and we do not own facilities for manufacturing RLYB116 or any other product candidate. Instead, we rely on and expect to continue to rely on contract manufacturers for the supply of cGMP-drug substance and drug product of RLYB116 and any other product candidates we develop and, in the future, for commercial supply. Reliance on third parties may expose us to more risk than if we were to manufacture our product candidates ourselves.

We may be unable to establish necessary supply agreements with third-party manufacturers or to do so on acceptable terms. Even if we are able to establish agreements with third-party manufacturers, reliance on third-party manufacturers entails additional risks, including:

- the possible breach of the manufacturing agreement by the third-party;
- the possible termination or nonrenewal of the agreement by the third-party at a time that is costly or inconvenient for us;
- reliance on the third-party for regulatory compliance, quality assurance, safety, and pharmacovigilance and related reporting; and
- the possible inability of third-party suppliers to supply and/or transport materials, components and products to us in a timely manner as a result of disruptions to the global supply chain.

Third-party manufacturers may fail to comply with cGMP regulations or similar regulatory requirements outside the United States. Any failure to follow cGMP or other regulatory requirements or delay, interruption or other issues that arise in the manufacture, fill-finish, packaging, or storage of our product candidates as a result of a failure of our facilities or the facilities or operations of third parties to comply with regulatory requirements or pass any regulatory authority inspection could significantly impair our ability to develop and commercialize our product candidates, including leading to significant delays in the availability of our product candidates for our clinical trials or the termination of or suspension of a clinical trial, or the delay or prevention of a filing or approval of marketing applications for our product candidates. Moreover, our failure, or the failure of our third-party manufacturers, to comply with applicable regulations could result in sanctions being imposed on us, including fines, injunctions, civil penalties, delays, suspension or withdrawal of approvals, license revocations, seizures or recalls of product candidates or medicines, operating restrictions, and criminal prosecutions, any of which could significantly and adversely affect supplies of our medicines and harm our business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects.

While we provide oversight of manufacturing activities, we have limited ability to control the execution of manufacturing activities by, and are or will be dependent on, our CMOs for compliance with cGMP requirements for the manufacture of our product candidates by our CMOs. As a result, we are subject to the risk that our product candidates may have manufacturing defects or fail to comply with regulatory requirements, which we have limited ability to prevent. CMOs may also have competing obligations that prevent them from manufacturing our product candidates in a timely manner. If a CMO cannot successfully manufacture drug substance that conforms to our specifications and the regulatory requirements, we will not be able to secure or maintain regulatory approval for the use of our product candidates in clinical trials, or for commercial distribution of our product candidates, if approved. In addition, we have limited control over the ability of our CMOs to maintain adequate quality control, quality assurance, and qualified personnel, and we were not involved in developing our CMOs' policies and procedures.

The facilities and processes used to manufacture our product candidates are subject to inspection by the FDA, EMA and other comparable foreign authorities. If the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authority finds deficiencies with or does not approve these facilities for the manufacture of our product candidates or if it withdraws any such approval or finds deficiencies in the future, we may need to find alternative manufacturing facilities or conduct additional studies, which would delay our development program and significantly impact our ability to develop, obtain regulatory approval for, or commercialize our product candidates, if approved. Furthermore, CMOs may breach existing agreements they have with us because of factors beyond our control. They may also terminate or refuse to renew their agreement at a time that is costly or otherwise inconvenient for us. Finding new CMOs or third-party suppliers involves additional cost and requires our management's time and focus. In addition, there is typically a transition period when a new CMO commences work.

Any significant delay in the supply of our product candidates or the raw materials needed to produce our product candidates, could considerably delay conducting our clinical trials and potential regulatory approval of our product candidates. If we were unable to find an adequate CMO or another acceptable solution in time, our clinical trials could be delayed, or our commercial activities could be harmed.

We rely on and will continue to rely on CMOs to purchase from third-party suppliers the raw materials necessary to produce our product candidates. We have limited ability to control the process or timing of the acquisition of these raw materials by our CMOs. Moreover, we currently do not have any agreements for the production of these raw materials. Supplies of raw materials could be interrupted from time to time and we cannot be certain that alternative supplies could be obtained within a reasonable time frame, at an acceptable cost, or at all. In addition, a disruption in the supply of raw materials could delay the commercial launch of our product candidates, if approved, or result in a shortage in supply, which would impair our ability to generate revenues from the sale of our product candidates. Growth in the costs and expenses of raw materials may also impair our ability to cost effectively manufacture our product candidates. There are a limited number of suppliers for the raw materials that we may use to manufacture our product candidates and we may need to assess alternative suppliers to prevent a possible disruption of the manufacture of our product candidates. Moreover, our product candidates utilize drug substances that are produced on a small scale, which could limit our ability to reach agreements with alternative suppliers.

As part of their manufacture of our product candidates, our CMOs and third-party suppliers are expected to comply with and respect the intellectual property and proprietary rights of others. If a CMO or third-party supplier fails to acquire the proper licenses or otherwise infringes, misappropriates or otherwise violates the intellectual property or the proprietary rights of others in the course of providing services to us, we may have to find alternative CMOs or third-party suppliers or defend against claims of infringement, either of which would significantly impact our ability to develop, obtain regulatory approval for, or commercialize our product candidates, if approved.

Our collaborators also may breach their agreements with us or otherwise fail to perform to our satisfaction, which could impact the development timeline of our product candidates.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, we will continue to rely on third parties to conduct, supervise, and monitor our preclinical studies and clinical trials. If we fail to effectively oversee and manage these third parties, if they do not successfully carry out their contractual duties, or if they perform in an unsatisfactory manner, it may harm our business.

We rely, and will continue to rely, on CROs, CRO-contracted vendors, and clinical trial sites to ensure the proper and timely conduct of our clinical trials. Our reliance on CROs for clinical development activities limits our control over these activities, but we remain responsible for ensuring that each of our trials is conducted in accordance with the applicable protocol and legal, regulatory, and scientific standards.

We and our CROs will be required to comply with the GLP requirements for our preclinical studies and GCP requirements for our clinical trials. Regulatory authorities enforce GCP requirements through periodic inspections of trial sponsors, principal investigators, and clinical trial sites. If we, or our CROs, fail to comply with GCP requirements, the clinical data generated in our clinical trials may be deemed unreliable and the FDA, EMA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities may require us to perform additional clinical trials before approving our marketing applications. We cannot assure you that upon inspection by a given regulatory authority, such regulatory authority will determine that any of our clinical trials comply with GCP requirements and may require a large number of patients. Our failure or any failure by our CROs, investigators, CMOs or other third parties to comply with regulatory requirements or to recruit enough patients may delay ongoing or planned clinical trials or require us to repeat clinical trials, which would delay the regulatory approval process. Failure by us or by third parties we engage to comply with regulatory requirements can also result in fines, adverse publicity, and civil and criminal sanctions. Moreover, our business may be implicated if any of these third parties violates federal or state fraud and abuse or false claims laws and regulations or healthcare privacy and security laws.

Our CROs, vendors and clinical trial investigators are not our employees, and we do not control whether they devote sufficient time and resources to our clinical trials. These third parties may also have relationships with other commercial entities, including our competitors, for whom they may also be conducting clinical trials, or other drug development activities, which could harm our competitive position. We face the risk of potential unauthorized disclosure or misappropriation of our intellectual property by CROs and other third parties involved in our preclinical studies and clinical trials, which may reduce our trade secret protection and allow our potential competitors to access and exploit our proprietary technology. If our CROs and other third parties involved in our trials do not successfully carry out their contractual duties or obligations, or fail to meet expected deadlines, or if the quality or accuracy of the clinical data they obtain is compromised due to the failure to adhere to our clinical protocols or regulatory requirements or for any other reason, our clinical trials may be extended, delayed or terminated, and we may not be able to obtain regulatory approval for, or successfully commercialize, any product candidates that we develop. As a result, our financial results and the commercial prospects for any product candidates that we develop would be harmed, our costs could increase, and our ability to generate revenue could be delayed.

If our relationship with any CRO terminates, we may not be able to enter into arrangements with alternative CROs or do so on commercially reasonable terms. Switching or adding additional CROs involves substantial cost and requires management's time and focus. In addition, there is a natural transition period when a new CRO commences work. As a result, delays occur, which can materially impact our ability to meet our desired clinical development timelines. Though we intend to carefully manage our relationships with our CROs, there can be no assurance that we will not encounter challenges or delays in the future or that these delays or challenges will not have an adverse impact on our business, financial condition, and prospects.

Risks Related to Healthcare Laws and Other Legal Compliance Matters

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, enacted and future healthcare legislation may increase the difficulty and cost for us to obtain marketing approval of and commercialize our product candidates, if approved, and may affect the prices we may set.

In the United States and other jurisdictions, there have been, and we expect there will continue to be, a number of legislative and regulatory changes, and additional proposed changes, to the healthcare system that could affect our future results of operations. In particular, there have been and continue to be a number of initiatives at the U.S. federal and state levels that seek to reduce healthcare costs and improve the quality of health care. As an earlier example with longstanding impact, in March 2010, the ACA was enacted, which substantially changed the way healthcare is financed by both governmental and private insurers. The ACA expanded health care coverage through a Medicaid eligibility expansion and the implementation of the individual mandate for health insurance coverage. The ACA also imposed an annual fee payable on manufacturers of branded prescription drugs and biologic agents (other than those designated as orphan drugs) and implemented changes to the coverage and reimbursement of drug products under government healthcare programs, including an expansion in the Medicaid drug rebate program, an increase in the statutory minimum rebates a manufacturer must pay under the Medicaid drug rebate program, and the establishment of a new Medicare Part D coverage gap discount program.

Beyond the ACA, there have been ongoing healthcare reform efforts, including efforts focused on drug pricing and payment. For example, the Inflation Reduction Act ("IRA") of 2022 includes a number of changes intended to address rising prescription drug prices in Medicare Parts B and D. These changes include caps on Medicare Part D out-of-pocket costs, Medicare Part B and Part D drug price inflation rebates, a new Medicare Part D manufacturer discount drug program (replacing the ACA Medicare Part D coverage gap discount program) and a drug price negotiation program for certain high spend Medicare Part B and D drugs (with negotiated prices for the first set of drugs taking effect in 2026). The IRA has had and will likely continue to have a significant impact on the pharmaceutical industry. Additionally, changes to Medicaid effective in 2024 eliminated the Medicaid rebate cap. And changes to certain Medicare price reporting requirements for drugs beginning in 2026 will likely increase the administrative and compliance burden for manufacturers.

Recently, drug pricing and payment has been subject to a number of reform initiatives. For example, President Trump issued an Executive Order in April 2025 with multiple directives aimed at lowering drug prices, including refining the Medicare drug price negotiation program established by the IRA; accelerating competition for high-cost prescription drugs by accelerating approval of generics and biosimilars and facilitating the process for re-classifying prescription drugs as over-the-counter drugs; and increasing drug importation. In May 2025, President Trump issued another Executive Order that directed government agencies and officials to identify most-favored nation pricing targets for prescription drugs (and looked to pharmaceutical manufacturers to make significant progress towards delivering target prices to patients); prevent foreign countries from disproportionately shifting the cost of global pharmaceutical research and development to the United States; and facilitate direct-to-consumer purchasing programs for pharmaceutical manufacturers to sell their products to patients at the most-favored-nation price. In the wake of the Executive Orders and related executive initiatives, a number of pharmaceutical manufacturers have announced direct-to-consumer offerings with discounted prices and/or reached agreement with the federal government regarding pricing for drugs, including prices for Medicaid drugs and newly launched products. A website sponsored by the federal government that is anticipated to offer pharmaceutical direct-to-consumer channels in the future has also been launched. Federal agencies are developing new drug pricing pilot programs, such as a voluntary Medicaid initiative which would authorize the federal government to negotiate Medicaid supplemental rebates with participating manufacturers on behalf of state Medicaid programs, in exchange for standardized coverage criteria for participating manufacturer drugs, and proposed Medicare Part B and D pilot models that, if finalized as proposed, would replace existing inflation-based Medicare rebates with rebates determined on the basis of international prices, for drugs and patients subject to the model. Many of these reform initiatives would require additional legal and/or administrative action to implement and may be subject to legal challenge.

Other federal healthcare reform efforts or actions may affect access to healthcare coverage or the funding of health care benefits, although the full impact of such efforts or actions cannot be predicted. For example, the Congressional Budget Office has estimated that Medicaid provisions in the 2025 budget reconciliation legislation, including restrictions in eligibility and funding for Medicaid, as well as changes to the healthcare marketplace such as the elimination of certain subsidies, will increase the number of uninsured.

Individual states in the United States have also become increasingly aggressive in passing legislation and implementing regulations designed to control pharmaceutical and biological product pricing, including price or patient reimbursement constraints, discounts, restrictions on certain product access and marketing cost disclosure and transparency measures, and, in some cases, measures designed to encourage importation from other countries and bulk purchasing.

Healthcare reform efforts have been and may continue to be subject to scrutiny, legal challenge and subsequent amendment, creating further uncertainty.

Other recent government actions may also affect prices or payments for prescription drugs. For example, the Trump Administration's recently announced tariff on branded or patented drugs may increase the cost of drug products that are imported from abroad or manufactured using products or materials imported from abroad. The timeline for implementation of this tariff has not yet been finalized. As another example, the Budget Control Act, as amended, resulted in the imposition of reductions in Medicare (but not Medicaid) payments to providers in 2013 and will remain in effect through 2032 unless additional Congressional action is taken. Any significant spending reductions affecting Medicare, Medicaid or other publicly funded or subsidized health programs that may be implemented and/or any significant taxes or fees that may be imposed on us could have an adverse impact on our results of operations.

Healthcare or other reform initiatives could affect demand for, or pricing of, any future products if approved for sale. We cannot, however, predict the ultimate content, timing or effect of any federal and state reform efforts. There is no assurance that federal or state health care reform will not adversely affect our future business and financial results.

In markets outside of the United States, reimbursement and healthcare payment systems vary significantly by country, and many countries have instituted price ceilings on specific products and therapies. We cannot predict the likelihood, nature, or extent of government regulation that may arise from future legislation or administrative action in the United States or any other jurisdiction. If we, or any third parties we may engage, are slow or unable to adapt to changes in existing requirements or the adoption of new requirements or policies, or if we or such third parties are not able to maintain regulatory compliance, our product candidates may lose any regulatory approval that may have been obtained and we may not achieve or sustain profitability.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, our business operations and current and future relationships with contractors, investigators, healthcare professionals, consultants, third-party payors, patient organizations, customers, and others will be subject to applicable healthcare regulatory laws, which could expose us to penalties.

Our business operations and current and future arrangements with contractors, investigators, healthcare professionals, consultants, third-party payors, patient organizations, and customers may expose us to broadly applicable fraud and abuse and other healthcare laws and regulations. These laws may constrain the business or financial arrangements and relationships through which we conduct our operations, including how we research, market, sell, and distribute our product candidates, if approved. Such laws, some of which may apply only after our products are approved for marketing, include:

- U.S. federal false claims, false statements and civil monetary penalties laws prohibiting, among other things, any person from knowingly presenting, or causing to be presented, a false claim for payment of government funds or knowingly making, or causing to be made, a false statement to get a false claim paid;
- U.S. federal healthcare program anti-kickback law, which prohibits, among other things, persons from offering, soliciting, receiving or providing remuneration, directly or indirectly, to induce either the referral of an individual for, or the purchasing or ordering of, a good or service for which payment may be made under federal healthcare programs such as Medicare and Medicaid;
- U.S. HIPAA which, in addition to privacy protections applicable to healthcare providers and other entities, prohibits executing a scheme to defraud any healthcare benefit program or making false statements relating to healthcare matters;
- U.S. FDCA, which among other things, strictly regulates drug marketing, prohibits manufacturers from marketing such products prior to approval or for off-label use and regulates the distribution of samples;
- U.S. federal laws that require pharmaceutical manufacturers to calculate, report and certify certain complex product prices to the government or provide certain discounts or rebates to government authorities or private entities, often as a condition of reimbursement under government healthcare programs;
- U.S. federal Open Payments (or federal "sunshine" law), which requires pharmaceutical and medical device companies to monitor and report certain financial interactions with certain healthcare providers to Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services ("CMS") for re-disclosure to the public, as well as ownership and investment interests held by physicians and their immediate family members;
- U.S. federal consumer protection and unfair competition laws, which broadly regulate marketplace activities and activities that potentially harm consumers;

- analogous U.S. state laws and regulations, including: state anti-kickback and false claims laws; state laws requiring pharmaceutical companies to comply with specific compliance standards, restrict financial interactions between pharmaceutical companies and healthcare providers or report information related to payments to health care providers, marketing expenditures or drug prices; state and local laws requiring the registration of pharmaceutical sales representatives; state laws regulating the manufacture and distribution of biopharmaceutical products; and state laws governing privacy, security, and breaches of health information in certain circumstances, many of which differ from each other in significant ways and often are not preempted by HIPAA, thus complicating compliance efforts;
- U.S. laws and regulations prohibiting bribery and corruption, such as the U.S. Foreign Corrupt Practices Act ("FCPA"), which, among other things, prohibits U.S. companies and their employees and agents from authorizing, promising, offering, or providing, directly or indirectly, corrupt or improper payments or anything else of value to foreign government officials, employees of public international organizations or foreign government-owned or affiliated entities, candidates for foreign public office, and foreign political parties or officials thereof; and
- similar healthcare laws and regulations in the EU and other jurisdictions, including reporting requirements detailing interactions with and payments to healthcare providers and laws governing the privacy and security of personal information, such as, where applicable, the General Data Protection Regulation ("GDPR") which imposes obligations and restrictions on the collection, use, and disclosure of personal data relating to individuals located in the EU and the European Economic Area ("EEA") (including health data). See "—Our business operations may subject us to data protection laws, including the GDPR, the United Kingdom ("UK") GDPR, the California Consumer Privacy Act of 2018 ("CCPA") and other similar laws."

Efforts to ensure that our business arrangements with third parties will comply with applicable healthcare and other laws and regulations will involve substantial costs. Given the breadth of the laws and regulations and narrowness of any exceptions, limited guidance for certain laws and regulations and evolving government interpretations of the laws and regulations, regulatory authorities may possibly conclude that our business practices may not comply with healthcare laws and regulations, including our consulting agreements and other relationships with healthcare providers.

If our operations are found to be in violation of any of the laws described above or any other governmental laws and regulations that may apply to us, we may be subject to actions including the imposition of civil, criminal, and administrative penalties, damages, disgorgement, monetary fines, possible exclusion from participation in Medicare, Medicaid, and other federal healthcare programs, individual imprisonment, contractual damages, reputational harm, diminished profits and future earnings, additional reporting requirements, or oversight if we become subject to a corporate integrity agreement or similar agreement to resolve allegations of non-compliance with these laws, and curtailment or restructuring of our operations, any of which could adversely affect our ability to operate our business and our results of operations. Further, defending against any such actions can be costly, time consuming, and may require significant personnel resources. Therefore, even if we are successful in defending against any such actions that may be brought against us, our business may be impaired.

Our business operations may subject us to data protection laws, including the GDPR, the UK GDPR, the CCPA and other similar laws.

The GDPR and UK GDPR apply to companies established in the EEA and UK, respectively, as well as to companies that are not established in the EEA or UK, respectively, and which collect and use personal data in relation to (i) offering goods or services to, or (ii) monitoring the behavior of, individuals located in the EEA or UK, respectively. If we conduct clinical trial programs in the EEA or UK (whether the trials are conducted directly by us or through a clinical vendor or collaborator), enter into research collaborations involving the monitoring of individuals in the EEA or UK, or market our products to individuals in the EEA or UK, we will be subject to the GDPR or UK GDPR, as applicable, which place stringent operational requirements for processors and controllers of personal data of individuals in the EEA and UK, respectively. If our or our collaborators' or service providers' privacy or data security measures fail to comply with the GDPR or UK GDPR requirements, we may be subject to litigation, regulatory investigations, enforcement notices requiring us to change the way we use personal data, temporary or definitive bans on data processing, or fines of up to 20 million Euros in the case of GDPR or £17.5 million in the case of UK GDPR or, in each case, up to 4% of our total worldwide annual revenue of the preceding financial year, whichever is higher, as well as compensation claims by affected individuals, including class-action type litigation, negative publicity, reputational harm and a potential loss of business and goodwill.

Recent legal developments in Europe have created complexity and uncertainty regarding transfers of personal data from the EEA and the UK to the United States. On July 16, 2020, the Court of Justice of the European Union ("CJEU") invalidated the EU-US Privacy Shield Framework (the "Privacy Shield") under which personal data could be transferred from the EEA to US entities who had self-certified under the Privacy Shield scheme. This framework has been replaced by the E.U.-U.S. Data Privacy Framework, for which the EC adopted an adequacy decision in July 2023, and the UK Extension to the E.U.-U.S. Data Privacy Framework, which took effect in October 2023. While we do not currently rely upon these frameworks, we expect there to be legal challenges to this framework in the future, which could draw into question the legitimacy of other cross-border transfer mechanisms, including the standard contractual clauses on which we rely to transfer personal data from the EEA and UK to the U.S. and other jurisdictions. On June 4, 2021, the EC released two revised sets of standard contractual clauses for transfers of personal data from the EEA to the U.S. and has indicated that it will release additional revised standard contractual clauses in the future.

These recent developments may require us to review and amend the legal mechanisms by which we make and/ or receive personal data transfers to/ in the United States. Other countries outside of the EEA and UK maintain different privacy laws that we are subject to which may further increase our costs of compliance and expose us to greater legal risk.

There are numerous U.S. federal and state laws and regulations related to the privacy and security of personal information. In particular, regulations promulgated pursuant to HIPAA establish privacy and security standards that limit the use and disclosure of individually identifiable health information, or protected health information, and require the implementation of administrative, physical and technological safeguards to protect the privacy of protected health information and ensure the confidentiality, integrity and availability of electronic protected health information. Determining whether protected health information has been handled in compliance with applicable privacy standards and our contractual obligations can be complex and may be subject to changing interpretation. While we do not believe that we are directly subject to HIPAA as either a "covered entity" or "business associate," U.S. sites at which we conduct clinical trials are likely to be covered entities and thus must ensure that they obtain adequate patient authorization or establish another basis under HIPAA to disclose a clinical trial subject's individually identifiable health information to us and other entities participating in our clinical trials.

In the United States, the CCPA imposes many obligations for the collection, processing, and sharing of personal information of California residents. The CCPA provides for civil penalties for violations, as well as a private right of action for data breaches that is expected to increase data breach litigation. Because we have not yet generated revenue and do not meet the CCPA's other jurisdictional tests, we do not yet meet the applicable threshold for the CCPA to apply to our business. If our business becomes subject to CCPA in the future, it could increase our compliance costs and potential liability. Similar laws have been proposed or passed in more than half of the states in the U.S. and in the U.S. Congress. In addition, Washington state enacted the My Health, My Data Act, a health-focused consumer privacy law, which took effect in March 2024. This law imposes obligations related to the collection and sharing of certain health-related information that is not subject to HIPAA and that does not fall within certain other exceptions in the law. Other states have enacted, or are in the process of enacting, similar health-focused consumer privacy laws. Furthermore, all fifty U.S. states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and other U.S. territories have enacted data breach notification laws that require, among other things, notifications to state governments and/or the affected individuals in the event of a data breach. Such laws differ from one another, and may impose significant compliance burden. Further, we may at times fail, or be perceived to have failed, to have complied with such laws. This could result in significant consequences, which include, but are not limited to, the imposition of fines and penalties, government enforcement actions, investigations and other proceedings, as well as additional reporting requirements and/or oversight.

Also of note, in June 2024, the Protecting Americans' Data from Foreign Adversaries Act of 2024 took effect. This law prohibits data brokers from making available certain personally identifiable sensitive data of U.S. individuals to "foreign adversary" countries, such as the People's Republic of China ("PRC"), and entities controlled by such countries. Additionally, in January 2025, the DOJ published a final rule implementing President Biden's Executive Order 14117, "Preventing Access to Americans' Bulk Sensitive Personal Data and United States Government-Related Data by Countries of Concern," which became effective in April 2025. This final rule prohibits certain data brokerage transactions and transactions involving certain bulk human 'omic data, including human genomic data and biospecimens from which such data can be derived, with restricted jurisdictions, such as the PRC, and "covered persons" that have certain ties to such restricted jurisdictions. The final rule also places restrictions on certain vendor, employment and investment agreements with such jurisdictions. These restrictions may affect our ability to engage in collaborations or license agreements with entities in restricted countries or with a nexus to such countries going forward. As such, we will need to review periodically our operations in comparison to developments in such laws. Achieving and sustaining compliance with applicable international, federal and state privacy, security, and breach reporting laws may prove time-consuming and costly. Failure to comply with any of these legal requirements could have a material adverse effect on our reputation, business, or financial condition, including but not limited to: interruptions or stoppages in our business operations, including our clinical studies; inability to process personal data or to operate in certain jurisdictions; limited ability to develop or commercialize our products; expenditure of time and resources to defend any claim or inquiry; adverse publicity; or revision or restructuring of our operations.

We are subject to environmental, health and safety laws and regulations, and we may become exposed to liability and substantial expenses in connection with environmental compliance or remediation activities.

Our operations, including our development, testing and manufacturing activities, are subject to numerous environmental, health and safety laws and regulations. These laws and regulations govern, among other things, the controlled use, handling, release, and disposal of and the maintenance of a registry for, hazardous materials and biological materials, such as chemical solvents, human cells, carcinogenic compounds, mutagenic compounds, and compounds that have a toxic effect on reproduction, laboratory procedures and exposure to blood-borne pathogens. If we fail to comply with such laws and regulations, we could be subject to fines or other sanctions.

As with other companies engaged in activities similar to ours, we face a risk of environmental liability inherent in our current and historical activities, including liability relating to releases of or exposure to hazardous or biological materials. Environmental, health and safety laws and regulations are becoming more stringent. We may be required to incur substantial expenses in connection with future environmental compliance or remediation activities, in which case, the production efforts of our third-party manufacturers or our development efforts may be interrupted or delayed.

Risks Related to Our Intellectual Property

If we are unable to obtain, maintain and enforce patent protection for our technology and product candidates, or if the scope of the patent protection obtained is not sufficiently broad, our competitors could develop and commercialize similar or identical technology and products, and our ability to successfully develop and commercialize our technology and product candidates may be adversely affected.

Our success depends in large part on our ability to obtain and maintain intellectual property, particularly patents, in the United States and other countries, with respect to any proprietary technology and product candidates we develop. If we are unable to obtain or maintain patent protection for proprietary technology or product candidates by filing patent applications and/or in-licensing related intellectual property in commercially relevant jurisdictions, our business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects could be materially harmed.

The patent prosecution process is expensive, time-consuming and complex, and we may not be able to identify, file, prosecute, maintain, defend or license all necessary or desirable patent applications at a reasonable cost or in a timely manner. In some circumstances involving technology that we license from third parties, we do not have the sole right to control the preparation, filing and prosecution of patent applications or to maintain, enforce and defend the in-licensed patents. Therefore, these in-licensed patents and applications may not be prepared, filed, prosecuted, maintained, defended and enforced in a manner consistent with the best interests of our business.

The patent rights of pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies generally are highly uncertain, involve complex legal and factual questions and have been the subject of much litigation in recent years. No consistent policy regarding the breadth of claims allowed in biotechnology and pharmaceutical patents has emerged in the United States or in numerous foreign jurisdictions. Various courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court, have rendered decisions that affect the scope of patent eligibility of certain inventions or discoveries relating to biotechnology. These decisions conclude, among other things, that abstract ideas, natural phenomena and laws of nature are not themselves patent eligible subject matter.

Precisely what constitutes a law of nature or abstract idea is uncertain, and certain aspects of our technology could be considered ineligible for patenting under applicable law. In addition, the scope of patent protection outside the United States is uncertain, and laws of foreign countries may not protect our rights to the same extent as the laws of the United States or vice versa. For example, European patent law precludes the patentability of methods of treatment of the human body. With respect to both owned and in-licensed patent rights, we cannot predict whether the patent applications we and our licensors are currently pursuing will issue as patents that protect our technology and product candidates, in whole or in part, in any particular jurisdiction or whether the claims of any issued patents will provide sufficient protection from competitors. Changes in either the patent laws or interpretation of the patent laws in the United States or other countries may diminish the value of our patents and our ability to obtain, protect, maintain, defend and enforce our patent rights, narrow the scope of our patent protection and, more generally, affect the value or narrow the scope of our patent rights.

Publications of discoveries in the scientific literature often lag behind the actual discoveries, and patent applications in the United States and other jurisdictions are typically not published until 18 months after filing, or, in some cases, are not published at all. Therefore, neither we nor our licensors can know with certainty whether either we or our licensors were the first to make the inventions claimed in the patents and patent applications we own or in-license now or in the future, or that either we or our licensors were the first to file for patent protection of such inventions. As a result, the issuance, scope, validity, enforceability and commercial value of our owned and in-licensed patent rights are uncertain. In addition, the scope of patent protection outside the United States is uncertain, and laws of foreign countries might not protect our rights to the same extent as the laws of the United States or vice versa.

Additionally, the coverage claimed in a patent application can be significantly reduced before the patent is issued, and its scope can be reinterpreted after issuance. Even if our patent applications issue as patents, they might not issue in a form that will provide us with any competitive advantage. The issuance of a patent is not conclusive as to its inventorship, scope, validity or enforceability, and our patents might be challenged in a variety of proceedings before courts or patent offices in the United States and abroad. Such challenges might result in loss of exclusivity or in patent claims being narrowed, invalidated or held unenforceable, which could reduce the scope of, or invalidate, our patent rights, allow third parties to commercialize our technology without payment to us, and/or limit the duration of the patent protection of our technology and product candidates. If the breadth or strength of our patents and patent applications is threatened, regardless of the outcome, it could dissuade companies from collaborating with us to license, develop or commercialize current or future product candidates.

For these reasons, our patent portfolio might not provide us with sufficient rights to exclude others from using or commercializing technology and products similar or identical to our technology and product candidates.

Obtaining and maintaining patent protection depends on compliance with various procedural requirements imposed by governmental patent agencies, and our patent protection could be reduced or eliminated for non-compliance with these requirements.

The United States Patent and Trademark Office ("USPTO") and foreign patent offices have a number of procedural and documentary requirements that must be complied with during the patent application and prosecution process. Periodic fees must be paid to the USPTO and foreign patent offices at several stages or annually over the lifetime of issued patents and pending patent applications. In certain circumstances, we might rely on our licensing partners to meet procedural, documentary, and fee requirements of the relevant patent agency. With respect to our patents, we rely outside counsel to remind us of the due dates and to make payment after we instruct them to do so. While an inadvertent lapse can in many cases be cured, there are situations in which noncompliance can result in abandonment or lapse of the patent or patent application, resulting in partial or complete loss of patent rights in the relevant jurisdiction. If we or our licensors fail to maintain current and future patents and patent applications covering our product candidates, our competitors might be able to enter the market with similar or identical products or technology, which would have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects.

We may not be able to protect our intellectual property and proprietary rights throughout the world.

Filing, prosecuting, and defending patents on product candidates in all countries throughout the world would be prohibitively expensive. In addition, the laws of some foreign countries do not protect intellectual property rights to the same extent as federal and state laws in the United States, and even where such protection is available, adequate judicial and governmental enforcement of such intellectual property rights may be lacking. Consequently, third parties may attempt to develop and/or commercialize competitive products in foreign countries where we do not have any patent protection and/or where legal recourse may be limited. Further, we may not be able to prevent third parties from importing products made using our inventions into the United States or other jurisdictions. This may have a significant commercial impact on our business operations.

Proceedings to enforce our intellectual property rights in foreign jurisdictions could result in substantial costs and divert our efforts and attention from other aspects of our business, could put our patents at risk of being invalidated or interpreted narrowly, could put our patent applications at risk of not issuing, and could provoke third parties to assert claims against us. We may not prevail in any lawsuits that we initiate, and even if we do prevail, the damages or other remedies awarded, if any, may not be commercially meaningful. Accordingly, our efforts to enforce our intellectual property and proprietary rights around the world may be inadequate to obtain a significant commercial advantage from the intellectual property that we develop or license.

Many countries, including India, China and certain countries in Europe, have compulsory licensing laws under which a patent owner may be compelled to grant licenses to third parties. In addition, many countries limit the enforceability of patents against government agencies or government contractors. In these countries, the patent owner may have limited remedies, which could materially diminish the value of such patents. If we or any of our licensors are forced to grant a license to third parties with respect to any patents relevant to our business, our competitive position may be impaired and our business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects may be adversely affected.

Changes to patent laws in the United States and other jurisdictions could diminish the value of our patents, thereby impairing our ability to protect our products.

Changes in either the patent laws or interpretation of patent laws in the United States or other jurisdictions could increase the uncertainties and costs surrounding the prosecution of our patent applications and the maintenance, enforcement or defense of our issued patents, all of which could have a material adverse effect on our business. For example, in 2023, patent reform in the EU created a unitary patent and established a Unified Patent Court ("UPC"). The unitary patent facilitates validation of a patent granted by the European Patent Office in the EU member states that participate in the unitary patent. The UPC is a centralized body with jurisdiction over actions for preliminary injunctions, infringement, and revocation of patents granted by the European Patent Office. While the UPC has exclusive jurisdiction over unitary patents, patentees that do not utilize the unitary patent for validation can opt existing or future patents out of the jurisdiction of the UPC. There are both risks and benefits associated with pursuing Unitary Patents and with submitting to the jurisdiction of the UPC in the absence of a Unitary Patent. For example, because the UPC is a relatively new forum, little precedent exists, and the manner in which European patent law will be applied by the UPC is unpredictable, which presents potential risks to a patent's scope and enforceability. In addition, an unfavorable outcome before the UPC could result in a European patent being invalidated in all participating member states. In comparison, European patents that are not under the jurisdiction of the UPC must be litigated separately in each member state, which causes patent challengers to incur additional costs and leaves open the possibility that a challenged patent could be affirmed in some member states, even if it is invalidated in others. From an enforcement perspective, the ability to assert patents against infringers under the UPC system could have significant financial benefits for a patentee, due to the ability to litigate in a single forum, rather than in each individual member state.

Currently, we do not have any unitary patents and we have opted out of UPC jurisdiction for our existing European patents. While we have and will continue to make case-by-case decisions about whether to pursue unitary patents or to elect the jurisdiction of the UPC, we cannot be certain that a more favorable outcome could be achieved if the opposite decision were made. We also cannot be certain whether the legal precedent of the UPC will evolve in a manner that is more or less favorable to us than the precedent of individual member states in a given situation or for a given patent.

In addition to legislative changes, recent U.S. Supreme Court rulings have narrowed the scope of patent protection available in certain circumstances and weakened the rights of patent owners in certain situations. This combination of events has increased uncertainty with respect to the validity and enforceability of patents once obtained. Similarly, foreign courts have made, and will likely continue to make, changes in how the patent laws in their respective jurisdictions are interpreted. Further, political changes in government leadership both within and outside of the U.S. could result in changes to national patent laws and regulations or multi-country intellectual property treaties, which could impact patent enforcement in the U.S. and internationally. We cannot predict future changes in the interpretation of patent laws or changes to patent laws that might be enacted into law by U.S. and foreign legislative bodies. Those changes may materially affect our patents or patent applications and our ability to obtain additional patent protection in the future.

If we are unable to obtain licenses from third parties on commercially reasonable terms, our business could be harmed.

In addition to our existing licensing agreements, it may be necessary for us to use the patented or proprietary technology of third parties to commercialize our products, if approved, in which case we would be required to obtain a license from these third parties. The in-licensing and acquisition of third-party intellectual property rights is a competitive area, and a number of more established companies are also pursuing strategies to in-license or acquire third-party intellectual property rights that we may consider attractive or necessary. These established companies may have a competitive advantage over us due to their size, cash resources and greater clinical development and commercialization capabilities. Furthermore, companies that perceive us to be a competitor may be unwilling to assign or license rights to us. These factors might mean fewer suitable licensing opportunities for us, as well as higher acquisition or licensing costs.

If we are unable to obtain a necessary license, the third parties owning such intellectual property rights could seek an injunction prohibiting our development and/or commercialization of the affected product candidates. Even if we are able to obtain a license, the terms may be unfavorable; for example, it may require substantial licensing or royalty payments, or be non-exclusive, thereby giving our competitors access to the same technologies licensed to us.

If we are unable to obtain third-party intellectual property rights or to maintain our existing intellectual property rights, we may be required to expend significant time and resources to redesign our technology, product candidates, or the methods for manufacturing them or to develop or license replacement technology, all of which may not be feasible on a technical or commercial basis. If we are unable to do so, we may be unable to develop or commercialize the affected technology and product candidates, which could harm our business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects significantly.

If we fail to comply with our obligations in our intellectual property licenses with third parties, or otherwise experience disruptions to our business relationships with our licensors, we could lose intellectual property rights that are important to our business.

We are party to license agreements that impose upon us certain obligations, and we may enter into additional licensing and funding arrangements with third parties that may impose, among other things, diligence, development, and commercialization timelines, milestone and royalty payments, and insurance. If we fail to comply with such obligations under current or future license and funding agreements, our counterparties may have the right to terminate these agreements, in which event we might be forced to cease developing, manufacturing or marketing any product that is covered by these agreements or may face other penalties under such agreements, or our counterparties may require us to grant them certain rights. Such an occurrence could materially adversely affect the value of any product candidate being developed under any such agreement.

Termination or reduction or elimination of our rights under these agreements, or restrictions on our ability to freely assign or sublicense our rights under such agreements may result in our loss of rights or our having to negotiate new or reinstated agreements with less favorable terms, which would impede, delay or prohibit the further development or commercialization of any product candidates that rely on such agreements.

Disputes may arise regarding intellectual property that is or becomes subject to a licensing agreement, including:

- the scope of rights granted under the license agreement and other matters of contract interpretation;

- whether and the extent to which our technology and processes infringe the intellectual property rights of the licensor that are not subject to the licensing agreement;
- whether our licensor or its licensor had the right to grant the license agreement;
- whether third parties are entitled to compensation or equitable relief, such as an injunction, for our use of the intellectual property rights without their authorization;
- our involvement in the prosecution of licensed patents and our licensors' overall patent enforcement strategy;
- the amounts of royalties, milestones or other payments due under the license agreement;
- the sublicensing of patent and other rights under collaborative development relationships;
- our diligence obligations under the license agreement and what activities satisfy those diligence obligations;
- the inventorship and ownership of inventions and know-how resulting from the joint creation or use of intellectual property by our licensors and us and our partners; and
- the priority of invention of patented technology.

The resolution of any contract disagreement that may arise could narrow the scope of our rights to the relevant intellectual property or technology, could increase our financial or other obligations under the relevant agreement, or could result in loss of some or all rights under the license agreement. Moreover, if disputes over intellectual property that we have licensed prevent or impair our ability to maintain our current licensing arrangements on commercially acceptable terms, we may be unable to successfully develop and commercialize the affected technology and product candidates. Any of these outcomes could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

Despite our efforts, our licensors or future licensors might conclude that we have materially breached our license agreements and might therefore terminate the license agreements, thereby removing our ability to develop and commercialize product candidates and technology covered by these license agreements. If these in-licenses are terminated, or if the underlying intellectual property fails to provide the intended exclusivity, competitors could seek regulatory approval for and market products and technologies identical to ours. This could have a material adverse effect on our competitive position, business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

Patent terms may not protect our competitive position for an adequate amount of time.

Patents have a limited lifespan. In the United States, if all maintenance fees are timely paid, the natural expiration of a patent is generally 20 years from its earliest U.S. non-provisional filing date. Various extensions may be available, but the life of a patent, and the protection it affords, is limited. Even if patents covering our product candidates are obtained, once the patent life has expired, we may be open to competition from competitive products, including generics or biosimilars. Given the amount of time required for the development, testing and regulatory review of new product candidates, patents protecting such candidates might expire before or shortly after such candidates are approved for use or commercialized. As a result, our patent portfolio may not provide us with sufficient rights to exclude others from commercializing products similar or identical to ours during periods when commercial exclusivity would be valuable to us.

If we do not obtain a patent term extension for any product candidates we might develop, our business might be materially harmed.

In the United States, the term of a patent that covers an FDA-approved drug may be eligible for a patent term extension ("PTE") of up to five years beyond the expiration date of the patent, as compensation for the patent term lost during the FDA regulatory review process. The Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act of 1984, also known as the Hatch-Waxman Act, permits a PTE of up to five years beyond the expiration date of the patent. The length of the PTE is related to the length of time the drug is under regulatory review, and cannot extend the remaining term of a patent beyond a total of 14 years from the date of product approval. The patent term of only one patent applicable to an approved drug may be extended, and only those claims covering the approved drug, a method for using it or a method for manufacturing it may be extended. Similar provisions are available in Europe and certain other jurisdictions. While we expect to apply for PTE on patents covering our product candidates, there is no guarantee that such extensions will be granted and, even if granted, the length of such extensions. We may not be granted PTE either in the United States or in any foreign country, even where that patent is eligible for PTE, if, for example, we fail to exercise due diligence during the testing phase or regulatory review process, fail to apply within applicable deadlines, fail to apply prior to expiration of relevant patents or otherwise fail to satisfy applicable requirements. Furthermore, for licensed patents, we might not be able to control whether a petition to obtain a PTE is filed or obtained from the USPTO and/or foreign patent office(s). If we are unable to obtain any PTE, or if the term of extension is less than we request, our business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects could be materially harmed.

If we are unable to protect the confidentiality of our trade secrets, our business and competitive position would be harmed.

In addition to seeking patents for some of our technology and product candidates, we seek to protect our trade secrets and other proprietary technology, in part, by entering into non-disclosure and confidentiality agreements with parties who have access to them, such as our employees, corporate collaborators, outside scientific collaborators, contract research organizations, contract manufacturers, consultants, advisors and other third parties. Despite these efforts, any of these parties may breach the agreements and disclose our proprietary information, and we may not be able to obtain adequate remedies. Detecting the disclosure or misappropriation of a trade secret and enforcing a claim that a party illegally disclosed or misappropriated a trade secret is difficult, expensive and time-consuming, and the outcome is unpredictable. Further, we cannot guarantee that we have entered into confidentiality agreements with each party that may have or has had access to our trade secrets or proprietary technology.

Over time, our trade secrets, know-how and proprietary information may be disseminated within the industry through independent development, the publication of journal articles and the movement of personnel to and from academic and industry scientific positions. Consequently, we may be unable to prevent others from exploiting that technology, which could affect our ability to expand in domestic and international markets. If any of our trade secrets were to be disclosed to or independently developed by a competitor or other third-party, our competitive position would be materially and adversely harmed.

We also seek to preserve the integrity and confidentiality of our data and trade secrets by maintaining physical security of our premises and physical and electronic security of our information technology systems. These security measures may be breached, and we may not have adequate remedies for any breach.

If our trademarks and trade names are not adequately protected, we may not be able to build name recognition in our markets of interest and our business may be adversely affected.

We might be unable to successfully register our trademarks and trade names, and/or to establish name recognition based on our trademarks and trade names, which could result in substantial costs and diversion of resources, and could adversely impact our ability to compete effectively. In addition, our trademarks or trade names may be challenged, infringed, circumvented, declared generic or determined to be infringing on other marks. We may not be able to protect our rights to these trademarks and trade names or may be forced to stop using them. At times, competitors may adopt trademarks or trade names similar to ours, impeding our ability to build brand identity, and possibly leading to market confusion. In addition, we could be subject to trademark or trade name infringement claims brought by owners of other registered trademarks or trade names.

We may become involved in lawsuits to protect or enforce our patent or other intellectual property rights, which could be expensive, time-consuming and unsuccessful.

Competitors and other third parties may infringe, misappropriate or otherwise violate our patents or other intellectual property. As a result, we or our licensors may need to file infringement, misappropriation or other intellectual property claims, which can be expensive and time-consuming. Any claims we assert against others could provoke them to assert counterclaims against us alleging that we infringe, misappropriate or otherwise violate their intellectual property rights.

In a patent infringement proceeding, the perceived infringers could counterclaim that the patents we or our licensors have asserted are invalid or unenforceable. In patent litigation in the United States, defendant counterclaims alleging invalidity or unenforceability are common. Grounds for a validity challenge could be an alleged failure to meet any of several statutory requirements, including lack of novelty, obviousness, or non-enablement. Grounds for an unenforceability assertion include an allegation that someone connected with prosecution of the patent withheld relevant information from the USPTO, or made a misleading statement, during prosecution. Third parties may institute such claims before administrative bodies in the United States or abroad, even outside the context of litigation. Such mechanisms include re-examination, post-grant review, inter partes review, interference proceedings, derivation proceedings and equivalent proceedings in foreign jurisdictions, such as opposition proceedings in the European Patent Office. The outcomes of allegations of invalidity or unenforceability are unpredictable. With respect to validity, for example, we cannot be certain that there is no invalidating prior art of which the patent examiner and we or our licensing partners were unaware during prosecution.

An adverse result in any such proceeding could put our patents at risk of being invalidated or interpreted narrowly and could put our patent applications at risk of not yielding an issued patent. A court may also refuse to enjoin a third-party from using the technology at issue, for example, on the basis that patents do not cover that technology. Furthermore, if the breadth or strength of protection provided by our current or future patents and patent applications is threatened, regardless of the outcome, it could dissuade companies from collaborating with us to license, develop or commercialize current or future products or services. In addition, the uncertainties associated with litigation could have a material adverse effect on our ability to raise the funds necessary to continue our research programs and clinical trials.

Interference or derivation proceedings provoked by third parties or brought by us or declared by the USPTO might be necessary to determine the priority of inventions with respect to our patents or patent applications. An unfavorable outcome could require us to cease using the related technology or to attempt to license rights to it from the prevailing party. Our business could be harmed if the prevailing party does not offer us a license on commercially reasonable terms or at all, or if a non-exclusive license is offered and our competitors gain access to the same technology. Our defense of interference or derivation proceedings might fail and, even if successful, might result in substantial costs.

Furthermore, because of the substantial amount of discovery required in connection with intellectual property litigation and other proceedings, there is a risk that some of our confidential information or trade secrets could be disclosed during litigation. This could allow third parties to develop and commercialize competing technologies and products, and have a material adverse impact on our business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

We may be subject to claims challenging the inventorship or ownership of our patents and other intellectual property.

We or our licensors may be subject to claims that former employees, collaborators or other third parties have an interest in our patents, trade secrets or other intellectual property. For example, we may have inventorship or ownership disputes that arise from conflicting obligations of employees, consultants or others who are involved in developing our product candidates. Litigation may be necessary to defend against these and other claims challenging inventorship or ownership of our patents, trade secrets or other intellectual property. If we or our licensors or collaborators fail in defending any such claims, we may be required to pay monetary damages and we may also lose valuable intellectual property rights, such as exclusive ownership of, or right to use, intellectual property that is important to our product candidates. Even if we are successful in defending against such claims, litigation could result in substantial costs and be a distraction to management and other employees. Any of the foregoing could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

Third parties may allege that we are violating their intellectual property rights, the outcome of which would be uncertain and could have a material adverse effect on our business.

Numerous U.S. and foreign issued patents and pending patent applications that are owned by third parties exist in the fields in which we are pursuing development candidates. We may not be aware of all such intellectual property rights potentially relating to our technology and product candidates, or we may incorrectly conclude that third-party intellectual property is invalid or that our activities and product candidates do not infringe the intellectual property rights of third parties. Thus, we do not know with certainty that our technology and product candidates, or our development and commercialization thereof, do not and will not infringe, misappropriate or otherwise violate any third-party's intellectual property rights.

Competitors may also assert that our product candidates infringe their intellectual property rights as part of a business strategy to impede our successful entry into those markets. Adversarial proceedings might also be initiated by patent holding companies or other adverse patent owners who have no relevant product or service revenue, and against whom our own patents might provide little or no deterrence or protection. The legal threshold for initiating litigation or contested proceedings is low, so that even lawsuits or proceedings with a low probability of success might be initiated and require significant resources and management attention to defend. The risks of being involved in such litigation and proceedings may increase if and as our product candidates near commercialization and as we gain greater visibility as a public company.

A court could hold that third-party patents are valid, enforceable and infringed by our product candidates or activities. To successfully challenge the validity of a U.S. patent in federal court, we would need to overcome a presumption of validity, which is a high burden that requires clear and convincing evidence of invalidity. There is no assurance that a court would invalidate the claims of any such U.S. patent.

Parties making claims against us may obtain injunctive or other equitable relief that could block our ability to commercialize our product candidates. In the event of a successful claim of infringement against us, we may have to pay substantial damages, including treble damages and attorneys' fees for willful infringement, indemnify customers, collaborators or other third parties; seek new regulatory approvals; and/or redesign our infringing products, which may not be possible or practical. In addition, if we are found to infringe, misappropriate or otherwise violate a third-party's intellectual property rights, we may be required to obtain a license to continue developing, manufacturing and marketing our technology and product candidates. However, we may not be able to obtain any required license on commercially reasonable terms or at all. Even if we were able to obtain a license, it could be non-exclusive, thereby giving our competitors and other third parties access to the same technologies licensed to us. Further, a license could require us to make substantial licensing and royalty payments.

We may be subject to claims by third parties asserting that our employees, consultants or contractors have wrongfully used or disclosed confidential information or trade secrets of such third parties, that we have misappropriated their intellectual property, or that they own what we regard as our own intellectual property.

Many of our employees, consultants and contractors were previously employed or engaged by universities or other pharmaceutical or biotechnology companies. Many of them executed proprietary rights, non-disclosure and/or non-competition agreements in connection with such previous employment or engagement. Although we try to ensure that the individuals who work for us do not use the intellectual property rights, proprietary information, know-how or trade secrets of others in their work for us, we may be subject to claims that we or they have obtained, used, infringed, misappropriated, disclosed or otherwise violated the intellectual property rights of third parties. Any resulting litigation or the threat of litigation may adversely affect our ability to hire employees or engage consultants and contractors. A loss of key personnel or their work product could hamper or prevent us from developing and commercializing products and product candidates, which could harm our business.

In addition, while it is our policy to require our employees, consultants and contractors who may be involved in the development of intellectual property to execute agreements assigning such intellectual property to us, we may be unsuccessful in obtaining such an agreement from each party who in fact develops intellectual property that we regard as our own. Our intellectual property assignment agreements with them may not be self-executing or may be breached, and we may be forced to bring claims against third parties, or defend claims they may bring against us, to determine the ownership of what we regard as our intellectual property. Such claims could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects.

If we fail in prosecuting or defending any such claims, we may be required to pay monetary damages, and we may also lose valuable intellectual property rights or personnel, which could have a material adverse effect on our competitive position and prospects.

Intellectual property litigation or other legal proceedings relating to intellectual property could cost substantial resources.

Even if resolved in our favor, litigation or other legal proceedings relating to intellectual property claims may cause us to incur significant expenses and could distract our technical and management personnel from their normal responsibilities. In addition, there could be public announcements involving such proceedings, and if securities analysts or investors perceive these results to be negative, it could have a substantial adverse effect on the price of our common stock. Such proceedings could substantially increase our operating losses and reduce the resources available for development activities or any future sales, marketing, or distribution activities. We may not have sufficient resources to conduct such litigation or proceedings adequately. Uncertainties resulting from the initiation and continuation of intellectual property litigation or other proceedings could compromise our ability to compete in the marketplace.

Intellectual property rights do not necessarily address all potential threats.

The degree of future protection afforded by our intellectual property rights is uncertain because intellectual property rights have limitations and may not adequately protect our business or permit us to maintain a competitive advantage. For example:

- we or our license partners or current or future collaborators might not have been the first to file patent applications covering our or their inventions;
- others may independently develop similar or alternative technologies or duplicate any of our technologies without infringing our intellectual property rights;
- it is possible that our pending or future patent applications will not lead to issued patents;
- issued patents that we hold rights to may be held invalid or unenforceable;
- our competitors or other third parties might conduct research and development activities in countries where we do not have patent rights and then use the information learned from such activities to develop competitive products for sale in our major commercial markets;
- we cannot ensure that any of our pending patent applications, if issued, will include claims having a scope sufficient to protect our product candidates;
- we cannot ensure that any patents issued to us will provide a basis for an exclusive market for our commercially viable product candidates or will provide us with any competitive advantages;
- we cannot ensure that our commercial activities or product candidates will not infringe upon the patents of others;
- we cannot ensure that we will be able to successfully commercialize our product candidates on a substantial scale, if approved, before the relevant patents that we own or license expire;
- we may not develop additional proprietary technologies that are patentable;
- the patents of others may harm our business; and
- we may choose not to seek patent protection in order to maintain certain trade secrets or know-how, and a third-party may subsequently file a patent covering such intellectual property.

Should any of these events occur, they could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects.

Risks Related to Our Employees, Managing Our Growth and Our Operations

Our future success depends on our ability to retain our key personnel and to attract, retain and motivate qualified personnel.

We are highly dependent on the expertise of the principal members of our management, scientific, and clinical teams. Our scientific and clinical development personnel have extensive experience developing and implementing novel clinical trial designs and successfully conducting clinical trials in never-before treated patient populations. If we lose one or more of our executive officers or key employees, our ability to execute our programs and implement our business strategy successfully could be seriously harmed. Furthermore, replacing executive officers and key employees may be difficult and may take an extended period of time because of the limited number of individuals in our industry with the breadth of skills and experience required to develop, gain regulatory approval of and commercialize product candidates successfully.

Competition to hire from this limited pool is intense, and we may be unable to hire, train, retain or motivate these additional key personnel on acceptable terms given the competition among numerous biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies for similar personnel. We may also experience competition for the hiring of scientific and clinical personnel from universities and research institutions.

Many of our employees were previously employed by Alexion Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (now part of AstraZeneca), a potential competitor. To the extent we employ or engage personnel from competitors, we may be subject to allegations that such individuals have been improperly solicited or have divulged proprietary or other confidential information, or that their former employers own their research output.

In addition, we rely on consultants and advisors, including scientific and clinical advisors, to assist us in formulating our research and development and commercialization strategy. Our consultants and advisors may be employed by employers other than us and may have commitments under consulting or advisory contracts with other entities that may limit their availability to us. If we are unable to continue to attract and retain high quality personnel, our ability to pursue our growth strategy will be limited.

If employees seek alternate employment, we may have to increase reliance on external support to advance our operations. Any workforce reductions could also harm our ability to attract and retain qualified management, scientific, clinical, and manufacturing personnel who are critical to our business. Any failure to attract or retain qualified personnel could prevent us from successfully developing our product candidates in the future.

Our business and operations would suffer in the event of system failures.

Despite the implementation of security measures, our computer systems, as well as those of our CROs and other contractors and consultants, are vulnerable to damage from computer viruses, unauthorized access, natural and manmade disasters (including hurricanes), terrorism, war, and telecommunication and electrical failures. While we do not believe that we have experienced any system failure or accident to date, if such an event were to occur and cause interruptions in our or their operations, it could result in delays and/or material disruptions of our research and development programs. For example, the loss of preclinical or clinical trial data from completed, ongoing, or planned trials, or the loss of other proprietary data, could result in delays in our regulatory approval efforts and significantly increase our costs to recover or reproduce the data. We are aware that a third party accessed the computer systems of one of our contractors and while we believe that such access did not result in loss of our proprietary data or disrupt our operations, we or our contractors may be subject to attacks in the future that could harm our business. Likewise, we currently rely on third parties for the manufacture of our product candidates and to conduct clinical trials, and similar events relating to their computer systems could also have a material adverse effect on our business. To the extent that any disruption were to result in a loss of or damage to our data or applications, or inappropriate disclosure of personal, confidential or proprietary information, we could incur liability, and the development of our product candidates could be delayed.

Our proprietary or confidential information may be lost, or we may suffer security breaches.

The U.S. federal and various state and foreign governments have enacted or proposed requirements regarding the collection, distribution, use, security and storage of personally identifiable information and other data relating to individuals. In the ordinary course of our business, we and third parties with which we have relationships will continue to collect and store sensitive data, including clinical trial data, proprietary business information, personal data and personally identifiable information of our clinical trial subjects and employees, in data centers and on networks. The secure processing, maintenance and transmission of this information is critical to our operations. Despite our and our collaborators' security measures, our information technology and infrastructure may be vulnerable to attacks by hackers or internal bad actors, breaches due to employee error, technical vulnerabilities, malfeasance, or other disruptions.

Several proposed and enacted federal, state and international laws and regulations obligate companies to notify individuals of security breaches involving personally identifiable information, which could result from breaches experienced by us or by third parties, including collaborators, vendors, contractors, or other organizations with which we have formed strategic relationships. Although, to our knowledge, neither we nor any such third parties have experienced any material security breach, and even though we may have contractual protections with such third parties, any such breach could compromise our or their networks and the information stored therein could be accessed, publicly disclosed, lost or stolen. Any such access, disclosure, notifications, follow-up actions related to such a security breach or other loss of information could result in legal claims or proceedings, liability under laws that protect the privacy of personal information, and significant costs, including regulatory penalties, fines, and legal expenses, and such an event could disrupt our operations, cause us to incur remediation costs, damage our reputation, and cause a loss of confidence in us and our or such third parties' ability to conduct clinical trials, which could adversely affect our reputation and delay the clinical development of our product candidates.

Risks Related to Our Common Stock

An active trading market for our common stock may not be sustained.

If a market for our common stock is not sustained, it may be difficult for you to sell your shares of common stock at an attractive price or at all. We cannot predict the prices at which our common stock will trade. It is possible that in one or more future periods our results of operations may be below the expectations of public market analysts and investors, and, as a result of these and other factors, the price of our common stock may fall.

Our failure to meet the listing standards of the Nasdaq could result in the delisting of our common stock. Delisting could adversely affect the liquidity of our common stock and the market price of our common stock could decrease, and our ability to obtain sufficient additional capital to fund our operations and to continue to operate as a going concern would be substantially impaired.

On February 24, 2025, we received a deficiency notice (the "Notice"), from the Listing Qualifications Staff (the "Staff of Nasdaq"), notifying us that, for the prior 30 consecutive business days, the bid price of our common stock had closed below $1.00 per share, thereby failing to satisfy the minimum closing bid price requirement set forth in the continued listing requirements of Nasdaq Listing Rule 5450(a)(1), (the "Bid Price Requirement"). The Notice had no immediate effect on the listing of our common stock on the Nasdaq Global Select Market. In accordance with Nasdaq Listing Rule 5810(c)(3)(A), we had 180 calendar days, or until August 25, 2025, (the "Compliance Date"), to regain compliance with the Bid Price Requirement by having shares of our common stock maintain a minimum closing bid price of at least $1.00 per share for a minimum of 10 consecutive trading days before the Compliance Date.

As we had not regained compliance with the Bid Price Requirement by the Compliance Date, we filed an application to transfer the listing of our common stock from the Nasdaq Global Select Market to the Nasdaq Capital Market. On August 26, 2025, we received approval from the Staff of Nasdaq to transfer the listing of our common stock from the Nasdaq Global Select Market to the Nasdaq Capital Market, (the "Approval"). Our common stock was transferred to the Nasdaq Capital Market effective as of the opening of business on August 29, 2025 and has continued to trade under the symbol "RLYB." Nasdaq operates in substantially the same manner as the Nasdaq Global Select Market, and listed companies must meet certain financial requirements and comply with Nasdaq's corporate governance requirements. As a result of the Approval, we were granted an additional 180-day grace period, or until February 23, 2026, (the "Second Compliance Date"), to regain compliance with the Bid Price Requirement.

On January 26, 2026, our stockholders voted in favor of an amendment to our amended and restated certificate of incorporation to effect a reverse stock split of our issued and outstanding common stock at a ratio ranging from 1-for-5 shares up to 1-for-20 shares, which ratio would be selected by our board of directors. On January 26, 2026, our board of directors approved a 1-for-8 reverse stock split of our issued and outstanding common stock. On February 6, 2026, we effected a reverse stock split at a ratio of 1-for-8 shares. The primary goal of the reverse stock split was to increase the per share market price of our common stock to meet the Bid Price Requirement.

On February 24, 2026, we were notified by the Staff of Nasdaq that the closing bid price of our common stock had been $1.00 per share or greater for at least 10 consecutive business days, from February 6, 2026 to February 23, 2026. Accordingly, we have regained compliance with the Bid Price Requirement.

Although we regained compliance with the Bid Price Requirement following the reverse stock split, there can be no assurance that we will continue to meet the Bid Price Requirement, or any other Nasdaq continued listing requirements, in the future. If we fail to meet any of these requirements, including the Bid Price Requirement, Nasdaq may again notify us that we have failed to meet the minimum listing requirements and initiate the delisting process. If our common stock were delisted from Nasdaq, trading of our common stock could be conducted in the over-the-counter market or on an electronic bulletin board established for unlisted securities such as the Pink Sheets or the OTC Bulletin Board, but there can be no assurance that our common stock will be eligible for trading on such alternative exchange or market. Additionally, if our common stock were delisted from Nasdaq, the liquidity of our common stock would be adversely affected, the market price of our common stock could decrease, our ability to obtain sufficient additional capital to fund our operations and to continue to operate as a going concern would be substantially impaired and transactions in our common stock could lose federal preemption of state securities laws. Furthermore, there could also be a further reduction in our coverage by securities analysts and the news media and broker-dealers may be deterred from making a market in or otherwise seeking or generating interest in our common stock, which could cause the price of our common stock to decline further. Moreover, delisting may also negatively affect our collaborators', vendors', suppliers' and employees' confidence in us and employee morale.

The market price of our common stock may be volatile, which could result in substantial losses for investors.

Shares of our common stock were offered in our IPO in July 2021 at a price of $104.00 per share and between the date of our IPO and March 6, 2026, the closing price per share of our common stock has ranged from as low as $2.00 to as high as $187.20. Some of the factors that may cause the market price of our common stock to fluctuate include:

- the success of existing or new competitive product candidates or technologies;
- the timing and results of preclinical studies for any product candidates that we may develop;
- failure or discontinuation of any of our product development and research programs;
- results of preclinical studies, clinical trials, or regulatory approvals of product candidates of our competitors, or announcements about new research programs or product candidates of our competitors;
- commencement or termination of collaborations for our product development and research programs;
- regulatory or legal developments in the United States and other countries;
- developments or disputes concerning patent applications, issued patents, or other proprietary rights;
- the recruitment or departure of key personnel;
- the level of expenses related to any of our research programs or product candidates that we may develop;
- the results of our efforts to develop additional product candidates or products;
- actual or anticipated changes in estimates as to financial results, development timelines, or recommendations by securities analysts;
- announcement or expectation of additional financing efforts;
- sales of our common stock by us, our insiders or other stockholders;
- expiration of market stand-off or lock-up agreement;
- effects of public health crises, pandemics and epidemics;
- variations in our financial results or those of companies that are perceived to be similar to us;
- changes in estimates or recommendations by securities analysts, if any, that cover our stock;
- changes in the structure of healthcare payment systems;
- market conditions in the pharmaceutical and biotechnology sectors;
- general economic, industry, and market conditions; and
- the other factors described in this “Risk Factors” section and elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

In recent years, the stock market in general, and the market for pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies in particular, has experienced extreme price and volume fluctuations that have often been unrelated or disproportionate to changes in the operating performance of the companies whose stock is experiencing those price and volume fluctuations. Broad market and industry factors may seriously affect the market price of our common stock, regardless of our actual operating performance. Following periods of such volatility in the market price of a company's securities, securities class action litigation has often been brought against that company. Because of the potential volatility of our stock price, we may become the target of securities litigation in the future.

If securities analysts stop publishing research or reports about our business or if they publish negative evaluations of our stock, the price of our stock could decline.

The trading market for our common stock is influenced in part on the research and reports that industry or financial analysts publish about us or our business. If one or more of these analysts ceases coverage of our company or fails to publish reports on us regularly, we could lose visibility in the financial markets, which in turn could cause our stock price or trading volume to decline. Moreover, if one or more of the analysts covering our business downgrade their evaluations of our stock, the price of our stock could decline.

A significant portion of our total outstanding shares may be sold into the market, which could cause the market price of our common stock to decline significantly, even if our business is doing well.

Sales of a substantial number of shares of our common stock in the public market could occur at any time. These sales, or the perception in the market that the holders of a large number of shares of common stock intend to sell shares, could reduce the market price of our common stock. As of March 6, 2026, we have 5,289,675 shares of common stock outstanding. All of these shares may be resold in the public market immediately, unless held by our affiliates who are subject to volume limitations under Rule 144. As of March 6, 2026, we also have pre-funded warrants to purchase up to an aggregate of 416,673 shares of common stock outstanding. We may not effect the exercise of any pre-funded warrant, and a holder will not be entitled to exercise any portion of any pre-funded warrant if, upon giving effect to such exercise, the aggregate number of shares of common stock beneficially owned by the holder (together with its affiliates) would exceed 9.99% of the number of shares of common stock outstanding immediately after giving effect to the exercise, which percentage may be increased or decreased at the holder's election upon 61 days' notice to us subject to the terms of such pre-funded warrants, provided that such percentage may in no event exceed 19.99%.

Moreover, as of December 31, 2025, certain holders of our common stock have rights, subject to conditions, to require us to file registration statements covering their shares or to include their shares in registration statements that we may file for ourselves or other stockholders. On May 9, 2023, we registered an aggregate of 1,543,950 shares of common stock held by holders with registration rights, for resale, pursuant to a registration statement on Form S-3. In addition, we have entered into the Sales Agreement with TD Cowen to offer and sell shares of our common stock having an aggregate offering price of up to $100,000,000, from time to time, through an at-the-market offering program. We also registered an aggregate of 1,737,094 shares of common stock that we may issue under our equity compensation plans or that are issuable upon exercise of outstanding options. These shares can be freely sold in the public market upon issuance and once vested, subject to volume limitations applicable to affiliates. If any of these additional shares are sold, or if it is perceived that they will be sold, in the public market, the market price of our common stock could decline.

Insiders have substantial influence over us, which could limit your ability to affect the outcome of key transactions, including a change of control.

Our directors and executive officers and their affiliates beneficially own shares representing approximately 25% of our outstanding common stock as of March 6, 2026. As a result, these stockholders, if they act together, will be able to influence our management and affairs and all matters requiring stockholder approval, including the election of directors and approval of significant corporate transactions. The interests of these holders may not always coincide with our corporate interests or the interests of other stockholders, and they may act in a manner with which you may not agree or that may not be in the best interests of our other stockholders. This concentration of ownership may have the effect of delaying or preventing a change in control of our company and might affect the market price of our common stock.

We could be subject to securities class action litigation.

In the past, securities class action litigation has often been brought against companies following a decline in the market price of their securities. This risk is especially relevant for us because biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies have experienced significant share price volatility in recent years. Because of the potential volatility of our stock price, we may become the target of securities litigation in the future. Securities litigation could result in substantial costs and divert management's attention and resources from our business.

Because we do not anticipate paying any cash dividends on our common stock in the foreseeable future, capital appreciation, if any, will be your sole source of gain.

We have never declared or paid any cash dividends on our common stock. We currently anticipate that we will retain future earnings for the development, operation and expansion of our business and do not anticipate declaring or paying any cash dividends in the foreseeable future. As a result, capital appreciation, if any, of our common stock will be your sole source of gain on an investment in our common stock in the foreseeable future.

We are an "emerging growth company," and the reduced disclosure requirements applicable to emerging growth companies may make our common stock less attractive to investors.

We are an "emerging growth company," as defined in the JOBS Act and we may remain an emerging growth company (an "EGC") until December 31, 2026. For so long as we remain an emerging growth company, we are permitted and plan to rely on exemptions from certain disclosure requirements that are applicable to other public companies that are not emerging growth companies. These exemptions include not being required to comply with the auditor attestation requirements of Section 404 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 ("SOX Section 404"), not being required to comply with any requirement that may be adopted by the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board regarding mandatory audit firm rotation or a supplement to the auditor's report providing additional information about the audit and the financial statements, reduced disclosure obligations regarding executive compensation, and exemptions from the requirements of holding a nonbinding advisory vote on executive compensation and stockholder approval of any golden parachute payments not previously approved. As a result, the information we provide stockholders will be different than the information that is available with respect to other public companies. We cannot predict whether investors will find our common stock less attractive if we rely on these exemptions. If some investors find our common stock less attractive as a result, there may be a less active trading market for our common stock, and our stock price may be more volatile.

In addition, the JOBS Act provides that an EGC can take advantage of an extended transition period for complying with new or revised accounting standards. This allows an EGC to delay the adoption of certain accounting standards until those standards would otherwise apply to private companies. We have elected not to "opt out" of such extended transition period, which means that when a standard is issued or revised and it has different application dates for public or private companies, we will adopt the new or revised standard at the time private companies adopt the new or revised standard and will do so until such time that we either (i) irrevocably elect to "opt out" of such extended transition period, or (ii) no longer qualify as an emerging growth company. Therefore, the reported results of operations contained in our financial statements may not be directly comparable to those of other public companies.

Provisions in our amended and restated certificate of incorporation, our amended and restated bylaws and Delaware law may have anti-takeover effects that could discourage an acquisition of us by others, even if an acquisition would be beneficial to our stockholders, and may prevent attempts by our stockholders to replace or remove our current management.

Our amended and restated certificate of incorporation and amended and restated bylaws and Delaware law contain provisions that may have the effect of discouraging, delaying or preventing a change in control of us or changes in our management that stockholders may consider favorable, including transactions in which you might otherwise receive a premium for your shares. Our amended and restated certificate of incorporation and bylaws include provisions that:

- authorize "blank check" preferred stock, which could be issued by our board of directors without stockholder approval and may contain voting, liquidation, dividend and other rights superior to our common stock;
- create a classified board of directors whose members serve staggered three-year terms;
- specify that special meetings of our stockholders can be called only by our board of directors;
- prohibit stockholder action by written consent;
- establish an advance notice procedure for stockholder approvals to be brought before an annual meeting of our stockholders, including proposed nominations of persons for election to our board of directors;
- provide that vacancies on our board of directors may be filled only by a majority of directors then in office, even though less than a quorum;
- provide that our directors may be removed only for cause;
- specify that no stockholder is permitted to cumulate votes at any election of directors;
- expressly authorize our board of directors to modify, alter or repeal our amended and restated bylaws; and
- require supermajority votes of the holders of our common stock to amend specified provisions of our amended and restated certificate of incorporation and amended and restated bylaws.

These provisions, alone or together, could delay or prevent hostile takeovers and changes in control or changes in our management. These provisions could also limit the price that investors might be willing to pay in the future for shares of our common stock, thereby depressing the market price of our common stock.

In addition, because we are incorporated in the State of Delaware, we are governed by the provisions of Section 203 of the DGCL which prohibits a person who owns in excess of 15% of our outstanding voting stock from merging or combining with us for a period of three years after the date of the transaction in which the person acquired in excess of 15% of our outstanding voting stock, unless the merger or combination is approved in a prescribed manner.

Any provision of our amended and restated certificate of incorporation, amended and restated bylaws or Delaware law that has the effect of delaying or deterring a change in control could limit the opportunity for our stockholders to receive a premium for their shares of our common stock, and could also affect the price that some investors are willing to pay for our common stock.

Our amended and restated certificate of incorporation designates the state or federal courts within the State of Delaware as the exclusive forum for certain types of actions and proceedings that may be initiated by our stockholders, which could limit our stockholders' ability to obtain a favorable judicial forum for disputes with us or our directors, officers or employees.

Our amended and restated certificate of incorporation provides that, subject to limited exceptions, the state or federal courts (as appropriate) within the State of Delaware are exclusive forums for (1) any derivative action or proceeding brought on our behalf, (2) any action asserting a claim of breach of a fiduciary duty owed by any of our directors, officers or other employees to us or our stockholders, (3) any action asserting a claim against us arising pursuant to any provision of the DGCL, our amended and restated certificate of incorporation or our amended and restated bylaws, (4) action against us or any of our directors or officers involving a claim or defense arising pursuant to the Exchange Act or the Securities Act, or (5) any other action asserting a claim against us that is governed by the internal affairs doctrine. Any person or entity purchasing or otherwise acquiring any interest in shares of our capital stock shall be deemed to have notice of and to have consented to the provisions of our amended and restated certificate of incorporation described above. This exclusive forum provision does not apply to claims which are vested in the exclusive jurisdiction of a court or forum other than the Court of Chancery of the State of Delaware, or for which the Court of Chancery of the State of Delaware does not have subject matter jurisdiction. For instance, the provision does not apply to actions arising under federal securities laws, including suits brought to enforce any liability or duty created by the Exchange Act or the rules and regulations thereunder. This choice of forum provision may limit a stockholder's ability to bring a claim in a judicial forum that it finds favorable for disputes with us or our directors, officers or other employees, which may discourage such lawsuits against us and our directors, officers and employees. Alternatively, if a court were to find these provisions of our amended and restated certificate of incorporation inapplicable to, or unenforceable in respect of, one or more of the specified types of actions or proceedings, we may incur additional costs associated with resolving such matters in other jurisdictions, which could adversely affect our business and financial condition. In addition, while the Delaware Supreme Court ruled in March 2020 that federal forum selection provisions purporting to require claims under the Securities Act be brought in federal court are "facially valid" under Delaware law, there is uncertainty as to whether other courts will enforce our federal forum provision. If the federal forum provision is found to be unenforceable, we may incur additional costs associated with resolving such matters. The federal forum provision may also impose additional litigation costs on stockholders who assert that the provision is not enforceable or invalid.

General Risks

A variety of risks associated with operating internationally could materially adversely affect our business.

Our business strategy includes potentially expanding internationally. Doing business internationally involves several risks, including, but not limited to:

- multiple, conflicting, and changing laws and regulations, such as privacy regulations, tax laws, export and import restrictions, economic sanctions laws and regulations, employment laws, regulatory requirements, and other governmental approvals, permits, and licenses;
- failure by us to obtain and maintain regulatory approvals for the use of our products in various countries;
- additional potentially relevant third-party patent rights;
- complexities and difficulties in obtaining protection and enforcing our intellectual property;
- difficulties in staffing and managing foreign operations;
- complexities associated with managing multiple payor reimbursement regimes, government payors, or patient self-pay systems;
- limits in our ability to penetrate international markets;

- financial risks, such as longer payment cycles, difficulty collecting accounts receivable, the impact of local and regional financial crises on demand and payment for our products, and exposure to foreign currency exchange rate fluctuations;
- natural disasters, political and economic instability, including wars, terrorism and political unrest, outbreak of disease, boycotts, tariffs, curtailment of trade, and other business restrictions;
- certain expenses, including, among others, expenses for travel, translation, and insurance; and
- regulatory and compliance risks that relate to maintaining accurate information and control over sales and activities that may fall within the purview of the FCPA its books and records provisions, or its anti-bribery provisions, as well as other applicable laws and regulations prohibiting bribery and corruption.

Any of these factors could significantly harm any future international expansion and operations and, consequently, our results of operations.

U.S. federal income tax reform could adversely affect our business and financial condition.

The rules dealing with U.S. federal, state, and local income taxation are constantly under review through the legislative process and by the IRS and the U.S. Treasury Department. Changes to tax laws (which changes may have retroactive application) could adversely affect us or holders of our common stock. In recent years, many such changes have been made and changes are likely to continue to occur in the future. For example, the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, (the "TCJA"), was enacted in 2017 and significantly reformed the Code. The TCJA, among other things, contains significant changes to corporate and individual taxation, some of which could adversely impact an investment in our common stock. On March 27, 2020, President Trump signed into law the CARES Act, which included certain changes in tax law intended to stimulate the U.S. economy in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, including temporary beneficial changes to the treatment of NOLs, interest deductibility limitations and payroll tax matters. There also may be technical corrections legislation or other legislative changes proposed with respect to the TCJA and CARES Act, the effects of which cannot be predicted and may be adverse to us or our stockholders. Additionally, the IRA was enacted in August 2022.

Among other things, the IRA implemented a one percent (1%) excise tax on certain repurchases (including redemptions) of stock by publicly traded domestic corporations, and a corporate alternative minimum tax of fifteen percent (15%) on book income of certain large corporations. Future changes in tax laws could have a material adverse effect on our business, cash flows, financial condition or results of operations. In particular, proposed tax legislation could result in significant changes in, and uncertainty with respect to, tax legislation, regulation and government policy directly affecting our business or indirectly affecting us because of impacts on our customers and suppliers. We urge investors to consult with their legal and tax advisers regarding the implications of potential changes in tax laws on an investment in our common stock.

H.R. 1., also known as the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (the "OBBA"), was enacted on July 4, 2025. The legislation includes several provisions that may impact the timing and magnitude of certain tax deductions. Key provisions include the permanent extension of several business tax benefits originally introduced under the TCJA.

Potential clinical trial or product liability lawsuits against us could cause us to incur substantial liabilities and, if we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, could limit commercialization of any products that we may develop.

If we continue to progress the development of our product candidates, the use of any product candidates we may develop in clinical trials and the sale of any products for which we obtain marketing approval exposes us to the risk of clinical trial and product liability claims. Clinical trial or product liability claims might be brought against us by patients, healthcare providers, pharmaceutical companies or others selling or otherwise coming into contact with our products. On occasion, large judgments have been awarded in class action lawsuits based on drugs that had unanticipated adverse effects. If we cannot successfully defend against product liability claims, we could incur substantial liability and costs. In addition, regardless of merit or eventual outcome, clinical trial or product liability claims may result in:

- impairment of our business reputation and significant negative media attention;
- withdrawal of participants from our clinical trials;

- significant costs to defend the litigation;
- distraction of management's attention from our primary business;
- substantial monetary awards to patients or other claimants;
- inability to commercialize a product candidate;
- product recalls, withdrawals or labeling, marketing or promotional restrictions;
- decreased market demand for any product; and
- loss of revenue.

The clinical trial and product liability insurance we currently carry, and any additional clinical trial and product liability insurance coverage we acquire in the future, may not be sufficient to reimburse us for any expenses or losses we may suffer. Moreover, insurance coverage is becoming increasingly expensive and, in the future, we may not be able to maintain insurance coverage at a reasonable cost or in sufficient amounts to protect us against losses due to liability. If we obtain marketing approval for any product candidate, we intend to acquire insurance coverage to include the sale of commercial products; however, we may be unable to obtain product liability insurance on commercially reasonable terms or in adequate amounts. A successful clinical trial or product liability claim, or series of claims, brought against us could cause our share price to decline and, if judgments exceed our insurance coverage, could adversely affect our results of operation and business, including preventing or limiting the commercialization of any product candidates we develop.

Unfavorable global economic conditions and geopolitical instability could adversely affect our business, financial condition or results of operations.

Our results of operations could be adversely affected by general conditions in the global economy and in the global financial markets, including changes in tariffs and other trade restrictions. A severe or prolonged economic downturn, period of sustained increased inflation, tariffs and other trade restrictions or additional global financial crises, could result in a variety of risks to our business, including weakened demand for our product candidates, if approved, or our ability to raise additional capital when needed on acceptable terms, if at all. For example, the global financial crisis caused extreme volatility and disruptions in the capital and credit markets. Further, geopolitical instability outside the United States may also impact our operations or affect global markets, such as the invasion of Ukraine by Russia and the Israel-Hamas war. While we do not currently conduct clinical trials in Ukraine, Russia, or the Middle East, we cannot be certain what the overall impact of these events will be on our business or on the business of any of our third-party partners, including our contract research organizations, contract manufacturers or other partners. The impact of these events could also expand into other markets where we do business. A weak or declining economy could strain our suppliers, possibly resulting in supply disruption. Any of the foregoing could harm our business and we cannot anticipate all of the ways in which current geopolitical tensions, the economic climate and the financial market conditions could adversely impact our business.

We have incurred, and will incur increased costs as a result of operating as a public company, and our management will continue to be required to devote substantial time to new compliance initiatives and corporate governance practices.

As a public company, we have incurred, and particularly after we are no longer an "emerging growth company," we will incur significant legal, accounting, and other expenses that we did not incur as a private company. The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, the listing requirements of the Nasdaq Capital Market, and other applicable securities rules and regulations impose various requirements on public companies, including establishment and maintenance of effective disclosure and financial controls and corporate governance practices. We expect that we will need to hire additional accounting, finance, and other personnel in connection with our efforts to comply with the requirements of being a public company, and our management and other personnel will need to devote a substantial amount of time towards maintaining compliance with these requirements. These requirements will increase our legal and financial compliance costs and will make some activities more time-consuming and costly. We are currently evaluating these rules and regulations and cannot predict or estimate the amount of additional costs we may incur or the timing of such costs. These rules and regulations are often subject to varying interpretations, in many cases due to their lack of specificity, and, as a result, their application in practice may evolve over time as new guidance is provided by regulatory and governing bodies. This could result in continuing uncertainty regarding compliance matters and higher costs necessitated by ongoing revisions to disclosure and governance practices.

Pursuant to SOX Section 404, we are required to furnish a report by our management on our internal control over financial reporting with our Annual Report on Form 10-K with the SEC. However, while we remain an emerging growth company, we will not be required to include an attestation report on internal control over financial reporting issued by our independent registered public accounting firm. To achieve compliance with SOX Section 404, we will need to continue to dedicate internal resources, potentially engage outside consultants, adopt a detailed work plan to assess and document the adequacy of internal control over financial reporting, continue steps to improve control processes as appropriate, validate through testing that controls are functioning as documented, and implement a continuous reporting and improvement process for internal control over financial reporting. Despite our efforts, there is a risk that we will not be able to conclude that our internal control over financial reporting is effective as required by SOX Section 404. If we identify one or more material weaknesses, it could result in an adverse reaction in the financial markets due to a loss of confidence in the reliability of our financial statements.

Risks Related to Candid

Risks Related to Candid's Limited Operating History, Financial Position and Need for Additional Capital

Candid has a limited operating history, has not completed any clinical trials and has no drugs approved for commercial sale, which may make it difficult for investors to evaluate Candid's current business and predict its future success and viability.

Candid is a clinical-stage biopharmaceutical company with a limited operating history. Candid was incorporated in May 2024 and its operations to date have been limited to organizing and staffing the company, business planning, raising capital, licensing key intellectual property rights, conducting research and development of its drug candidates with itself and with collaborators, scaling up drug candidate manufacturing, preparing for and conducting ongoing and planned preclinical studies and clinical trials, and providing general and administrative support for these operations.

Candid is developing four drug candidates, including cizutamig and CND261, which are in clinical development, and CND319 and CND460, which are in preclinical development, each with respect to autoimmune diseases. Candid has not yet demonstrated an ability to successfully complete any clinical trial, obtain regulatory approvals, manufacture drugs at a commercial scale, or arrange for a third party to do so on its behalf, or conduct sales and marketing activities necessary for successful drug commercialization. Consequently, this makes it difficult to evaluate the success of Candid's business to date and assess its future viability, and any predictions made about Candid's future success or viability may not be accurate.

Candid expects to incur significant losses for the foreseeable future and may never achieve or maintain profitability.

Investment in biopharmaceutical drug development is highly speculative because it entails substantial upfront capital expenditures and the significant risk that drug candidates will fail to demonstrate adequate efficacy and/or an acceptable safety profile, gain regulatory approval or become commercially viable. For the year ended December 31, 2025 and the period from May 1, 2024 (inception) to December 31, 2024, Candid's net loss was $92.2 million and $174.3 million, respectively. As of December 31, 2025, Candid had an accumulated deficit of $266.5 million. Substantially all of Candid's operating losses have resulted from expenses incurred in connection with its research and development programs and from general and administrative costs associated with its operations.

Candid expects to continue to incur significant expenses and additional operating losses for the foreseeable future as it seeks to advance its current and any future drug candidates through preclinical and clinical development, expand its research and development activities, develop new drug candidates and advance any new drug candidates through preclinical and clinical development, complete clinical trials, seek regulatory approval and, if regulatory approval is received, commercialize its drug candidates. Furthermore, the costs of advancing drug candidates into each succeeding clinical phase tend to increase substantially over time. The total costs to advance any of Candid's drug candidates to regulatory approval in even a single jurisdiction would be substantial. Because of the numerous risks and uncertainties associated with drug development, Candid is unable to accurately predict the timing or amount of increased expenses or when, or if, it will be able to generate any revenue from the commercialization of any approved drugs or achieve or maintain profitability. Candid's expenses will also increase substantially as it operates as a public company following the Merger and adds clinical, scientific, operational, financial and management information systems and personnel, including personnel to support its drug development and planned future commercialization efforts.

Before Candid generates any revenue from drug sales, each of its drug candidates will require additional preclinical and/or clinical development, potential regulatory approval in multiple jurisdictions, manufacturing, building of a commercial organization, substantial investment and significant marketing efforts. Candid's expenses could increase beyond expectations if Candid is required by the FDA, the EMA, or comparable foreign regulatory authorities to perform preclinical studies and clinical trials in addition to those that Candid currently anticipates, and/or to modify any of its manufacturing processes or make other changes to its drug candidates or development programs. As a result, Candid expects to continue to incur net losses and negative cash flows for the foreseeable future. These net losses and negative cash flows have had, and will continue to have, an adverse effect on Candid's stockholders' equity and working capital.

As Candid continues to build its business, its financial condition and operating results may fluctuate significantly from quarter to quarter and year to year due to a variety of factors, many of which are beyond Candid's control. For example, as Candid enters into multiple Phase 2 studies for its lead drug candidate, cizutamig, Candid anticipates a significant increase in expenses relative to its historical expenses for preclinical and early stage clinical development activities. Accordingly, investors should not rely upon the results of any particular quarterly or annual period as indications of future operating performance. If Candid is unable to develop and commercialize one or more of its drug candidates either alone or with collaborators, or if revenues from any drug candidate that receives regulatory approval are insufficient, Candid will not achieve profitability. Even if Candid does achieve profitability, it may not be able to sustain or increase profitability. If Candid is unable to achieve and then maintain profitability, the value of its securities will be adversely affected.

Candid will need to obtain substantial additional funding to complete the development and any commercialization of its current and any future drug candidates, which may cause dilution to Candid's stockholders. If Candid is unable to raise this capital when needed, it may be forced to delay, reduce or eliminate its research and development programs or other operations.

The development of biopharmaceutical drug candidates is capital-intensive. Candid expects to spend substantial amounts to advance its drug candidates into clinical development and to complete the clinical development of, seek regulatory approvals for and commercialize its drug candidates, if approved. Candid's expenses are expected to increase substantially in connection with its ongoing and planned development activities, particularly as it conducts its planned Phase 2 studies of cizutamig. In addition, as Candid's drug candidates progress through development and toward commercialization, Candid will need to make milestone payments to the licensors from whom it has in-licensed its drug candidates. Candid will require additional capital beyond the proceeds of the Concurrent Financing, which it may raise through public or private equity or debt financings or other capital sources, which may include strategic collaborations and other strategic arrangements with third parties, to enable Candid to complete the development and potential commercialization of its drug candidates or any future new drug candidates. Furthermore, upon the Closing, Candid expects to incur additional costs associated with operating as a public company. Adequate additional financing may not be available to Candid on acceptable terms, or at all. Candid's failure to raise capital as and when needed would have a negative effect on its financial condition and its ability to pursue its business strategy. In addition, attempting to secure additional financing may divert the time and attention of Candid's management from day-to-day activities and harm its development efforts.

As of December 31, 2025, Candid's cash and cash equivalents and short-term investments were $223.3 million. Based on Candid's planned use of the net proceeds of the Concurrent Financing, Rallybio Net Cash and its current cash and cash equivalents, Candid estimates that its funds will be sufficient to enable Candid to fund its operating expenses and capital expenditure requirements through 2030. In particular, Candid expects that the net proceeds from the Concurrent Financing, Rallybio Net Cash and its existing cash and cash equivalents will allow Candid to fund the advancement of its drug candidates through multiple clinical milestones, including the initiation and interim results of planned Phase 2 clinical studies for cizutamig in gMG and SARD-ILD, and Phase 1 clinical trials for CND261, CND319 and CND460. This estimate is based on assumptions that may prove to be wrong, and Candid could use its available capital resources sooner than currently expected. Changing circumstances could cause Candid to consume capital significantly faster than currently anticipated, and Candid may need to spend more than currently expected because of circumstances beyond its control. Further, data generated from Candid's Phase 1 clinical studies, investigator-initiated studies and/or compassionate use program for any of its drug candidates may inform future clinical development, resulting in a reprioritization of resources toward new clinical indications to pursue and the initiation of additional clinical studies in support of any new potential indications. Because the length of time and activities associated with successful development of Candid's drug candidates are highly uncertain, Candid is unable to estimate the actual funds it will require for development and any marketing and commercialization activities.

Candid's future funding requirements, both near and long-term, will depend on many factors, including, but not limited to:

- the number, scope, rate of progress and costs of Candid's planned clinical trials for cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460 and drug discovery and preclinical development activities for any future drug candidates;
- the number and scope of clinical programs Candid decides to pursue, including the number of indications it decides to pursue for a particular drug candidate;
- the scope and costs of manufacturing development for any of Candid's current or future drug candidates, including commercial manufacturing at scale, if any drug candidate receives marketing approval, including as a result of inflation or any supply chain issues;
- the costs associated with hiring additional personnel and consultants as Candid's business grows, including additional research and development personnel;
- the cost, timing and outcome of regulatory review of cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460 and any future drug candidates;
- the costs of preparing, filing and prosecuting patent applications, maintaining and enforcing Candid's intellectual property rights and defending intellectual property-related claims;
- the terms and timing of establishing and maintaining collaborations, licenses and other similar arrangements;
- the timing of any milestone and royalty payments to Candid's existing or future suppliers, collaborators or licensors;
- the costs associated with enhancing Candid's operational systems and being a public company;
- the extent to which Candid acquires or in-licenses other drug candidates and technologies; and
- the costs associated with commercializing cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460 or any future drug candidates, if they receive marketing approval.

In addition, Candid may seek additional capital due to favorable market conditions or strategic considerations, even if Candid believes it has sufficient funds for its current or future operating plans. To the extent that Candid raises additional capital through the sale of equity or convertible debt securities, stockholder ownership interests will be diluted, and the terms of these securities may include liquidation or other preferences that adversely affect stockholder rights. Debt financing and equity financing, if available, may involve agreements that include covenants limiting or restricting Candid's ability to take specific actions, such as incurring additional debt, making capital expenditures or declaring dividends. If Candid raises additional funds through collaborations, strategic alliances or marketing, distribution, licensing or other similar arrangements with third parties, Candid may be required to relinquish valuable rights to its technologies, future revenue streams, research programs or drug candidates or grant licenses on terms that may not be favorable to Candid. If Candid is unable to raise additional funds through equity or debt financings when needed, it may be required to delay, limit, reduce or terminate its product development or future commercialization efforts or grant rights to develop and market cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460, or any future drug candidates that Candid would otherwise prefer to develop and market itself.

Risks Related to the Discovery and Development of Candid's Drug Candidates

Candid's approach to the development of drug candidates to treat autoimmune diseases is novel and unproven, and Candid does not know whether it will be able to develop any drugs of commercial value, or if competing technological approaches will limit the commercial value of its drug candidates.

Candid's success depends on its ability to develop, obtain regulatory approval for and commercialize its drug candidates, cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460, which Candid believes represent relatively novel scientific approaches for the treatment of autoimmune diseases. Specifically, the development of cizutamig and CND261 was historically focused on the development of therapies for cancer. To date, the FDA has not approved any TCE therapies for the treatment of autoimmune diseases.

Candid's initial belief that cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460 may be developed as potential treatments for autoimmune diseases was based on Candid's interpretation of published third-party data evaluating autologous CAR-T candidates within a limited autoimmune disease patient cohort, and using TCEs to treat autoimmune diseases, which demonstrated clinical improvement following treatment. To date, Candid has generated early clinical data in a mix of Phase 1 clinical studies and IITs, none of which have been completed, and through compassionate use treatment. Although Candid is encouraged by the results observed to date, these studies are ongoing may not be representative of final data upon completion of the studies or in any planned or future clinical studies. In addition, data generated through IITs and compassionate use, including any past clinical data developed for oncology indications, may prove to be less reliable than data obtained in a controlled clinical trial and Candid is unable to rely on this data to determine dosing, safety or therapeutic effect in its trials given the different characteristics of the patient population and their disease burden of the oncology patients in past clinical trials. As a result, such findings should not be directly compared to Candid's planned and future clinical trials or the final results on its ongoing clinical trials, since there could be key differences, including patient population and clinical trial design. Moreover, the focus of Candid's clinical development strategy includes efficiently generating proof-of-concept clinical data across multiple autoimmune diseases and using this data to prioritize indication for further investment into mid to later stage clinical trials. This broad development strategy may yield varying results across indications that may require Candid to reprioritize indication selection in the future. As an organization, Candid is early in its development efforts in autoimmune diseases and may never succeed in demonstrating the safety, purity and potency, or efficacy for any of its drug candidates in clinical trials or in obtaining regulatory approval thereafter.

In addition, the biopharmaceutical industry is characterized by rapidly advancing technologies. Candid's future success will depend in part on its ability to maintain a competitive position with its scientific approach. If Candid fails to stay at the forefront of technological change in utilizing its approach to create and develop TCE bispecific antibodies, Candid may be unable to compete effectively. Candid's competitors may render Candid's approach obsolete or limit the commercial value of its drugs by advances in existing technological approaches or the development of new or different approaches. By contrast, adverse developments with respect to other companies that attempt to use a similar approach to Candid's may adversely impact the actual or perceived value and potential of Candid's drug candidates.

If any of these events occur, Candid may be forced to delay, modify or abandon its development efforts for a drug candidate or program, which would have a material adverse effect on Candid's business and could potentially cause Candid to cease operations.

Candid is early in its development efforts and only has two drug candidates, cizutamig and CND261, in early clinical development. All of Candid's other drug products, including CND319 and CND460, are in the preclinical or discovery stage. If Candid is unable to advance its drug candidates in clinical development, obtain regulatory approval and ultimately commercialize its drug candidates, or experiences significant delays in doing so, Candid's business will be materially harmed.

Candid is in the early stages of its clinical development for autoimmune indications and has two drug candidates, cizutamig and CND261, in early clinical development. Cizutamig is in multiple Phase 1 dose escalation trials in patients with gMG and SLE, as well as IITs in SARD-ILD, SSc and other diseases. In addition, based on early clinical data for cizutamig, Candid plans to advance cizutamig into multiple Phase 2 studies in gMG and SARD-ILD in the middle of 2026, prior to receipt of final Phase 1 clinical data in these indications. CND261 is in Phase 1 dose-escalation trials in patients with RA and SLE, as well as an IIT in ANCA-associated vasculitis. Although Candid believes that its ongoing efforts with, and early clinical data for, cizutamig and CND261 support further evaluation in autoimmune diseases, Candid cannot predict, and there can be no assurance that, it will observe positive results in its ongoing or planned trials. In addition, there is no assurance that Candid will realize any benefits from its plan to advance cizutamig into Phase 2 clinical development ahead of final Phase 1 clinical data.

Candid's other drug candidates are still in the preclinical or discovery stages. Candid will need to submit IND applications to the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory applications to applicable foreign regulatory authorities and receive allowance to proceed prior to initiating clinical trials for its drug candidates in the applicable jurisdiction and then progress these candidates through clinical development. For example, to date, Candid has not received approval by the FDA to initiate clinical trials in the United States and will need IND clearance prior to initiating any of its planned clinical trials in the United States. Although Candid has initiated clinical development activities in various geographies, including China, Europe and Australia, the acceptance of study data from clinical trials conducted outside the United States or another jurisdiction by the FDA or applicable foreign authority in support of any regulatory applications or submissions may be subject to certain conditions or may not be accepted at all.

Candid's ability to generate product revenues, which Candid does not expect will occur for many years, if ever, will depend heavily on the successful development and eventual commercialization of its current or future drug candidates. The success of Candid's current or future drug candidates will depend on several factors, including the following:

- allowance to proceed with clinical trials under INDs by the FDA or under similar regulatory submissions by applicable foreign regulatory authorities for the conduct of clinical trials of Candid's drug candidates and Candid's proposed design of future clinical trials;
- successful enrollment in, and timely completion of, clinical trials with favorable results;
- completion of preclinical studies with favorable results;
- sufficiency of Candid's financial and other resources to complete the necessary preclinical studies and clinical trials;
- demonstrating the safety, purity and potency, or efficacy of Candid's drug candidates to the satisfaction of the FDA and other applicable foreign regulatory authorities;
- the acceptance by the FDA and other regulatory authorities of data generated in geographies outside of the U.S. or such other jurisdictions;
- receipt of regulatory approvals from applicable regulatory authorities, including BLAs from the FDA and approvals from comparable foreign regulatory authorities, and maintaining such approvals;
- successfully developing subcutaneous or other formulations, if needed, of Candid's drug candidates and advancing them through clinical development;
- making arrangements with third-party manufacturers for the manufacture of Candid's drug candidates;
- establishing sales, marketing and distribution capabilities and launching commercial sales of Candid's drugs, if and when approved, whether alone or in collaboration with others;
- establishing and maintaining patent and trade secret protection or regulatory exclusivity for Candid's drug candidates;
- acceptance of any drugs Candid develops and their benefits and uses, if and when approved, by patients, the medical community and third-party payors;
- effectively competing with other therapies;
- obtaining and maintaining healthcare coverage and adequate reimbursement from third-party payors;
- maintaining an acceptable safety and efficacy profile of Candid's drugs following approval; and
- building and maintaining an organization of people who can successfully develop Candid's drug candidates.

Candid has not yet succeeded and may not succeed in demonstrating the safety, purity and potency, or efficacy, for any of its drug candidates in clinical trials or in obtaining regulatory approval thereafter. Given Candid's early stage of development, it will take several years before Candid can demonstrate the safety, purity and potency, or efficacy, of a drug candidate sufficient to warrant regulatory approval, if Candid can do so at all. If Candid is unable to develop, or obtain regulatory approval for, or, if approved, successfully commercialize, its drug candidates, Candid may not be able to generate sufficient revenue to continue its business.

As an organization, Candid has never completed any clinical trials and may be unable to do so for any of its drug candidates.

Candid is early in its development efforts for its drug candidates, has never completed any clinical trials, and will need to successfully complete its ongoing and planned Phase 1 trials and later-stage and pivotal clinical trials in order to obtain FDA or comparable foreign regulatory approval to market its drug candidates. Candid is conducting Phase 1 clinical trials for cizutamig and CND261, and has plans to conduct multiple Phase 2 clinical trials for cizutamig. For some of these Phase 2 clinical trials, Candid is seeking IND clearance from the FDA and other foreign regulatory agencies. Candid plans to summarize findings from its emerging data from Phase 1 studies, IITs and compassionate use studies, which were conducted in China, Europe and Australia, as the rationale for pursuing Phase 2 studies. There can be no assurance that the FDA or other foreign regulatory agencies will agree that the data, including any data from ongoing Phase 1 clinical trials, submitted as part of Candid's IND or other foreign regulatory filings support IND or other foreign regulatory clearance for autoimmune indications. For example, the FDA has previously informed Candid that its Phase 1 oncology data for cizutamig would not support the IND filing and proposed Phase 1 clinical trial for cizutamig in autoimmune diseases without further preclinical testing due to potential differences in T-cell responses between oncology and autoimmune patients. Inability to obtain these clearances may hurt Candid's ability to initiate and conduct these trials in a timely manner.

Additionally, Candid is planning to conduct its first Phase 1 clinical trials for CND319 and CND460; however, Candid must first receive regulatory clearance from the FDA and other regulatory agencies, which may not occur on Candid's expected timing or at all. There can be no assurance that the FDA or other foreign regulatory authorities will agree that the data submitted as part of Candid's IND or other foreign regulatory filings support IND or other foreign regulatory clearance for autoimmune indications.

Candid has had limited interactions with the FDA and other comparable foreign regulatory authorities and cannot be certain of the number of clinical trials Candid's drug candidates will be required to undergo or the designs of such trials, or if such authorities will require additional preclinical studies prior to clearing Candid's INDs or other regulatory filings. As mentioned above, as a result of previous interactions with the FDA Candid has determined to develop our product candidates within the U.S. at this time given the FDA recommendation to additional preclinical studies and modifications to the study design. Although Candid believes the data generated globally in multiple autoimmune indications will be sufficient to enable clinical development in the U.S. and clearance of an IND with the FDA, there can be no assurances as to what level of clinical data the FDA will require in order to clear an IND and begin a study in the U.S., or whether the FDA will require modifications to the study design which could slow enrollment in the study globally. Consequently, Candid may be unable to successfully and efficiently execute and complete necessary clinical trials in a way that leads to submission and regulatory approval of any of its drug candidates. Candid may require more time and incur greater costs than its competitors and may not succeed in obtaining regulatory approvals of its drug candidates. Failure to commence or complete, or delays in, Candid's planned clinical trials could prevent or delay Candid in submitting marketing applications, including BLAs, for and commercializing its drug candidates.

Clinical trials are expensive, time-consuming, difficult to design and implement, and have an uncertain outcome. Any difficulties or delays in the commencement or completion, or the termination or suspension, of Candid's current or planned clinical trials could result in increased costs to Candid, delay or limit Candid's ability to generate revenue or adversely affect Candid's commercial prospects.

Before obtaining regulatory approvals for the commercial sale of any of its drug candidates, Candid must demonstrate that its drug candidates are safe, pure and potent, or effective, for use in each intended indication and have an adequate risk versus benefit profile in their intended patient populations and for their intended use.

Preclinical and clinical testing is complex, expensive, takes many years to complete, and is subject to uncertainty. Candid's planned clinical trials may not be conducted as planned or completed on schedule, if at all. Delays and failures can occur at any time during the clinical trial process. Candid cannot predict with any certainty whether or when it might complete a given clinical trial. Events that may prevent successful or timely commencement, readouts, and completion of clinical trials and preclinical studies include:

- inability to obtain animals or materials to initiate and generate sufficient preclinical, toxicology or other in vivo or in vitro data to support the initiation or continuation of clinical trials;
- delays in reaching agreement or consensus with the FDA, or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities as to the design or implementation of Candid's clinical trials, or failure to do so;
- delays in or failure to obtain regulatory approval or allowance to commence a clinical trial;
- delays in or failure to reach an agreement on acceptable terms with clinical trial sites or prospective contract research organizations ("CROs"), the terms of which can be subject to extensive negotiation and may vary significantly among different CROs and clinical trial sites;
- delays in or failure to obtain institutional review board ("IRB") approval or positive ethics committee opinion at each clinical trial site;
- inability to source any comparator drug in head-to-head studies;

- IRBs or ethics committees refusing to approve or provide a positive opinion, suspending or terminating the trial at an investigational site, precluding enrollment of additional subjects, or withdrawing their approval or positive opinion of a clinical trial;
- delays in or failure to identify and recruit suitable clinical investigators, or to recruit patients to participate in a clinical trial;
- patients choosing an alternative product for the indications for which Candid is developing its drug candidates, or participating in competing clinical trials;
- delays in or failure to have patients complete a clinical trial or return for post-treatment follow-up;
- clinical sites, CROs or other third parties deviating from trial protocol or dropping out of a trial;
- the subcutaneous formulation of Candid's drug candidates may yield different results in comparison to the intravenous formulation, which could impact Candid's clinical development, including trial enrollment;
- failures by Candid or its CROs to perform in accordance with the FDA's GCP requirements, or applicable regulatory requirements or guidelines in other countries;
- failure in addressing patient safety concerns that arise during the course of a trial, including occurrence of adverse events associated with the drug candidate that are viewed to outweigh such drug candidate's potential benefits;
- lack of adequate funding to complete a trial;
- selection of clinical endpoints that require prolonged periods of clinical observation or extended analysis of the resulting data;
- failure to add a sufficient number of clinical trial sites; or
- failure to manufacture sufficient quantities of drug candidate for use in clinical trials.

Even if Candid's future clinical trials are completed as planned, their results may not support the safety, purity and potency, or effectiveness of Candid's drug candidates for their targeted indications or support continued clinical development of such drug candidates. For example, in clinical trials that are based on preclinical studies and early clinical trials, it is not uncommon to observe unexpected results, and many drug candidates fail in clinical development despite very promising early results. Moreover, preclinical and clinical data may be susceptible to varying interpretations and analyses. A number of companies in the biopharmaceutical industry have suffered significant setbacks in clinical development even after achieving promising results in earlier studies. Furthermore, because Candid is developing its drug candidates across several indications, setbacks in one indication may negatively impact its development in other indications.

In addition, even if Candid's ongoing and planned trials are successfully completed, the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities may not interpret the results as Candid does or may not accept data from clinical trials conducted outside such jurisdictions, and more trials could be required before Candid submits its drug candidates for approval, if ever. To the extent that the results of Candid's clinical trials are not satisfactory to the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities for support of a marketing application, Candid may be required to expend significant resources, which may not be available to Candid, to conduct additional trials in support of potential approval of its drug candidates. Furthermore, many of the factors that cause, or lead to, a delay in the commencement or completion of clinical trials may also ultimately lead to the denial of regulatory approval of Candid's drug candidates.

Other unforeseen events Candid may experience during, or as a result of, clinical trials that could delay or prevent its ability to receive regulatory approval or commercialize its drug candidates or significantly increase the cost of such trials, include:

- Candid may experience changes in regulatory requirements or guidance, or receive feedback from regulatory authorities that requires Candid to modify the design of its clinical trials;
- clinical trials of Candid's drug candidates may produce negative or inconclusive results, and Candid may decide, or regulators may require Candid, to conduct additional clinical trials or abandon development programs;

- the number of patients required for clinical trials of Candid's drug candidates may be larger than Candid anticipates, enrollment in these clinical trials may be slower than Candid anticipates or participants may drop out of these clinical trials at a higher rate than Candid anticipates;
- Candid's third-party contractors, including its CROs, may fail to comply with protocol, legal and regulatory requirements and scientific standards or fail to meet their contractual obligations to Candid in a timely manner, or at all;
- Candid or its investigators might have to suspend or terminate clinical trials of its drug candidates for various reasons, including non-compliance with regulatory requirements, a finding that Candid's drug candidates have undesirable side effects or other unexpected characteristics, or a finding that the participants are being exposed to unacceptable health risks;
- adverse events suffered by clinical trial participants, whether or not such adverse events are ultimately deemed to be related to Candid's drug candidates;
- the cost of clinical trials of Candid's drug candidates may be greater than anticipated and Candid may elect not to cover the costs;
- the FDA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities may require Candid to monitor patients via hospitalization for a certain period of time after dose administration of Candid's drug candidates;
- the supply or quality of Candid's drug candidates or other materials necessary to conduct clinical trials of its drug candidates may be insufficient or inadequate;
- regulators may revise the requirements for approving Candid's drug candidates, or such requirements may not be as Candid anticipates; and
- any future collaborators that conduct clinical trials may face any of the above issues, and may conduct clinical trials in ways they view as advantageous to them but that are suboptimal for Candid.

If Candid is required to conduct additional clinical trials or other testing of its drug candidates beyond those that it currently contemplates, if Candid experiences delays in the commencement or completion of, or is unable to successfully complete clinical trials of its drug candidates or other testing, or if the results of these trials or tests are not positive or are only modestly positive or if there are safety concerns, the commercial prospects of Candid's drug candidates could be harmed, and Candid's ability to generate revenues from its drug candidates may be delayed. In addition, if any of these risks were to materialize, Candid could:

- incur significant unplanned costs;
- be delayed in obtaining regulatory approval for its drug candidates or not obtain regulatory approval at all;
- obtain regulatory approval in some countries and not in others;
- obtain regulatory approval for indications or patient populations that are not as broad as intended or desired;
- obtain regulatory approval with labeling that includes significant use or distribution restrictions or safety warnings, including boxed warnings;
- be subject to additional post-marketing testing requirements; or
- have the product removed from the market after obtaining regulatory approval.

Any of these occurrences may harm Candid's business, financial condition and results of operations.

Candid's drug candidates may cause serious adverse events or undesirable side effects or have other properties that may delay or prevent regulatory approval, cause Candid to suspend or discontinue clinical trials, limit the commercial profile of an approved label, or result in significant negative consequences following regulatory approval, if any.

Candid has not yet completed any human clinical trials with its drug candidates. Candid has initiated Phase 1 clinical trials and IITs for cizutamig and CND261, and intends to initiate future Phase 1 clinical studies and IITs for CND319 and CND460. Undesirable side effects that may be caused by Candid's drug candidates could cause Candid or regulatory authorities, the DSMBs for such trials, IRBs or ethics committees of the institutions in which such trials are being conducted to interrupt, delay, suspend or terminate clinical trials and could result in a more restrictive label than anticipated or the delay or denial of regulatory approval by the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities for any or all target indications. Results of Candid's clinical trials could reveal a high and unacceptable severity and prevalence of side effects or unexpected characteristics, and Candid may not be able to complete a clinical trial for cizutamig, CND261, CND319, CND460 or any of its future drug candidates on the timeline it expects or at all.

While the data reported to date from the ongoing clinical evaluation for cizutamig and CND261 indicate that the drug candidates have been generally well tolerated, there remains a risk of serious adverse events. It is possible that increased occurrences of adverse events and serious adverse events, including cytokine release syndrome ("CRS"), neurotoxicity or infections will occur in human subjects during ongoing and planned clinical trials and the severity and rate of these events may not be acceptable in patients with autoimmune diseases. Any such findings could cause delays in completion or cancellation of clinical programs.

Furthermore, clinical trials by their nature utilize a sample of the potential patient population. With a limited number of patients and limited duration of exposure, rare and severe side effects of Candid's drug candidates or those of Candid's competitors may only be uncovered when a significantly larger number of patients have been exposed to the drug candidate. For example, while Candid believes that cizutamig and CND261 have demonstrated manageable tolerability profiles thus far, such data is limited to a very small sample size and there can be no assurance that cizutamig, CND261 or any of Candid's other drug candidates will not cause more severe and/or serious side effects in a greater proportion of patients.

In addition, while several TCEs have been approved for oncology indications, Candid believes the FDA and comparable foreign regulatory authorities may apply a different risk-benefit threshold to Candid's drug candidates pursuing autoimmune indications such that any potential harmful side effects that may outweigh the benefits of such drug candidates would require Candid to cease clinical trials or abandon or limit its development of these drug candidates or would cause the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities to deny marketing applications for these drug candidates. Accordingly, the risks of negative impact from TCE antibody toxicities may therefore be higher for Candid's autoimmune programs than for the oncology programs of others. Furthermore, to date, the FDA has not approved any TCE therapies for commercialization in an autoimmune indication; and therefore, what the FDA may require to establish an acceptable safety profile is not yet known.

In addition, further undesirable side effects, dose-limiting adverse events, or deaths in clinical trials with Candid's drug candidates may cause the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities to place a clinical hold on the associated clinical trials, to require additional studies, dose de-escalation, or additional protocol amendments, or otherwise to delay or deny approval of our drug candidates for any or all targeted indications. Treatment-related side effects could also affect site initiation, patient recruitment or the ability of enrolled patients to complete the trial or result in potential product liability claims. Even if serious adverse events are unrelated to study treatment, such occurrences could affect patient enrollment or the ability of enrolled patients to complete the clinical trial. In addition, these side effects may not be appropriately recognized or managed by the treating medical staff. Candid expects to have to train medical personnel using its drug candidates to understand the side effect profiles for Candid's clinical trials and upon commercialization of any of Candid's drug candidates, if approved. Inadequate training in recognizing or managing the potential side effects of Candid's drug candidates could result in patient injury or death. Any of these occurrences may harm Candid's business, financial condition and prospects significantly.

Cizutamig's mechanism of action results in deep and prolonged B-cell depletion, including memory B-cells, which may lead to hypogammaglobulinemia, loss of vaccine-mediated immunity, and increased infection risk that could limit its clinical utility or require complex patient management strategies.

Cizutamig is designed to achieve deep depletion of BCMA-expressing B-cells and plasma cells, which is central to its therapeutic mechanism in autoimmune diseases. However, this deep depletion extends beyond pathogenic B-cell populations to include memory B-cells that are critical for maintaining protective immunity against infectious pathogens. Clinical experience to date has demonstrated that cizutamig treatment results in prolonged B-cell depletion and hypogammaglobulinemia, with reduced levels of immunoglobulin G ("IgG"), IgA, and IgM observed in treated patients.

Hypogammaglobulinemia, defined as abnormally low levels of antibodies in the blood, occurred in 39% of autoimmune patients treated with cizutamig in Candid's clinical studies to date. While Candid has managed this complication through prophylactic administration of intravenous immunoglobulin ("IVIG") therapy, hypogammaglobulinemia represents a significant safety concern that may:

- Increase the risk of serious and opportunistic infections. Patients with low immunoglobulin levels are at heightened risk for bacterial, viral, and fungal infections, particularly infections of the respiratory tract and sinopulmonary system. In Candid's clinical experience to date, Candid has observed infections including upper respiratory tract infections (13% of patients) and three serious infectious adverse events (pneumonia and COVID-19), all of which resolved with treatment. However, as Candid treats larger patient populations over longer periods, Candid may observe more frequent or severe infections, including life-threatening opportunistic infections.
- Result in loss of vaccine-mediated immunity. Deep depletion of memory B-cells and plasma cells may eliminate antibodies generated from prior vaccinations, leaving patients vulnerable to vaccine-preventable diseases such as measles, mumps, rubella, varicella, tetanus, diphtheria, pertussis, and other serious infections. Patients may lose protective antibody titers and require re-vaccination after B-cell reconstitution. However, the ability of patients to mount adequate immune responses to re-vaccination following deep B-cell depletion is uncertain and may be impaired, potentially leaving some patients without adequate protection against vaccine-preventable diseases. This risk is exacerbated in areas with low vaccination rates or outbreaks of vaccine-preventable diseases.
- Require complex and costly long-term management. Managing hypogammaglobulinemia may require regular IVIG infusions, which are expensive, time-consuming, require intravenous access, and carry their own risks including allergic reactions, hemolysis, thrombosis, and renal dysfunction. IVIG may need to be administered every 3-4 weeks for extended periods, potentially for many months or even years depending on the duration of B-cell depletion and immunoglobulin suppression. This requirement could significantly increase the overall cost of treatment, reduce patient quality of life, and create practical barriers to therapy administration, particularly if patients must receive IVIG infusions at specialized treatment centers. Additionally, global IVIG supply constraints or increased global supply costs could limit the availability of this supportive therapy, make it prohibitively costly or harm the commercial opportunity for Candid's TCE therapies.
- Limit the acceptable patient population. Patients with pre-existing immunodeficiency, active infections, or other risk factors for serious infections may not be appropriate candidates for cizutamig therapy. This could substantially narrow the eligible patient population and limit the commercial potential of cizutamig.
- Create challenges in clinical trial design and execution. The need to monitor and manage hypogammaglobulinemia and its consequences may require more frequent patient monitoring, specialized laboratory assessments, and intensive supportive care infrastructure, which could slow enrollment, increase trial costs, and make it more difficult to conduct trials in community practice settings.

Furthermore, the duration and reversibility of B-cell depletion following cizutamig treatment remain incompletely characterized. While Candid has observed B-cell reconstitution in some patients beginning approximately four months after treatment, with returning B-cells displaying a naive phenotype, the timeline for full immune reconstitution and restoration of normal B-cell function, including memory B-cell populations, may vary considerably among patients and could extend for many months or years. Prolonged B-cell depletion could result in extended periods of increased infection risk and the need for ongoing immunoglobulin replacement therapy or other supportive measures.

If regulatory authorities determine that the infection risk or the complexity of managing hypogammaglobulinemia and loss of vaccine immunity outweighs the potential clinical benefit of cizutamig, they may:

- refuse to approve cizutamig for marketing;
- require additional clinical trials with more intensive safety monitoring;
- approve cizutamig only with significant restrictions, such as a REMS or comparable foreign strategies, that could include requirements for certification of healthcare facilities, prescriber training, patient enrollment in a registry, mandatory laboratory monitoring, or restricted distribution;

- require black box warnings or other labeling restrictions that could significantly limit physician willingness to prescribe and patient willingness to accept treatment; and
- limit approved indications to only the most severe forms of autoimmune disease where the benefit-risk profile is most favorable.

Even if cizutamig is approved, the infection risk and need for complex ongoing management may limit physician adoption, reduce patient compliance, result in treatment discontinuations, and ultimately limit the commercial success of the product. Additionally, if serious or fatal infections occur in post-marketing use, regulatory authorities may require additional safety studies, impose new restrictions, or in extreme cases, require withdrawal of the product from the market.

The occurrence of serious infections or deaths attributable to hypogammaglobulinemia or impaired immunity in Candid's clinical trials or following any regulatory approval could also result in product liability claims, damage to Candid's reputation, and negative impacts on Candid's stock price and business prospects. Any of these outcomes could materially and adversely affect Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects.

Candid has conducted, or plans to conduct, its initial clinical studies for cizutamig, CND261, and its other drug candidates outside of the United States. However, the FDA and other foreign equivalents may not accept data from such trials, in which case Candid's development plans will be delayed, which could materially harm Candid's business.

Candid has conducted its initial clinical studies for cizutamig and CND261 in China, Europe and Australia, and plans to continue to conduct additional clinical studies in China, Europe, Australia as well as other foreign geographies. The acceptance of study data from clinical trials conducted outside the United States or another jurisdiction by the FDA or applicable foreign authority may be subject to certain conditions or may not be accepted at all. In cases where data from foreign clinical trials are intended to serve as the sole basis for marketing approval in the United States, the FDA will generally not approve the application on the basis of foreign data alone unless (i) the data are applicable to the U.S. population and U.S. medical practice; (ii) the trials were performed by clinical investigators of recognized competence and pursuant to GCP regulations; and (iii) the data may be considered valid without the need for an on-site inspection by the FDA, or if the FDA considers such inspection to be necessary, the FDA is able to validate the data through an on-site inspection or other appropriate means. In addition, even where the foreign study data are not intended to serve as the sole basis for approval, the FDA will not accept the data as support for an application for marketing approval unless the study is well-designed and well-conducted in accordance with GCP requirements and the FDA is able to validate the data from the study through an onsite inspection if deemed necessary. Many foreign regulatory authorities have similar approval requirements. In addition, such foreign trials would be subject to the applicable local laws of the foreign jurisdictions where the trials are conducted. There can be no assurance that the FDA or any applicable foreign authority will accept data from trials conducted outside of the United States or the applicable jurisdiction. If the FDA or any applicable foreign authority does not accept such data, it would result in the need for additional trials, which could be costly and time-consuming, and which may result in current or future drug candidates that Candid may develop not receiving approval for commercialization in the applicable jurisdiction.

Candid's global regulatory strategy relies on the FDA and other foreign regulatory authorities accepting its clinical data generated in China, Europe, Australia and other foreign countries; however, there can be no assurance the FDA or applicable foreign authorities will accept data from any other clinical studies that Candid may conduct in such foreign countries and, even if such data is accepted as a basis for the initiation of trials in the U.S. or such foreign countries, the FDA or such other foreign regulatory authorities may still require Candid to repeat or conduct additional clinical studies that would cause a delay in its timelines. If the FDA or applicable foreign authorities do not accept any such data, Candid would likely be required to conduct additional Phase 1 or Phase 2 clinical studies, which would be costly and time consuming, and delay aspects of Candid's development plan, which could harm Candid's business.

Conducting clinical trials outside the United States exposes Candid to additional risks, including risks associated with:

- additional foreign regulatory requirements;

- foreign exchange fluctuations;
- political and economic risks relevant to such foreign countries;
- compliance with foreign manufacturing, customs, shipment and storage requirements;
- cultural differences in medical practice and clinical research; and
- diminished protection of intellectual property in some countries.

Any such risks could materially and adversely affect Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects.

Enrollment and retention of patients in clinical trials is an expensive and time-consuming process subject to various external factors beyond Candid's control that may cause delays or complications.

The timely completion of clinical trials in accordance with their protocols depends, among other things, on Candid's ability to enroll a sufficient number of patients who remain in the trial until its conclusion. Clinical trial recruitment in autoimmune diseases has been challenging as several third-party drug candidates are being pursued for the same autoimmune diseases and there is only a limited set of eligible patients for the given autoimmune diseases Candid is targeting. For example, Candid is aware of several active clinical trials evaluating drug candidates for the treatment of myasthenia gravis, ILD, SLE, RA, IgA nephropathy ("IgAN"), among others, and many of the sponsors have highlighted challenges in patient recruitment. Candid may not be able to initiate or continue clinical trials for its drug candidates if Candid is unable to locate and enroll a sufficient number of eligible patients to participate in these trials' conclusion as required by the FDA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities. Candid may be required to monitor patients via hospitalization for a certain period of time after dose administration of its drug candidates, which would negatively impact Candid's ability to timely enroll patients.

The eligibility criteria of Candid's clinical trials, once established, may further limit the pool of available trial participants. If the actual number of patients with these diseases is smaller than Candid anticipates, Candid may encounter difficulties in enrolling patients in its clinical trials, thereby delaying or preventing development and approval of Candid's drug candidates. Even once enrolled, Candid may be unable to retain a sufficient number of patients to complete any of its trials.

Candid may experience difficulty in patient enrollment in its clinical trials for a number of reasons. The enrollment of patients depends on many factors, including:

- the patient eligibility criteria defined in the protocol;
- the size and nature of the patient population required for analysis of the trial's endpoints;
- the proximity of patients to study sites;
- the design of the trial;
- the existing body of safety and efficacy data for the drug candidate;
- the number and nature of competing treatments and ongoing clinical trials of competing therapies for the same indication;
- Candid's ability to recruit clinical trial investigators with appropriate competencies and experience;
- efforts to facilitate timely enrollment in clinical trials;
- patient referral practices of physicians;
- the ability to monitor patients adequately during and after treatment;
- clinicians' and patients' perceptions as to the potential advantages of the drug candidate being studied in relation to other available therapies, including new drugs that may be approved for the indications Candid is investigating;
- Candid's ability to obtain and maintain patient consents for participation in its clinical trials; and
- the risk that patients enrolled in clinical trials will not remain in the trial through the completion of evaluation.

Competing with numerous ongoing trials and established therapies poses a challenge in recruiting patients. Candid's clinical trials may also compete with other clinical trials of drug candidates that are in a similar immunotherapy area as Candid's drug candidates, and this competition could reduce the number and types of patients available to Candid, because some patients who might have opted to enroll in Candid's trials may instead opt to enroll in a trial being conducted by one of Candid's competitors. Additionally, for any future clinical trials for the treatment of other autoimmune diseases, the number of qualified clinical investigators is limited, so Candid may conduct some of its clinical trials at the same clinical trial sites that some of Candid's competitors use, which will reduce the number of patients who are available for Candid's clinical trials at such clinical trial site. Recent announcements of clinical trial plans by various immunotherapy companies targeting autoimmune diseases, including those Candid intends to treat, could intensify future competition for investigators and patients. Failure to enroll a sufficient number of patients promptly could lead to delays or failure in completing Candid's trials, hindering the development and commercialization of Candid's drug candidates within certain patient subgroups or altogether.

Since the number of patients that have been and will be dosed in Candid's ongoing clinical trials is small, the results from such clinical trials, once completed, may be less reliable than or may not be predictive of results achieved in larger clinical trials, which may hinder Candid's efforts to obtain regulatory approval for its drug candidates.

The preliminary results of clinical trials with smaller sample sizes can be disproportionately influenced by various biases associated with the conduct of small clinical trials, such as the potential failure of the smaller sample size to accurately depict the characteristics of the broader patient population, which limits the ability to generalize the results across a broader community, thus making the clinical trial results less reliable than clinical trials with a larger number of patients. As a result, there may be less certainty that such drug candidates would achieve a statistically significant effect in any future clinical trials.

In addition, Candid is conducting numerous IITs and has generated data pursuant to compassionate use treatment. Such data is limited to a very small sample size, but may still be relied upon by Candid to inform future clinical development and allocation of resources. If such IIT data is not indicative of data that would have been generated in a larger clinical trial, Candid's assumptions in support of its clinical development activities may prove to be inaccurate and the FDA or other comparable regulatory authorities may require Candid to conduct additional and larger clinical trials than Candid may plan.

If Candid conducts any future clinical trials of its current and future drug candidates, Candid may not achieve a positive or statistically significant result or the same level of statistical significance, if any, that Candid might have anticipated based on prior results. Such failure could hinder Candid's efforts to obtain regulatory approval for its drug candidates.

Results of any patient who receives Candid's drug candidate in an IIT, compassionate use program or expanded access program should not be viewed as representative of how the drug candidate will perform in Candid's clinical trials and may not be able to be used to establish safety or efficacy for regulatory approval.

Before seeking regulatory approval for any of its drug candidates, Candid must demonstrate statistically significant evidence of both safety and effectiveness in well-controlled clinical trials. However, Candid does not control the design, administration or timing of IITs, compassionate use programs, and expanded access programs. Candid relies on investigators and physicians to ensure their compliance with clinical and regulatory requirements when using Candid's drug candidates for these trials. Failure to comply could expose Candid to liability.

While IITs, compassionate use programs and expanded access programs may provide valuable insights, they are not a substitute for, or intended to replace, Candid's clinical trials and their results cannot be formally relied on or used to establish safety or efficacy for regulatory approval. In fact, they may identify concerns that could impact Candid's findings or ongoing trials, potentially delaying or jeopardizing regulatory approval from the FDA or other regulatory bodies. If results from IITs, compassionate use programs and expanded access programs are inconsistent with or differ from Candid's sponsored trials or raise concerns regarding Candid's drug candidates, regulatory authorities may question Candid's sponsored trial results and subject them to greater scrutiny than they otherwise would. This could result in the need for additional clinical data, delaying clinical development and approval of Candid's drug candidates. In addition, while IITs could be useful to inform Candid's own clinical development efforts, there is no guarantee that Candid will be able to use the data from these trials to form the basis for regulatory approval of its drug candidates.

Moreover, the patient population in such trials is at high risk for serious adverse events. If these events are attributed to Candid's drug candidates, it could negatively impact their safety profile, leading to delays or failure in obtaining regulatory approval or successfully commercializing Candid's drug candidates.

In summary, while IITs, compassionate use programs and expanded access programs offer valuable insights, they also pose regulatory and operational challenges that could impact Candid's ability to bring its drug candidates to market.

Interim, topline and preliminary data from Candid's clinical trials or preclinical studies that Candid announces or publishes from time to time may not be predictive of future results and may change as more patient data become available and are subject to audit and verification procedures, which could result in material changes to the final data.

From time to time, Candid may publicly disclose interim, topline or preliminary data from its preclinical studies, clinical trials or planned clinical trials, which is based on a preliminary analysis of then-available data. The results and related findings and conclusions are subject to change following a more comprehensive review of the data related to the particular study or trial. Candid also makes assumptions, estimations, calculations and conclusions as part of its analyses of data, and Candid may not have received or had the opportunity to fully and carefully evaluate all data. As a result, the interim, topline or preliminary results that Candid reports may differ from future results of the same studies, or different conclusions or considerations may qualify such results, once additional data have been received and fully evaluated. Topline and preliminary data also remain subject to audit and verification procedures that may result in the final data being materially different from the preliminary or topline data Candid previously published. As a result, such data should be viewed with caution until the final data are available. Additionally, while Candid believes the early clinical trial results from the Phase 1 portions of the clinical trials for cizutamig and CND261 as well as IITs and compassionate use are favorable, Candid may not see similar or favorable results in the future and Candid is unable to rely on any past clinical data developed for oncology indications or in IITs or compassionate use to determine dosing, safety or therapeutic effect in its trials given the different characteristics of the patient population and their disease burden of the oncology patients in past clinical trials.

From time to time, Candid may also disclose interim data from its clinical trials. Interim data from clinical trials that Candid may subsequently complete are subject to the risk that one or more of the reported clinical outcomes may materially change as patient enrollment continues and more patient data become available. Adverse differences between interim, topline or preliminary data and final data could significantly harm Candid's business prospects. Further, disclosure of such data by Candid or by Candid's competitors could result in volatility in the price of Candid Common Stock.

Further, others, including regulatory authorities, may not accept or agree with Candid's assumptions, estimates, calculations, conclusions or analyses or may interpret or weigh the importance of data differently, which could impact the value of the particular program, the approvability or commercialization of the particular drug candidate or product and Candid in general. In addition, the information Candid chooses to publicly disclose regarding a particular study or clinical trial is based on what is typically extensive information, and investors or others may not agree with what Candid determines is the material or otherwise appropriate information to include in its disclosure, and any information Candid determines not to disclose may ultimately be deemed significant with respect to future decisions, conclusions, views, activities or otherwise regarding a particular product, drug candidate or Candid's business. If the interim, topline or preliminary data that Candid reports differ from actual results, or if others including comparable foreign regulatory authorities, disagree with the conclusions reached, Candid's ability to obtain approval for, and commercialize, its drug candidates may be harmed, which could harm Candid's business, operating results, prospects or financial condition.

Candid's preclinical programs may experience delays or may never advance to clinical trials, which would adversely affect Candid's ability to obtain regulatory approvals or commercialize these programs on a timely basis or at all.

Before Candid can commence clinical trials for its drug candidates CND319 and CND460, Candid must complete extensive preclinical testing and studies that support its planned INDs in the United States and comparable applications outside the United States.

Candid cannot be certain of the timely completion or outcome of its preclinical testing and studies and cannot predict if the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities will accept Candid's proposed clinical programs or if the outcome of Candid's preclinical testing and studies will ultimately support the further development of its programs. As a result, Candid may not submit INDs or similar applications for its preclinical programs within its anticipated timelines, if at all, and submission of INDs or similar applications may not result in the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities allowing clinical trials to begin.

Conducting preclinical testing is a lengthy, time-consuming and expensive process. The length of time may vary substantially according to the type, complexity and novelty of the program, and often can be several years or more per program. Any delays in preclinical testing and studies conducted by Candid or potential future partners may cause Candid to incur additional operating expenses. The commencement and rate of completion of preclinical studies for a drug candidate may be delayed by many factors, including, for example:

- inability to generate sufficient preclinical or other in vivo or in vitro data to support the initiation of clinical trials;
- dependence on third parties to conduct, supervise and monitor Candid's planned preclinical studies;
- delays in reaching a consensus with regulatory authorities on study design; and
- the FDA (or comparable foreign regulatory authorities) not allowing Candid to rely on previous findings of safety and efficacy for other similar but approved products and published scientific literature.

Moreover, because standards for pre-clinical assessment are evolving and may change rapidly, even if Candid reaches an agreement with the FDA on a pre-IND proposal, the FDA may not accept the IND submissions as presented, in which case, the clinical trial timeline could be delayed.

Candid may not identify or discover other drug candidates, may expend its limited resources to pursue a particular drug candidate or a particular indication and may fail to capitalize on programs, drug candidates or indications that may present a greater commercial opportunity or for which there is a greater likelihood of success.

Candid's business depends upon its ability to identify, develop and commercialize drug candidates. Candid has explored and may continue to explore strategic collaborations for the discovery of new drug candidates. Research programs to identify drug candidates require substantial technical, financial and human resources, whether or not any drug candidates are ultimately identified. In addition, drug candidates against targets for different autoimmune diseases may require changes to Candid's manufacturing processes, which may slow down development of or make it impossible to manufacture Candid's drug candidates. Candid's research programs may initially show promise in identifying potential drug candidates, yet fail to yield drug candidates for clinical development for many reasons, including the following:

- the research methodology or drug discovery approach used may not be successful in identifying potential drug candidates;
- competitors may develop alternatives that render Candid's drug candidates obsolete or less attractive;
- Candid may choose to cease development if Candid determines that clinical results do not show promise;
- drug candidates Candid develops may nevertheless be covered by third parties' patents or other exclusive rights;
- a drug candidate may be shown to have harmful side effects or other characteristics that indicate it is unlikely to be effective or otherwise does not meet applicable regulatory criteria; and
- a drug candidate may not be accepted as safe and effective by patients, the medical community or third-party payors.

Because Candid has limited resources, Candid must choose to pursue and fund the development of specific types of treatment, and select certain other therapies to test in combination with Candid's drug candidates or treatment for a specific type of autoimmune disease. As a result, Candid may forgo or delay pursuit of opportunities with other programs, drug candidates or combinations or for indications that could have had greater commercial potential. Candid's resource allocation and other decisions may cause Candid to fail to identify and capitalize on viable potential programs, drug candidates or indications. In addition, Candid's estimates regarding the potential market for its drug candidates could be inaccurate. As a result, Candid's spending on current and future programs, drug candidates or specific indications may not yield any commercially viable drugs. For example, Candid is planning to initiate Phase 2 clinical trials of cizutamig in gMG and SARD-ILD based on early clinical data from a small sample size and may prioritize an indication that has less potential once final clinical data or clinical data from a larger sample size becomes available.

In addition, if Candid does not accurately evaluate the commercial potential or target market for a particular indication or drug candidate, Candid may relinquish valuable rights to that drug candidate through collaborations, licenses, and other similar arrangements in cases in which it would have been more advantageous for Candid to retain sole development and commercialization rights to such drug candidate. Alternatively, Candid may allocate internal resources to a drug candidate in a therapeutic area in which it would have been more advantageous to enter into a partnering arrangement.

If any of these events occur, Candid may be forced to abandon or delay its development efforts with respect to a particular program, drug candidate or indication or fail to develop a potentially successful drug candidate.

The affected populations for Candid's drug candidates may be smaller than Candid or third parties currently project, which may affect the addressable markets for Candid's drug candidates.

Candid selects the targets for development of its drug candidates based on a number of factors, including the estimated patient populations in which Candid believes there is a meaningful addressable market opportunity. However, Candid's projections of the number of people who have the diseases Candid is seeking to treat, as well as the subset of people with these diseases who have the potential to benefit from treatment with Candid's drug candidates, are estimates based on Candid's knowledge and understanding of these diseases. The total addressable market opportunity for Candid's drug candidates will ultimately depend upon a number of factors, including the diagnosis and treatment criteria included in the final label, if approved for sale in specified indications, acceptance by the medical community, patient access, alternative therapies and product pricing and reimbursement. Incidence and prevalence estimates are frequently based on information and assumptions that are not exact and may not be appropriate, and the methodology is forward-looking and speculative. The process Candid has used in developing an estimated incidence and prevalence range for the indications Candid is targeting has involved collating limited data from multiple sources.

Accordingly, the incidence and prevalence estimates included in this proxy statement/prospectus should be viewed with caution. Further, the data and statistical information used in this proxy statement/prospectus, including estimates derived from them, may differ from information and estimates made by Candid's competitors or from current or future studies conducted by independent sources.

International trade policies, including tariffs, sanctions and trade barriers may adversely affect Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

Candid operates in a global economy, which includes utilizing third-party suppliers in several countries outside the United States. There is inherent risk, based on the complex relationships among the United States and the countries in which Candid conducts its business, that political, diplomatic and national security factors can lead to global trade restrictions and changes in trade policies and export regulations that may adversely affect Candid's business and operations. The current international trade and regulatory environment is subject to significant ongoing uncertainty including related legal challenges. The U.S. government has recently announced substantial new tariffs affecting a wide range of products and jurisdictions and has indicated an intention to continue developing new trade policies, including with respect to the pharmaceutical industry. In response, certain foreign governments have announced or implemented retaliatory tariffs and other protectionist measures. These developments have created a dynamic and unpredictable trade landscape, which may adversely impact Candid's business, results of operations, financial condition and prospects. The Bureau of Industry and Security, U.S. Department of Commerce, has initiated an investigation to determine whether pharmaceutical ingredients, including finished drug product, manufactured outside the United States pose a national security risk and should be subject to additional tariffs.

Candid does not own or operate, and currently has no plans to establish, any manufacturing facilities. Candid currently relies, and expects to continue to rely, on third parties for the manufacture of its drug candidates for clinical testing, as well as for manufacture of any products that Candid may commercialize, if approved. Currently, the drug substance and drug product are manufactured in China. Candid also relies on specialized laboratory equipment, supplies, materials and precursor compounds, all or part of which Candid believes may be ultimately sourced from multiple countries outside the United States, to advance its research and development efforts. This dependence exposes Candid to geopolitical, trade, tariff, and sanctions risks, including actions that could disrupt or restrict work with Chinese entities. Any supply disruption, delay or cost increase could materially delay our trials and increase program costs.

Current or future tariffs will result in increased research and development expenses for Candid, including with respect to increased costs associated with manufacturing drug substance and drug product. In addition, such tariffs will increase Candid's supply chain complexity and could also potentially disrupt Candid's existing supply chain. Unlike consumer goods, pharmaceuticals face unique regulatory constraints that make rapid supply chain adjustments particularly difficult and costly. Trade restrictions affecting the import of materials necessary for clinical trials could result in delays to Candid's development timelines. Increased development costs and extended development timelines could place Candid at a competitive disadvantage compared to companies operating in regions with more favorable trade relationships and could reduce investor confidence, negatively impacting Candid's ability to secure additional financing on favorable terms or at all. In addition, as Candid advances toward commercialization in the future, tariffs and trade restrictions could hinder Candid's ability to establish cost-effective production capabilities, negatively impacting Candid's growth prospects.

The complexity of announced or future tariffs may also increase the risk that Candid or its suppliers may be subject to civil or criminal enforcement actions in the United States or foreign jurisdictions related to compliance with trade regulations. Foreign governments may also adopt non-tariff measures, such as procurement preferences or informal disincentives to engage with, purchase from or invest in U.S. entities, which may limit Candid's ability to compete internationally and attract non-U.S. investment, employees, customers and suppliers. Foreign governments may also take other retaliatory actions against U.S. entities, such as decreased intellectual property protection, increased enforcement actions or delays in regulatory approvals, which may result in heightened international legal and operational risks. In addition, the United States and other governments have imposed and may continue to impose additional sanctions, such as trade restrictions or trade barriers, which could restrict Candid from doing business directly or indirectly in or with certain countries or parties and may impose additional costs and complexity to Candid's business.

Trade disputes, tariffs, restrictions and resulting legal challenges and other political tensions between the United States and other countries may also exacerbate unfavorable macroeconomic conditions including inflationary pressures, foreign exchange volatility, financial market instability, and economic recessions or downturns. The ultimate impact of current or future tariffs and trade restrictions and resulting legal challenges remains uncertain and could materially and adversely affect Candid's business, financial condition, and prospects. While Candid actively monitors these risks, any prolonged economic downturn, escalation in trade tensions, or deterioration in international perception of U.S.-based companies could materially and adversely affect Candid's business, ability to access the capital markets or other financing sources, results of operations, financial condition and prospects. In addition, trade developments have and may continue to heighten the risks related to the other risk factors described elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

Candid has in-licensed the rights to cizutamig and CND261 in limited territories. Any adverse developments that occur during any clinical trials or manufacturing conducted by third parties, including EpimAb or Genor, in other jurisdictions or other indications may affect Candid's ability to obtain regulatory approval or commercialize its drug candidates.

Candid has in-licensed the right to develop, manufacture and commercialize cizutamig and CND261 everywhere in the world except for Mainland China, Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan (the "Licensed Territory"). EpimAb Biotherapeutics ("EpimAB") and Genor Biopharma ("Genor"), over which Candid has limited control, have the right to develop, manufacture and commercialize these drug candidates in geographies outside the Licensed Territory. If serious adverse events or other negative safety results are observed in any studies conducted by EpimAB, Genor or any third parties, such results may negatively impact Candid's programs in autoimmune diseases. For example, unfavorable safety results observed in third-party studies of Candid's drug candidates could lead the FDA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities to suspend or impose restrictions on Candid's clinical trials, and such events could ultimately result in the delay, limitation or denial of approval of these drug candidates or require Candid to conduct additional clinical trials as a condition to regulatory approval, if any, which would increase Candid's costs and time to market. If Candid receives FDA or foreign regulatory authority approval for any of its drug candidates and a new or serious safety issue is identified in connection with clinical trials conducted by third parties, the FDA or other comparable foreign regulatory authority may withdraw or vary their approval, restrict Candid's ability to market and sell its drugs or require additional testing or evaluation.

Disruptions to the operations of the FDA, the SEC, other U.S. governmental agencies or comparable foreign regulatory authorities caused by funding shortages, leadership changes, staffing cuts or other staffing shortages, along with uncertainty regarding the potential for new initiatives, laws, regulations, policies and guidance affecting Candid's drug candidates or other aspects of Candid's business, could materially and adversely affect Candid's business.

The ability of the FDA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities to review and approve new products or take action with respect to other regulatory matters can be affected by a variety of factors, including government budget and funding levels, leadership changes, the ability to hire and retain key personnel and accept payment of user fees, the availability of personnel and other resources, changes in statutes, regulations and policies that affect the FDA's or comparable foreign regulatory authorities' ability to perform routine functions, and other business disruptions.

Average review times at the FDA and comparable foreign regulatory authorities have fluctuated in recent years as a result. In addition, government funding of the SEC and other government agencies on which Candid's operations may rely, including those that fund research and development activities, is subject to the political process, which is inherently fluid and unpredictable.

Over the last several years, the U.S. government has shut down several times and certain regulatory agencies, such as the FDA and the SEC, have had to furlough critical FDA, SEC and other government employees and stop critical activities. In addition, there have recently been terminations of large numbers of federal employees at various federal agencies, including the FDA. Changes and cuts in FDA staffing could result in delays in the FDA's responsiveness or in its ability to review IND submissions or applications, issue regulations or guidance, or implement or enforce regulatory requirements in a timely fashion, or at all. A prolonged government shutdown and/or employee terminations or resignations could significantly impact the ability of the FDA or other federal agencies to timely review and process Candid's regulatory submissions, which could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business. Government shutdowns and/or employee terminations could also impact third parties with whom Candid works, such as clinical trial sites, which in turn could have a material impact on Candid's business. Further, future government shutdowns and/or employee terminations or resignations at the SEC could impact Candid's ability to access the public markets and obtain necessary capital in order to properly capitalize and continue Candid's operations.

There is substantial uncertainty as to whether and how the current administration will seek to modify or revise the requirements and policies of the FDA and other regulatory agencies with jurisdiction over Candid's drug candidates and any products for which Candid obtains approval. This uncertainty could present new challenges as Candid navigates development and approval of its drug candidates. Some of these efforts have manifested to date in the form of personnel cuts and measures that could impact the FDA's ability to hire and retain key personnel, which could result in delays or limitations on Candid's ability to obtain guidance from the FDA on its drug candidates in development and obtain the requisite regulatory approvals in the future. There is uncertainty as to whether Candid will be materially and negatively impacted by governmental orders, regulations, policies or guidance, or disruptions to the normal operations of government agencies.

Risks Related to Candid's Reliance on Third Parties and Manufacturing

If third parties that Candid relies on to conduct preclinical studies and clinical trials do not successfully carry out their contractual duties, comply with regulatory requirements or meet expected deadlines, Candid may not be able to obtain marketing approval for or commercialize its drug candidates.

Candid does not independently conduct the majority of its preclinical studies and any of its clinical trials. Candid relies and plans to continue to rely on clinical investigators, consultants, contract laboratories and other third parties, such as CROs, to conduct or otherwise support research and preclinical studies and clinical trials for its drug candidates. Candid relies heavily on these parties for execution of preclinical studies and clinical trials for its drug candidates and controls only certain aspects of their activities. Nevertheless, Candid is responsible for ensuring that each of its preclinical studies and clinical trials is conducted in accordance with the applicable protocol, legal and regulatory requirements and scientific standards, and Candid's reliance on CROs and other third parties will not relieve Candid of its regulatory responsibilities. For any violations of laws and regulations during the conduct of Candid's preclinical studies and clinical trials, Candid could be subject to untitled letters, warning letters or enforcement action that may include civil penalties up to and including criminal prosecution.

Candid and the third parties on which Candid relies for clinical trials are required to comply with regulations and requirements, including GCP for conducting, monitoring, recording and reporting the results of clinical trials to ensure that the data and results are scientifically credible and accurate, and that the trial patients are adequately informed of the potential risks of participating in clinical trials and that their rights are protected. These regulations are enforced by the FDA, the competent authorities of the EU Member States, and comparable foreign regulatory authorities for any drugs in clinical development. The FDA and competent authorities of EU Member States enforce GCP requirements through periodic inspections of clinical trial sponsors, principal investigators and trial sites. If Candid or these third parties fail to comply with applicable GCP, the clinical data generated in Candid's clinical trials may be deemed unreliable and the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities may require Candid to perform additional clinical trials before approving any marketing applications Candid may submit. Candid cannot assure investors that, upon inspection, the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities will determine that any of Candid's future clinical trials will comply with GCP. In addition, Candid's clinical trials must be conducted with drug candidates produced under current Good Manufacturing Practice ("cGMP") regulations. Candid's failure or the failure of these third parties to comply with these regulations may require Candid to repeat clinical trials, which would delay the regulatory approval process and could also subject Candid to enforcement action. Candid is also required to register certain ongoing clinical trials and provide certain information, including information relating to the trial's protocol, on a government-sponsored database, ClinicalTrials.gov, within specific timeframes. Failure to do so can result in fines, adverse publicity and civil and criminal sanctions. Similar requirements and sanctions may apply outside of the United States.

Although Candid intends to design the preclinical studies and clinical trials for its drug candidates, Candid will rely on third parties to conduct its preclinical studies and clinical trials. As a result, many important aspects of Candid's clinical development, including preclinical studies and clinical trial conduct and timing, will be outside of Candid's direct control. Candid's reliance on third parties to conduct preclinical studies and future clinical trials will also result in less direct control over the management of data developed through preclinical studies and clinical trials than would be the case if Candid were relying entirely upon its own staff.

Communicating with CROs can also be challenging, potentially leading to mistakes, as well as difficulties in coordinating activities. Such CROs may:

- have staffing difficulties;
- fail to comply with contractual obligations;
- experience regulatory compliance issues;
- undergo changes in priorities or become financially distressed; or
- form relationships with other entities, some of which may be Candid's competitors.

If any of the third parties with whom Candid contracts also have relationships with other commercial entities, including Candid's competitors, for whom they may also be conducting clinical trials or other activities, that could harm Candid's competitive position.

Moreover, principal investigators for Candid's preclinical studies and clinical trials may serve as scientific advisors or consultants to Candid from time to time and receive compensation in connection with such services. Under certain circumstances, Candid may be required to report some of these relationships to the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities. The FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authority may conclude that a financial relationship between Candid and a principal investigator has created a conflict of interest or otherwise affected the interpretation of the trial. The FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authority may therefore question the integrity of the data generated by the applicable preclinical studies or at the clinical trial site and the utility of the preclinical studies and clinical trial itself may be jeopardized. This could result in a delay in approval, refusal to accept or rejection of Candid's marketing applications by the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authority, as the case may be, and may ultimately lead to the denial of regulatory approval of Candid's drug candidates.

In addition, Candid's CROs have the right to terminate their agreements with Candid in the event of an uncured material breach and under other specified circumstances. If any of Candid's relationships with these third parties terminate, Candid may not be able to enter into arrangements with alternative third parties in a timely manner, on commercially reasonable terms, or at all.

There is ultimately no guarantee that any of Candid's CROs, investigators or other third parties will devote adequate time and resources to such trials or studies, perform as contractually required or in a satisfactory manner or comply with regulatory requirements. If any of these third parties fails to meet expected deadlines, fails to adhere to Candid's clinical protocols or meet regulatory requirements, or otherwise performs in a substandard manner, Candid may be unable to rely on clinical data collected by these third parties, may be required to repeat, extend the duration of, or increase the size of any preclinical studies and clinical trials Candid conducts, or may result in the termination of its preclinical studies and clinical trials, all of which could significantly delay commercialization, require significantly greater expenditures and harm Candid's financial results and the commercial prospects for its drug candidates.

Candid's success is dependent on its ability to successfully pursue business development, strategic partnerships and investment opportunities as Candid matures. Candid is currently party to such arrangements, and may enter into additional collaboration and licensing arrangements in the future, and may not realize the benefits of such collaborations, alliances, acquisitions or licensing arrangements.

Candid has entered into licensing and collaboration arrangements with EpimAb, Genor and Wuxi Biologics for the right to develop, manufacture and commercialize cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND319, respectively, and may in the future form or seek strategic alliances or acquisitions, create joint ventures or enter into additional collaboration and licensing arrangements with third parties that Candid believes will complement or augment its development and commercialization efforts with respect to its drug candidates that Candid may develop. Any of these relationships may require Candid to incur non-recurring and other charges, increase its near and long-term expenditures, issue securities that dilute Candid's existing stockholders or disrupt Candid's management and business.

Research and development collaborations are subject to numerous risks, which may include the following:

- collaborators have significant discretion in determining the efforts and resources that they will apply to these collaborations;
- collaborators could fail to conduct trials on the timeline Candid expects or otherwise fail to support Candid's partnered trials;
- collaborators could independently develop, or develop with third parties, drugs that compete directly or indirectly with Candid's drugs or drug candidates;
- collaborators could encounter safety or efficacy problems, manufacturing problems, developmental delays, regulatory issues or other problems with Candid's partnered trials;
- collaborators may not properly enforce, maintain or defend Candid's intellectual property rights or may use Candid's proprietary information in a way that gives rise to actual or threatened litigation that could jeopardize or invalidate Candid's intellectual property or proprietary information or expose Candid to potential litigation, or other intellectual property proceedings;
- disputes may arise between a collaborator and Candid that cause the delay or termination of the research, development or commercialization of the drug candidate, or that result in costly litigation or arbitration that diverts management attention and resources;
- if a present or future collaborator of Candid were to be involved in a business combination, the continued pursuit and emphasis on Candid's product development or commercialization program under such collaboration could be delayed, diminished or terminated; and
- collaboration agreements may restrict Candid's right to independently pursue new drug candidates.

Candid faces significant competition in seeking appropriate strategic partners and the negotiation process is time-consuming and complex. Whether Candid reaches a definitive agreement for other collaborations will depend, among other things, upon Candid's assessment of the collaborator's resources and expertise, the terms and conditions of the proposed collaboration and the proposed collaborator's evaluation of a number of factors. Those factors may include the design or results of clinical trials, the progress of Candid's clinical trials, the likelihood of approval by the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities, the potential market for the subject drug candidate, the costs and complexities of manufacturing and delivering such drug candidate to patients, the potential of competing drugs, the existence of uncertainty with respect to Candid's ownership of technology, which can exist if there is a challenge to such ownership without regard to the merits of the challenge, and industry and market conditions generally. The collaborator may also consider alternative drug candidates or technologies for similar indications that may be available to collaborate on and whether such a collaboration could be more attractive than the one with Candid for Candid's drug candidate. Further, Candid may not be successful in its efforts to establish a strategic partnership or other alternative arrangements for future drug candidates because they may be deemed to be at too early of a stage of development for collaborative effort and third parties may not view them as having the requisite potential to demonstrate safety and efficacy. Any delays in entering into new collaborations or strategic partnership agreements related to any drug candidate Candid develops could delay the development and commercialization of Candid's drug candidates, which would harm Candid's business prospects, financial condition and results of operations.

As a result of these risks, Candid may not be able to realize the benefit of its existing licensing agreements or any future collaborations or licensing agreements Candid may enter into. In addition, there have been a significant number of recent business combinations among large pharmaceutical and biomedical companies that have resulted in a reduced number of potential future collaborators and changes to the strategies of the combined company. As a result, Candid may not be able to negotiate collaborations on a timely basis, on acceptable terms, or at all. If Candid is unable to do so, Candid may have to curtail the development of such drug candidate, reduce or delay one or more of its other development programs, delay the potential commercialization or reduce the scope of any planned sales or marketing activities for such drug candidate, or increase its expenditures and undertake development, manufacturing or commercialization activities at its own expense. If Candid elects to increase its expenditures to fund development, manufacturing or commercialization activities on its own, Candid may need to obtain additional capital, which may not be available to Candid on acceptable terms or at all. If Candid does not have sufficient funds, Candid may not be able to further develop its drug discovery program or drug candidates or bring them to market and generate revenue.

Additionally, Candid may sometimes collaborate with academic institutions to accelerate its preclinical research or development under written agreements with these institutions. If collaborations occur, these institutions provide Candid with an option to negotiate a license to any of the institution's rights in technology resulting from the collaboration. Regardless of such option, Candid may be unable to negotiate a license within the specified timeframe or under terms that are acceptable to Candid. If Candid is unable to do so, the institution may offer the intellectual property rights to other parties, potentially blocking Candid's ability to pursue its program. If Candid is unable to successfully obtain rights to required third-party intellectual property or to maintain the existing intellectual property rights Candid has, Candid may have to abandon development of such program and Candid's business and financial condition could suffer.

Candid's drugs require specific constituents to work effectively and efficiently, and rights to those constituents are, and in the future may be, held by others. Candid may be unable to in-license any rights from constituents, methods of use, processes or other third-party intellectual property rights from third parties that Candid identifies. Candid may fail to obtain any of these licenses at a reasonable cost or on reasonable terms, which could harm Candid's business. Even if Candid is able to obtain a license, it may be non-exclusive, thereby giving Candid's competitors access to the same technologies licensed to Candid. In that event, Candid may be required to expend significant time and resources to develop or license replacement technology in order to establish or maintain Candid's competitive position in the market. Any delays in entering into new collaborations or strategic partnership agreements related to Candid's drug candidates or its drug discovery capabilities could delay the development and commercialization of Candid's drug candidates in certain geographies or limit Candid's ability to discover and develop new drug candidates, which could harm Candid's business prospects, financial condition and results of operations.

Candid contracts with third parties for the manufacturing and supply of certain of its drug candidates for use in preclinical testing and planned clinical trials, which supply may become limited or interrupted or may not be of satisfactory quality and quantity.

Candid does not have any manufacturing facilities. Candid currently relies on contract and development manufacturing organizations ("CDMOs") in China for the manufacture and supply of its drug candidates for clinical testing. If any of Candid's drug candidates are approved, Candid intends to continue to rely on CDMOs for commercial manufacture. Candid's current reliance on CDMOs increases the risk that Candid will not have sufficient quantities of its drug candidates or for any potential commercialization, or such quantities of its drug candidates at an acceptable cost or quality, which in each case could delay, prevent or impair Candid's development or potential commercialization efforts. Furthermore, in Candid's clinical trials, Candid plans to evaluate differing dosing regimens using both intravenous and/or subcutaneous formulations of cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460. As such, Candid may require its drug candidates to be manufactured in high dose concentrations to facilitate the administration of the subcutaneous formulation. If Candid's CDMOs are unable to manufacture such high dose concentrations of Candid's drug candidates, Candid could face delays in its planned clinical trials. Candid has started the process to locate an alternate CDMO elsewhere globally, but there is no guarantee that Candid can identify and engage an alternate manufacturer in time so as not to disrupt Candid's planned clinical trials on terms that are acceptable to Candid (including financial terms), or at all. Even if Candid is able to transfer its manufacturing process of its drug candidates to another CDMO, establishing additional or replacement suppliers for supplies, and obtaining regulatory clearance or approvals that may result from adding or replacing suppliers, could take a substantial amount of time, result in increased costs and impair Candid's ability to produce its drugs, which would adversely impact Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

Furthermore, all entities involved in the preparation of therapeutics for clinical trials or commercial sale, including Candid's existing and future CDMOs for its drug candidates, are subject to extensive regulation. Components of a finished therapeutic product approved for commercial sale or used in clinical trials must be manufactured in accordance with cGMP requirements. These regulations govern, among other things, manufacturing processes and procedures, including record keeping, and the implementation and operation of quality systems to control and assure the quality of investigational drugs and drugs approved for sale. Poor control of production processes can lead to the introduction of contaminants, or to inadvertent changes in the properties or stability of Candid's drug candidates that may not be detectable in final product testing. Candid or its CDMOs must supply all necessary documentation in support of a BLA on a timely basis and must adhere to the FDA's Good Laboratory Practice regulations and cGMP regulations enforced by the FDA through its facilities inspection program. Comparable foreign regulatory authorities may require compliance with similar requirements. The facilities and quality systems of Candid's third-party CDMOs must pass a pre-approval inspection for compliance with the applicable regulations as a condition to marketing approval of Candid's drug candidates. Candid does not control the manufacturing process of, and is completely dependent on, third-party manufacturers for compliance with cGMP requirements for manufacture of Candid's drug candidates. If these third-party manufacturers cannot successfully manufacture material that conforms to Candid's specifications and the strict regulatory requirements of the FDA or any comparable foreign regulatory authority, they will not be able to secure and/or maintain regulatory approval for the use of their manufacturing facilities in connection with Candid's drug candidates.

Candid, or Candid's contract manufacturers, and any future collaborators and their contract manufacturers could be subject to periodic unannounced inspections by the FDA, competent authorities of EU Member States or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities to monitor and ensure compliance with cGMP. Despite Candid's efforts to audit and verify regulatory compliance, Candid's CDMOs may be found on regulatory inspection by the FDA, competent authorities of EU Member States or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities to be noncompliant with cGMP regulations. Candid's failure, or the failure of Candid's CDMOs, to comply with applicable regulations could result in sanctions being imposed on Candid, including shutdown of the third-party vendor or invalidation of drug product lots or processes, fines, injunctions, civil penalties, delays, suspension, variation or withdrawal of approvals, license revocation, seizures or recalls of drug candidates or drugs, operating restrictions and criminal prosecutions, any of which could significantly and adversely affect supplies of Candid's drugs, if approved, and significantly harm Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

In the event that any of Candid's manufacturers fails to comply with such requirements or to perform its obligations to Candid in relation to quality, timing or otherwise, or if Candid's supply of components or other materials becomes limited or interrupted for other reasons, Candid may be forced to manufacture the materials itself, for which Candid currently does not have the capabilities or resources, or enter into an agreement with another third-party, which Candid may not be able to do on commercially reasonable terms, if at all. In particular, any replacement of Candid's manufacturers could require significant effort and expertise because there may be a limited number of qualified replacements. In some cases, the technical skills or technology required to manufacture Candid's drug candidates may be unique or proprietary to the original manufacturer and Candid may have difficulty transferring such skills or technology to another third-party and a feasible alternative may not exist. Further, analytical methods required for manufacturing may be difficult to transfer between CDMOs and the failure to properly transfer or validate these methods may impact Candid's development timelines. If Candid is required to or voluntarily changes manufacturers for any reason, Candid will be required to verify that the new manufacturer maintains facilities and procedures that comply with quality standards and with all applicable regulations and guidelines and that the product produced is equivalent to that produced in a prior facility. The delays associated with the verification of a new manufacturer and equivalent product could negatively affect Candid's ability to develop drug candidates in a timely manner or within budget.

Certain Chinese biotechnology companies, CROs and contract development and manufacturing organizations may become subject to trade restrictions, sanctions, other regulatory requirements, or proposed legislation by the U.S. government, which could potentially impact services available for Candid's research and development or Candid's ability to secure the materials it needs for its drug candidates. For example, on December 18, 2025, President Trump signed the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2026 into law, which includes the BIOSECURE Act. The BIOSECURE Act prohibits the U.S. government from procuring or obtaining biotechnology equipment or services produced or provided by a "biotechnology company of concern" ("BCC"); entering into, extending, or renewing government contracts with an entity that directly or indirectly uses biotechnology equipment or services from a BCC in performance of that federal contract; and/or issuing grants or loans to purchase, obtain, or use biotechnology equipment or services produced by a BCC. The BIOSECURE Act also prohibits U.S. government loan and grant recipients from using federal loan or grant money to enter into contracts with entities that use equipment from BCCs in the performance of any federal prime contract or subcontract. Companies designated as a BCC include those that are identified on the U.S. Department of Defense's annual List of Chinese Military Companies, also known as the 1260H List. The U.S. government also has the ability to designate entities as BCCs through a separate designation process. There is a "safe harbor" provision providing that the restrictions do not apply to equipment or services that were formerly but are no longer provided by a BCC, as well as a "grandfathering" provision providing that the prohibitions shall not apply for a five-year period to biotechnology equipment or services produced or provided under a contract or agreement entered into before the applicable effective date. Given the BIOSECURE Act, Candid may be restricted in its ability to work with certain Chinese biotechnology companies to the extent Candid would contract with, or otherwise receive funding from, the U.S. government. Such counterparties may be subject to other U.S. legislation, sanctions, trade restrictions and other foreign regulatory requirements which could increase the cost or reduce the supply of material available to Candid, delay the procurement or supply of such material or have an adverse effect on Candid's ability to secure significant commitments from governments to purchase Candid's potential therapies. Such disruption could have adverse effects on the development of Candid's drug candidates.

In addition, Candid does not have any long-term commitments or supply agreements with its CDMOs. Candid may be unable to establish any long-term supply agreements with CDMOs or to do so on acceptable terms or at all, which increases the risk of failing to timely obtain sufficient quantities of its drug candidates or such quantities at an acceptable cost.

Candid's or a third-party's failure to execute on Candid's manufacturing requirements, do so on commercially reasonable terms and timelines and comply with cGMP requirements could adversely affect Candid's business in a number of ways, including:

- inability to meet Candid's product specifications and quality requirements consistently;
- an inability to initiate or continue preclinical studies or clinical trials of Candid's drug candidates under development;
- delay in submitting regulatory applications, or receiving regulatory approvals, for Candid's drug candidates, if at all;
- loss of the cooperation of future collaborators;
- subjecting third-party manufacturing facilities or Candid's manufacturing facilities to additional inspections by regulatory authorities;
- requirements to cease development or to recall batches of Candid's drug candidates; and

- in the event of approval to market and commercialize Candid's drug candidates, an inability to meet commercial demands for Candid's product or any other future drug candidates.

In addition, Candid does not have any long-term commitments or supply agreements with any third-party manufacturers. Candid may be unable to establish any long-term supply agreements with third-party manufacturers or to do so on acceptable terms, which increases the risk of failing to timely obtain sufficient quantities of Candid's drug candidates or such quantities at an acceptable cost. Even if Candid is able to establish agreements with third-party manufacturers, reliance on third-party manufacturers entails additional risks, including:

- failure of third-party manufacturers to comply with regulatory requirements and maintain quality assurance;
- breach of the manufacturing agreement by the third party;
- failure to manufacture Candid's drug candidates according to Candid's specifications;
- failure to manufacture Candid's product according to Candid's schedule or at all;
- misappropriation of Candid's proprietary information, including Candid's trade secrets and know-how; and
- termination or nonrenewal of the agreement by the third party at a time that is costly or inconvenient for Candid.

Any performance failure on the part of Candid's existing or future manufacturers could delay clinical development or regulatory approval, and any related remedial measures may be costly or time consuming to implement. Candid does not currently have arrangements in place for redundant supply or a second source for all required raw materials used in the manufacture of Candid's drug candidates. If Candid's existing or future third-party manufacturers cannot perform as agreed, Candid may be required to replace such manufacturers and Candid may be unable to replace them on a timely basis or at all, which would have a material adverse impact on Candid's financial position.

Changes in methods of drug candidate manufacturing may result in additional costs or delays.

As Candid's drug candidates progress through preclinical to late-stage clinical trials to regulatory approval and commercialization, it is common that various aspects of the development program, such as manufacturing methods, are altered along the way in an effort to optimize yield or manufacturing batch size, change drug product dosage form, minimize costs and achieve consistent quality and results. Such changes carry the risk that they will not achieve these intended objectives. Any of these changes could cause Candid's drug candidates to perform differently, could impair Candid's ability to utilize or interpret any existing data, and affect the results of planned clinical trials or other future clinical trials conducted with the altered materials. Such changes could delay completion of clinical trials, require the conduct of bridging clinical trials or the repetition of one or more clinical trials, increase clinical trial costs, delay approval of Candid's drug candidates and jeopardize Candid's ability to commercialize its drug candidates and generate revenue.

If Candid's third-party suppliers use hazardous, non-hazardous, biological or other materials in a manner that causes injury or violates applicable law, Candid may be liable for damages.

Candid's research and development activities involve the controlled use of potentially hazardous substances, including chemical and biological materials. Candid and its suppliers are subject to federal, state and local laws and regulations in the United States and by foreign governmental authorities governing the use, manufacture, storage, handling and disposal of medical and hazardous materials. Although Candid believes that Candid and its suppliers' procedures for using, handling, storing and disposing of these materials comply with legally prescribed standards, neither Candid nor its suppliers can completely eliminate the risk of contamination or injury resulting from medical or hazardous materials. As a result of any such contamination or injury, Candid may incur liability, or local, city, state or federal authorities may curtail the use of these materials and interrupt Candid's business operations. In the event of an accident, Candid could be held liable for damages or penalized with fines, and the liability could exceed Candid's resources. Candid does not have any insurance for liabilities arising from medical or hazardous materials. Compliance with applicable environmental laws and regulations is expensive, and current or future environmental regulations may impair Candid's research, development and production efforts, which could harm Candid's business, prospects, financial condition or results of operations.

Risks Related to Commercialization of Candid's Drug Candidates

Candid faces significant competition from other biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies, and Candid's operating results will suffer if Candid fails to compete effectively.

The biopharmaceutical industry in general, and the autoimmune field in particular, is characterized by rapidly advancing and changing technologies, intense competition and a strong emphasis on intellectual property. Candid faces substantial and increasing competition from large and specialty biopharmaceutical companies, as well as public and private medical research institutions and governmental agencies. A large number of companies are advancing development programs in autoimmune diseases, including myasthenia gravis and SARD-ILD.

Candid's competition for B-cell depletion includes monoclonal antibodies ("mAbs"), bispecifics which include TCEs, IgG degraders, and various forms of cell therapy from several pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies, including AbbVie Inc., Amgen, Argenx, Artiva Biotherapeutics, Inc., Biohaven Ltd., Bristol Myers Squibb Company, Cabaletta Bio, Inc., Cartesian Therapeutics, Inc., Cullinan Therapeutics, Inc., Dianthus Therapeutics, Inc., Fate Therapeutics, Inc., GSK plc, Immunovant, Inc., Johnson & Johnson, Kyverna Therapeutics, Inc., Merck & Co., Inc., Otsuka Pharmaceutical, Ouro Medicines, Pfizer Inc., Roche Holding AG, among others.

Candid's competitors will also include companies that are or will be developing other targeted therapies, including small molecule or antibodies for the same indications that Candid is targeting. It is also possible that new competitors, including those developing similar drugs or alternatives to immunotherapy drug candidates, may emerge and acquire significant market share.

Many of Candid's current or potential competitors have significantly greater financial, technical and human resources, as well as more expertise in research and development, manufacturing, preclinical testing, conducting clinical studies and trials and commercializing and marketing approved drugs. Mergers and acquisitions in the biopharmaceutical industry may result in even greater resource concentration among a smaller number of competitors.

Established pharmaceutical companies may invest heavily to accelerate discovery and development of novel compounds or to in-license novel compounds that could make Candid's drug candidates less competitive. In addition, any new product that competes with an approved product must demonstrate compelling advantages in efficacy, convenience, tolerability and safety in order to overcome price competition and to be commercially successful. Accordingly, Candid's competitors may succeed in obtaining patent protection, discovering, developing, receiving regulatory and marketing approval for or commercializing drugs before Candid does, which would have an adverse impact on Candid's business and results of operations. Smaller or early-stage companies may also prove to be significant competitors, particularly through collaborative arrangements with large, established companies.

Candid currently has no marketing and sales organization and has no experience as a company in commercializing drugs, and may have to invest significant resources to develop these capabilities. If Candid is unable to establish marketing and sales capabilities or enter into agreements with third parties to market and sell its drugs, Candid may not be able to generate product revenue.

Candid has no internal sales, marketing or distribution capabilities, nor has Candid commercialized a product. If any of Candid's drug candidates ultimately receives regulatory approval, Candid must build a marketing and sales organization with technical expertise and supporting distribution capabilities to commercialize each such product in major markets, which will be expensive and time consuming, or collaborate with third parties that have direct sales forces and established distribution systems, either to augment Candid's own sales force and distribution systems or in lieu of Candid's own sales force and distribution systems. Candid has no prior experience as a company in the marketing, sale and distribution of biopharmaceutical drugs and there are significant risks involved in building and managing a sales organization, including Candid's ability to hire, retain and incentivize qualified individuals, generate sufficient sales leads, provide adequate training to sales and marketing personnel and effectively manage a geographically dispersed sales and marketing team. Any failure or delay in the development of Candid's internal sales, marketing and distribution capabilities would adversely impact the commercialization of these drugs. Candid may not be able to enter into collaborations or hire consultants or external service providers to assist Candid in sales, marketing and distribution functions on acceptable financial terms, or at all. In addition, Candid's product revenues and Candid's profitability, if any, may be lower if Candid relies on third parties for these functions than if Candid were to market, sell and distribute any drugs that Candid develops itself. Candid will likely have little control over such third parties, and any of them may fail to devote the necessary resources and attention to sell and market Candid's drugs effectively. If Candid is not successful in commercializing its drugs, either on its own or through arrangements with one or more third parties, Candid may not be able to generate any future product revenue and Candid would incur significant additional losses.

Coverage and reimbursement may be limited or unavailable in certain market segments for Candid's drug candidates, which could make it difficult for Candid to sell its drug candidates, if approved, profitably.

Successful sales of Candid's drug candidates, if approved, depend on the availability of coverage and adequate reimbursement from third-party payors, including governmental healthcare programs, such as Medicare and Medicaid and comparable foreign programs, managed care organizations and commercial payors, among others. Significant uncertainty exists as to the coverage and reimbursement status of any drug candidates for which Candid obtains regulatory approval. In addition, because Candid's drug candidates represent new approaches to the treatment of autoimmune disease, Candid cannot accurately estimate the potential revenue from its drug candidates. For drugs administered under the supervision of a physician, obtaining coverage and adequate reimbursement may also be particularly difficult because of the higher prices often associated with such drugs. Patients who are provided medical treatment for their conditions generally rely on third-party payors to reimburse all or part of the costs associated with their treatment. Obtaining coverage and adequate reimbursement from third-party payors is critical to new product acceptance.

Third-party payors decide which drugs and treatments they will cover and the amount of reimbursement. Reimbursement by a third-party payor may depend upon a number of factors, including, but not limited to, the third-party payor's determination that use of a product is:

- a covered benefit under its health plan;
- safe, effective and medically necessary;
- appropriate for the specific patient;
- cost-effective; and
- neither experimental nor investigational.

Obtaining coverage and reimbursement of a product from a government or other third-party payor is a time-consuming and costly process that could require Candid to provide to the payor supporting scientific, clinical and cost-effectiveness data for the use of its drugs. Even if Candid obtains coverage for a given product, if the resulting reimbursement rates are insufficient, hospitals may not approve Candid's product for use in their facility or third-party payors may require co-payments that patients find unacceptably high. Patients are unlikely to use Candid's drug candidates unless coverage is provided and reimbursement is adequate to cover a significant portion of the cost of Candid's drug candidates. Separate reimbursement for the product itself may or may not be available. Instead, the hospital or administering physician may be reimbursed only for providing the treatment or procedure in which Candid's product is used. Further, from time to time, the CMS revises the reimbursement systems used to reimburse healthcare providers, including the Medicare Physician Fee Schedule and Outpatient Prospective Payment System, which may result in reduced Medicare payments. In some cases, private third-party payors rely on all or portions of Medicare payment systems to determine payment rates. Changes to government healthcare programs that reduce payments under these programs may negatively impact payments from private third-party payors, and reduce the willingness of physicians to use Candid's drug candidates.

In the United States, no uniform policy of coverage and reimbursement for drugs exists among third-party payors. Therefore, coverage and reimbursement for drugs can differ significantly from payor to payor. Further, one payor's determination to provide coverage for a product does not assure that other payors will also provide coverage for the product. Additionally, any companion diagnostic test that Candid develops will be required to obtain coverage and reimbursement separate and apart from the coverage and reimbursement Candid seeks for its drug candidates, if approved. Adequate third-party reimbursement may not be available to enable Candid to maintain price levels sufficient to realize an appropriate return on its investment in product development.

Further, the United States government and foreign governments have continued implementing cost-containment measures. For example, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS") imposes rebates on many Medicare Part B and Medicare Part D products to penalize price increases that outpace inflation on an annual basis. HHS has also been empowered to negotiate the price of certain single-source biologics that have been on the market for at least 11 years covered under Medicare as part of the Medicare Drug Price Negotiation Program. Each year up to 20 products will be selected by HHS for the Medicare Drug Price Negotiation Program. Products subject to the Medicare Drug Price Negotiation Program are expected to experience a significant reduction in reimbursement from the Medicare program on a per unit basis.

Candid intends to seek approval to market its drug candidates in both the United States and in selected foreign jurisdictions. If Candid obtains approval in one or more foreign jurisdictions for its drug candidates, Candid will be subject to rules and regulations in those jurisdictions. Outside the United States, reimbursement and healthcare payment systems vary significantly by country, and many countries have instituted price ceilings on specific drugs and therapies. In some foreign countries, particularly those in Europe, the pricing of biologics is subject to governmental control. In these countries, pricing negotiations with governmental authorities can take considerable time after obtaining regulatory approval of a drug candidate. The EU provides options for EU Member States to restrict the range of medicinal drugs for which their national health insurance systems provide reimbursement and to control the prices of medicinal drugs for human use. An EU Member State may approve a specific price for the medicinal product, it may refuse to reimburse a product at the price set by the manufacturer or it may instead adopt a system of direct or indirect controls on the profitability of the company placing the medicinal product on the market. Many EU Member States also periodically review their reimbursement procedures for medicinal drugs, which could have an adverse impact on reimbursement status. Moreover, in order to obtain reimbursement for its drugs in some European countries, including some EU Member States, Candid may be required to compile additional data comparing the cost-effectiveness of its drugs to other available therapies. This HTA of medicinal drugs is becoming an increasingly common part of the pricing and reimbursement procedures in some EU Member States, including those representing the larger markets. The HTA process is the procedure to assess the therapeutic, economic and societal impact of a given medicinal product in the national healthcare systems of the individual country. The outcome of an HTA will often influence the pricing and reimbursement status granted to these medicinal drugs by the competent authorities of individual EU Member States. The extent to which pricing and reimbursement decisions are influenced by the HTA of the specific medicinal product currently varies between EU Member States. Since January 12, 2025, the clinical elements of HTA must be assessed via Joint Clinical Assessment at EU level—initially for all new oncology medicines and ATMPs, expanded to orphan medicines in 2028, and covering all remaining centrally authorized medicines from 2030. The downward pressure on healthcare costs has become very intense. As a result, increasingly high barriers are being erected to the entry of new drugs. In addition, in some countries, cross-border imports from low-priced markets exert a commercial pressure on pricing within a country. Even if a pharmaceutical product obtains a marketing authorization in the EU, there can be no assurance that reimbursement for such product will be secured on a timely basis or at all.

The marketability of any drug candidates for which Candid receives regulatory approval for commercial sale may suffer if government and other third-party payors fail to provide coverage and adequate reimbursement. Candid expects downward pressure on pharmaceutical pricing to continue. Further, coverage policies and third-party reimbursement rates may change at any time. Even if favorable coverage and reimbursement status is attained for one or more drugs for which Candid receives regulatory approval, less favorable coverage policies and reimbursement rates may be implemented in the future.

Product liability lawsuits against Candid could cause Candid to incur substantial liabilities and could limit commercialization of any drug candidate that Candid may develop.

The use of Candid's drug candidates in clinical trials and the sale of any drugs for which Candid obtains regulatory approval exposes Candid to the risk of product liability claims. Product liability claims might be brought against Candid by consumers, healthcare professionals, pharmaceutical companies or others selling or otherwise coming into contact with Candid's drugs. On occasion, large judgments have been awarded in class action lawsuits based on drugs that had unanticipated adverse effects. If Candid cannot successfully defend against product liability claims, Candid could incur substantial liability and costs. In addition, regardless of merit or eventual outcome, product liability claims may result in:

- impairment of Candid's business reputation and significant negative media attention;

- withdrawal of participants from Candid's clinical trials;
- significant costs to defend the related litigation;
- distraction of management's attention from Candid's primary business;
- substantial monetary awards to patients or other claimants;
- inability to commercialize Candid's drug candidates;
- product recalls, withdrawals or labeling, marketing or promotional restrictions;
- decreased demand for Candid's drug candidates, if approved for commercial sale; and
- loss of revenue.

Risks Related to Government Regulation

The regulatory approval process of the FDA and comparable foreign regulatory authorities are lengthy, time-consuming and inherently unpredictable, and even if Candid completes the necessary clinical trials, Candid cannot predict when, or if, it will obtain regulatory approval for any of its drug candidates, and any such regulatory approval may be for a more narrow indication than Candid seeks.

The research, testing, manufacturing, labeling, storage, record-keeping, approval, selling, import, export, marketing, advertising, promotion, and distribution of drugs, including biologics, are subject to extensive regulation by the FDA and comparable foreign regulatory authorities in and outside the United States. Prior to seeking approval to commercialize a drug candidate in the United States or abroad, Candid must demonstrate with substantial evidence from adequate and well-controlled clinical trials, and to the satisfaction of the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities, that such drug candidates are safe, pure and potent, or effective, for their intended uses. Results from nonclinical studies and clinical trials can be interpreted in different ways. Even if Candid believes available nonclinical or clinical data support the safety purity and potency, or efficacy, of its drug candidates, such data may not be sufficient to obtain approval from the FDA and comparable foreign regulatory authorities. The FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities, as the case may be, may also require Candid to conduct additional preclinical studies or clinical trials for its drug candidates either prior to or post-approval, or may object to elements of Candid's clinical development program.

Candid is not permitted to market any biological drug product in the United States or outside the United States until Candid receives approval of a BLA from the FDA or similar approvals from comparable foreign regulatory authorities. Candid has not previously submitted a BLA to the FDA, or similar approval filings to comparable foreign authorities. A BLA and similar applications must include extensive preclinical and clinical data and supporting information to establish the drug candidate's safety, purity and potency, or effectiveness for each intended indication. The BLA and similar applications must also include significant information regarding the chemistry, manufacturing and controls for the product, including with respect to chain of identity and chain of custody of the product. The process of obtaining such regulatory approval is expensive, often takes many years following the commencement of clinical trials and can vary substantially based upon the type, complexity and novelty of the drug candidates involved, as well as the target indications and patient population. Approval policies or regulations may change, and the FDA and comparable regulatory authorities have substantial discretion in the approval process, including the ability to delay, limit or deny approval of a drug candidate for many reasons. Despite the time and expense invested in clinical development of drug candidates, regulatory approval of a drug candidate is never guaranteed. Of the large number of drugs in development, only a small percentage successfully complete the FDA or foreign regulatory approval processes and are commercialized.

Candid's drug candidates could fail to receive regulatory approval from the FDA or a comparable foreign regulatory authority for many reasons, including:

- disagreement with the design or conduct of Candid's clinical trials;
- failure to demonstrate to the satisfaction of regulatory authorities that Candid's drug candidates are safe, pure and potent, or effective for any proposed indication;
- negative or ambiguous results from Candid's clinical trials or results may not meet the level of statistical significance or persuasiveness required by the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory agencies for approval;

- serious and unexpected drug-related side effects may be experienced by participants in Candid's clinical trials or by individuals using drugs similar to Candid's drug candidates;
- the population studied in the clinical trial may not be sufficiently broad or representative to assure safety in the full population for which Candid seeks approval;
- such authorities may not accept clinical data from trials that are conducted at clinical facilities or in countries where the standard of care is potentially different from that of their own country;
- Candid may be unable to demonstrate that a drug candidate's clinical and other benefits outweigh its safety risks;
- disagreement with Candid's interpretation of data from preclinical studies or clinical trials;
- the insufficiency of data collected from clinical trials of Candid's drug candidates to support the submission and filing of a BLA or other submission or to obtain regulatory approval;
- such authorities may disagree with Candid regarding the formulation, labeling and/or the product specifications of Candid's drug candidates;
- such authorities may find deficiencies in the manufacturing processes or facilities of the third-party manufacturers with which Candid contracts for clinical and commercial supplies; or
- changes in the approval policies or regulations that render Candid's preclinical and clinical data insufficient for approval.

This lengthy approval process as well as the unpredictability of future clinical trial results may result in Candid failing to obtain regulatory approval to market its drug candidates, which would significantly harm Candid's business, results of operations and prospects. The FDA or a comparable foreign regulatory authority may require more information, including additional preclinical or clinical data to support approval, which may delay or prevent approval and Candid's commercialization plans, or Candid may decide to abandon the development program. If Candid were to obtain approval, regulatory authorities may approve any of Candid's drug candidates for fewer or more limited indications than Candid requests (including failing to approve the most commercially promising indications), may grant approval contingent on the performance of costly post-marketing clinical studies, or may approve a drug candidate with a label that does not include the labeling claims necessary or desirable for the successful commercialization of that drug candidate. Even if Candid's drug candidates meet their safety and efficacy endpoints in clinical trials, such results may not enable Candid to obtain regulatory approval.

In addition, Candid may experience delays or rejections based upon additional government regulation from future legislation or administrative action, or changes in regulatory authority policy during the period of product development, clinical trials and the review process. Accordingly, the regulatory approval pathway for Candid's drug candidates may be uncertain, complex, expensive and lengthy, and approval may not be obtained. For instance, the regulatory landscape related to clinical trials in the EU recently evolved. The EU Clinical Trials Regulation No. 536/2014 ("CTR"), which was adopted in April 2014 and repeals the EU Clinical Trials Directive 2001/20 ("CTD"), became applicable on January 31, 2022. The CTR foresaw a three-year transition period that ended on January 31, 2025. Since this date, all new or ongoing trials are subject to the provisions of the CTR. Compliance with the CTR requirements by Candid and its third-party service providers, such as CROs, may impact Candid's development plans.

In addition, on December 11, 2025, the European Commission, the Parliament and the European Council reached a political agreement on a comprehensive overhaul of EU pharmaceutical legislation (the "Pharma Package"). The reform has been under negotiation since the European Commission submitted its proposal in April 2023. This package—comprised of a new directive and regulation to replace existing legislation—aims to modernize the EU framework.

The political agreement is still subject to formal approval by the European Parliament and Council. If approved in the form proposed, the Pharma Package will, among other changes, reduce the baseline market protection period by one year, with limited opportunities for extensions; and expand the Bolar exemption. A decrease in market exclusivity opportunities for our product candidates in the EU, combined with the expanded Bolar exemption, could open them to generic or biosimilar competition earlier than under the current regime, potentially impacting reimbursement status and the commercial prospects of our product candidates. The revisions may have a significant impact on the pharmaceutical industry and Candid's business in the long term.

Obtaining and maintaining regulatory approval of Candid's drug candidates in one jurisdiction does not mean that Candid will be successful in obtaining regulatory approval of its drug candidates in other jurisdictions.

Obtaining and maintaining regulatory approval of Candid's drug candidates in one jurisdiction does not guarantee that Candid will be able to obtain or maintain regulatory approval in any other jurisdiction, while a failure or delay in obtaining regulatory approval in one jurisdiction may have a negative effect on the regulatory approval process in others. For example, even if the FDA grants regulatory approval of a drug candidate, comparable foreign regulatory authorities in foreign jurisdictions must also approve the manufacturing, marketing and promotion of the drug candidate in those countries. Approval procedures vary among jurisdictions and can involve requirements and administrative review periods different from, and greater than, those in the United States, including additional preclinical studies or clinical trials as clinical studies conducted in one jurisdiction may not be accepted by regulatory authorities in other jurisdictions. In many jurisdictions outside the United States, a drug candidate must be approved for reimbursement before it can be approved for sale in that jurisdiction. In some cases, the price that Candid intends to charge for its drugs is also subject to approval.

Candid may also submit marketing applications in other countries. Regulatory authorities in jurisdictions outside of the United States have requirements for approval of drug candidates with which Candid must comply prior to marketing in those jurisdictions. Obtaining foreign regulatory approvals and compliance with foreign regulatory requirements could result in significant delays, difficulties and costs for Candid and could delay or prevent the introduction of Candid's drugs in certain countries. If Candid fails to comply with the regulatory requirements in international markets and/or receive applicable marketing approvals, Candid's target market will be reduced and Candid's ability to realize the full market potential of its drug candidates will be harmed.

Even if Candid receives regulatory approval of its drug candidates, Candid will be subject to ongoing regulatory obligations and continued regulatory review, which may result in significant additional expense and Candid may be subject to penalties if it fails to comply with regulatory requirements or experiences unanticipated problems with its drug candidates.

Any regulatory approvals that Candid receives for its drug candidates will require surveillance to monitor the safety and efficacy of the drug candidate. The FDA may also require a REMS in order to approve Candid's drug candidates, which could entail requirements for a medication guide, physician communication plans or additional elements to ensure safe use, such as restricted distribution methods, patient registries and other risk minimization tools. In addition, if the FDA or a comparable foreign regulatory authority approves Candid's drug candidates, the manufacturing processes, labeling, packaging, distribution, adverse event reporting, storage, advertising, promotion, import, export and recordkeeping for Candid's drug candidates will be subject to extensive and ongoing regulatory requirements. These requirements include submissions of safety and other post-marketing information and reports, registration, as well as continued compliance with cGMPs and GCPs for any clinical trials that Candid conducts. As such, Candid and its CDMOs will be subject to continual review and inspections to assess compliance with cGMP and adherence to commitments made in any BLA, other marketing applications and previous responses to inspectional observations. Accordingly, Candid and others with whom Candid works must continue to expend time, money and effort in all areas of regulatory compliance, including manufacturing, production and quality control. In addition, the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities could require Candid to conduct another study to obtain additional safety or biomarker information.

Further, Candid will be required to comply with FDA and comparable foreign regulatory authorities' promotion and advertising rules, which include, among others, standards for direct-to-consumer advertising, restrictions on promoting drugs for uses or in patient populations that are not described in the product's approved uses (known as "off-label use"), limitations on industry-sponsored scientific and educational activities and requirements for promotional activities involving the internet and social media. Although the FDA and comparable foreign regulatory authorities do not regulate a physician's choice of drug treatment made in the physician's independent medical judgment, they do restrict promotional communications from companies or their sales forces with respect to off-label uses of drugs for which marketing clearance has not been issued. Later discovery of previously unknown problems with Candid's drug candidates, including adverse events of unanticipated severity or frequency, or with Candid's third-party suppliers or manufacturing processes, or failure to comply with regulatory requirements, may result in revisions to the approved labeling to add new safety information; imposition of post-market studies or clinical studies to assess new safety risks; or imposition of distribution restrictions or other restrictions under a REMS or similar foreign program. Other potential consequences include, among other things:

- restrictions on the marketing or manufacturing of Candid's drug candidates, withdrawal of the product from the market or voluntary or mandatory product recalls;
- fines, untitled letters, warning letters or holds on clinical trials;
- refusal by the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authority to approve pending applications or supplements to approved applications submitted by Candid or suspension or revocation of license approvals;
- product seizure or detention, or refusal to permit the import or export of Candid's drug candidates; and
- injunctions or the imposition of civil or criminal penalties.

FDA and comparable foreign regulatory authorities' policies may change and additional government regulations may be enacted that could prevent, limit or delay regulatory approval of Candid's drug candidates. Candid cannot predict the likelihood, nature or extent of government regulation that may arise from future legislation or administrative or executive action, either in the United States or abroad. If Candid is slow or unable to adapt to changes in existing requirements or the adoption of new requirements or policies, or if Candid is not able to maintain regulatory compliance, Candid may lose any regulatory approval that it may have obtained and may not achieve or sustain profitability.

Candid's relationships with customers, physicians, other healthcare professionals and third-party payors are subject, directly or indirectly, to federal, state, local and foreign healthcare fraud and abuse laws, false claims laws, transparency laws, health information privacy and security laws and other healthcare laws and regulations. If Candid or its employees, independent contractors, consultants, commercial partners and vendors violate these laws, Candid could face substantial penalties.

Healthcare professionals and third-party payors in the United States and elsewhere will play a primary role in the recommendation and prescription of any drug candidates for which Candid obtains marketing approval. Candid's current and future arrangements with healthcare professionals, third-party payors, customers and others may expose Candid to broadly applicable fraud and abuse and other healthcare laws and regulations. These laws may impact, among other things, Candid's clinical research program, as well as Candid's proposed and future sales, marketing and education programs. In particular, the promotion, sales and marketing of healthcare items and services is subject to extensive laws and regulations designed to prevent fraud, kickbacks, self-dealing and other abusive practices. These laws and regulations may restrict or prohibit a wide range of pricing, discounting, marketing and promotion, sales commission, customer incentive and other business arrangements. Candid may also be subject to federal, state and foreign laws governing the privacy and security of identifiable patient information. The U.S. healthcare laws and regulations that may affect Candid's ability to operate include, but are not limited to:

- the federal Anti-Kickback Statute, which prohibits, among other things, any person or entity from knowingly and willfully, offering, paying, soliciting or receiving any remuneration, directly or indirectly, overtly or covertly, in cash or in kind, to induce, or in return for, the purchasing, leasing, ordering or arranging for the purchase, lease, or order of any item or service reimbursable, in whole or in part, under Medicare, Medicaid or other federal healthcare programs. The term "remuneration" has been broadly interpreted to include anything of value. Although there are a number of statutory exceptions and regulatory safe harbors protecting some common activities from prosecution, the exceptions and safe harbors are drawn narrowly and require strict compliance in order to offer protection. Practices that may be alleged to be intended to induce prescribing, purchases or recommendations, including any payments of more than fair market value, may be subject to scrutiny if they do not qualify for an exception or safe harbor. In addition, a person or entity does not need to have actual knowledge of this statute or specific intent to violate it in order to have committed a violation;
- federal civil and criminal false claims laws, including the federal civil False Claims Act ("FCA") and civil monetary penalties laws, which prohibit, among other things, individuals or entities from knowingly presenting, or causing to be presented, claims for payment or approval from Medicare, Medicaid, or other federal government programs that are false or fraudulent or knowingly making a false statement to improperly avoid, decrease or conceal an obligation to pay money to the federal government, including federal healthcare programs. In addition, the government may assert that a claim including items or services resulting from a violation of the federal Anti-Kickback Statute constitutes a false or fraudulent claim for purposes of the FCA. Private individuals, commonly known as “whistleblowers,” can bring federal civil FCA qui tam actions, on behalf of the government and such individuals and may share in amounts paid by the entity to the government in recovery or settlement;

- the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (“HIPAA”) which created new federal criminal statutes that prohibit knowingly and willfully executing, or attempting to execute, a scheme to defraud any healthcare benefit program or obtain, by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, any of the money or property owned by, or under the custody or control of, any healthcare benefit program, including private third-party payors and knowingly and willfully falsifying, concealing or covering up by any trick, scheme or device, a material fact or making any materially false, fictitious or fraudulent statements in connection with the delivery of, or payment for, healthcare benefits, items or services. Similar to the federal Anti-Kickback Statute, a person or entity does not need to have actual knowledge of the statute or specific intent to violate it in order to have committed a violation;
- HIPAA, as amended by the Health Information Technology for Economic and Clinical Health Act (“HITECH”), and their respective implementing regulations, which impose requirements on covered entities, including certain healthcare providers, health plans and healthcare clearinghouses, and their respective business associates that perform services for them that involve creating, receiving maintaining or transmitting protected health information (“PHI”) and their subcontractors that use, disclose, access, or otherwise process PHI, relating to the privacy, security and transmission of individually identifiable health information. Penalties for HIPAA violations can be significant. They vary greatly depending on the nature of violation, and could include civil monetary or criminal penalties. HIPAA also authorizes state attorneys general to file suit under HIPAA on behalf of state residents. Courts can award damages, costs and attorneys’ fees related to violations of HIPAA in such cases. While HIPAA does not create a private right of action allowing individuals to sue Candid in civil court for HIPAA violations, its standards have been used as the basis for a duty of care claim in state civil suits such as those for negligence or recklessness in the misuse or breach of PHI;
- the federal Physician Payments Sunshine Act and its implementing regulations require that certain manufacturers of drugs, devices, biological and medical supplies for which payment is available under Medicare, Medicaid or the Children’s Health Insurance Program, with certain exceptions, annually report information to CMS related to certain payments or other transfers of value made or distributed to physicians (defined to include doctors, dentists, optometrists, podiatrists and chiropractors), certain non-physician practitioners (physician assistants, nurse practitioners, clinical nurse specialists, certified registered nurse anesthetists, anesthesiologist assistants, and certified nurse midwives) and teaching hospitals, or to entities or individuals at the request of, or designated on behalf of, the physicians and teaching hospitals and to report annually certain ownership and investment interests held by physicians and their immediate family members; and
- federal consumer protection and unfair competition laws, which broadly regulate marketplace activities and activities that potentially harm consumers.

Also, many states have similar fraud and abuse statutes or regulations similar to the aforementioned federal laws that apply to items and services reimbursed under Medicaid and other state programs, or, in several states, apply regardless of the payor. In order to manufacture or distribute drugs commercially, Candid must comply with state laws that require the registration of manufacturers and wholesale distributors of drug and biological drugs in a state, including, in certain states, manufacturers and distributors who ship drugs into the state even if such manufacturers or distributors have no place of business within the state. Some states also impose requirements on manufacturers and distributors to establish the pedigree of product in the chain of distribution, including some states that require manufacturers and others to adopt new technology capable of tracking and tracing product as it moves through the distribution chain. Several states and local jurisdictions have enacted legislation requiring pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies to establish marketing compliance programs and comply with the pharmaceutical industry’s voluntary compliance guidelines and the relevant compliance guidance promulgated by the federal government, file periodic reports with the state, make periodic public disclosures on sales, marketing, pricing, clinical trials and other activities and/or register their sales representatives, as well as to prohibit pharmacies and other healthcare entities from providing certain physician prescribing data to pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies for use in sales and marketing, and to prohibit certain other sales and marketing practices.

Candid may also be subject to foreign equivalents of each of the healthcare laws described above. For example, in the EU, interactions between pharmaceutical companies and healthcare professionals and healthcare organizations are also governed by strict laws, regulations, industry self-regulation codes of conduct and physicians' codes of professional conduct both at the EU level and in the individual EU Member States. The provision of benefits or advantages to physicians to induce or encourage the prescription, recommendation, endorsement, purchase, supply, order or use of pharmaceutical drugs is prohibited in the EU. Relationships with healthcare professionals and associations are subject to stringent anti-gift statutes and anti-bribery laws, the scope of which differs across the EU. Failure to comply with these requirements could result in reputational risk, public reprimands, administrative penalties, fines or imprisonment.

Because of the breadth of these laws and the narrowness of the statutory exceptions and regulatory safe harbors available, it is possible that some of Candid's business activities, including certain arrangements Candid has with physicians who are paid in the form of stock or stock options for services provided to Candid, could be subject to challenge under one or more of such laws. If Candid or its employees, independent contractors, consultants, commercial partners and vendors violate these laws, Candid may be subject to investigations, enforcement actions and/or significant penalties. If any such actions are instituted against Candid, and Candid is not successful in defending itself or asserting its rights, those actions could have a significant impact on Candid's business, including the imposition of significant civil, criminal and administrative penalties, damages, disgorgement, monetary fines, imprisonment, possible exclusion from participation in Medicare, Medicaid and other federal healthcare programs or comparable foreign programs, contractual damages, reputational harm, diminished profits and future earnings, additional reporting requirements and/or oversight if Candid becomes subject to a corporate integrity agreement or similar agreement to resolve allegations of non-compliance with these laws, and curtailment of Candid's operations, any of which could adversely affect Candid's ability to operate its business and its results of operations. In addition, the approval and commercialization of any of Candid's drug candidates outside the United States will also likely subject Candid to foreign equivalents of the healthcare laws mentioned above, among other foreign laws.

Candid expects the drug candidates it develops will be regulated as biologics, and therefore they may be subject to competition sooner than anticipated.

The BPCIA was enacted as part of the Patient Protection Affordable Care Act of 2010, as amended by the Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act (collectively, the "Affordable Care Act"), to establish an abbreviated pathway for the approval of biosimilar and interchangeable biological drugs. The regulatory pathway establishes legal authority for the FDA to review and approve biosimilar biologics, including the possible designation of a biosimilar as "interchangeable" based on its similarity to an approved biologic. Under the BPCIA, an application for a biosimilar product cannot be approved by the FDA until 12 years after the reference product was approved under a BLA. The law is complex and is still being interpreted and implemented by the FDA. As a result, its ultimate impact, implementation and meaning are subject to uncertainty. While it is uncertain when processes intended to implement BPCIA may be fully adopted by the FDA, any of these processes could have a material adverse effect on the future commercial prospects for Candid's biological drugs.

Candid believes that any drug candidate it develops that is approved in the United States as a biological product under a BLA, if any, should qualify for the 12-year period of exclusivity. However, there is a risk that this exclusivity could be shortened due to congressional action or otherwise, or that the FDA will not consider the subject drug candidates to be reference drugs for competing drugs, potentially creating the opportunity for generic competition sooner than anticipated. Moreover, the extent to which a biosimilar, once approved, will be substituted for any one of the reference drugs in a way that is similar to traditional generic substitution for non-biological drugs is not yet clear, and will depend on a number of marketplace and regulatory factors that are still developing.

In the EU, there is a special regime for biosimilars, or biological medicinal drugs that are similar to a reference medicinal product but that do not meet the definition of a generic medicinal product. For such drugs, the results of appropriate preclinical or clinical trials must be provided in support of a Marketing Authorization Application ("MAA"). Guidelines from the EMA detail the type of quantity of supplementary data to be provided for different types of biological product. In addition, the approval of a biologic product biosimilar to one of Candid's drugs could have a material adverse impact on Candid's business as it may be significantly less costly to bring to market and may be priced significantly lower than Candid's drugs.

Even if Candid obtains regulatory approval of its drug candidates, the drugs may not gain market acceptance among physicians, patients, hospitals, rheumatology clinics and others in the medical community.

The use of TCEs as a potential autoimmune disease treatment may not become broadly accepted by physicians, patients, hospitals, rheumatology clinics and others in the medical community. Factors that will influence whether Candid's drug candidates are accepted in the market include:

- the clinical indications for which Candid's drug candidates are approved;
- physicians, hospitals, rheumatology clinics and patients considering Candid's drug candidates as a safe and effective treatment;
- the potential and perceived advantages of Candid's drug candidates over alternative treatments;
- the incidence and severity of any side effects;
- product labeling or product insert requirements of the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities;
- limitations or warnings contained in the labeling approved by the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities;
- the timing of market introduction of Candid's drug candidates as well as competitive drugs;
- the cost of treatment in relation to alternative treatments;
- Candid's pricing and the availability of coverage and adequate reimbursement by third-party payors, including government authorities;
- the willingness of patients to pay out-of-pocket in the absence of coverage and adequate reimbursement by third-party payors, including government authorities;
- relative convenience and ease of administration, including as compared to alternative treatments and competitive therapies; and
- the effectiveness of Candid's sales and marketing efforts.

If Candid's drug candidates are approved but fail to achieve market acceptance among physicians, patients, hospitals, rheumatology clinics or others in the medical community, Candid will not be able to generate significant revenue. Even if Candid's drugs achieve market acceptance, Candid may not be able to maintain that market acceptance over time if new drugs or technologies are introduced that are more favorably received than Candid's drugs, are more cost effective or render Candid's drugs obsolete.

The advancement of healthcare reform in the United States may negatively impact Candid's ability to profitably sell its drug candidates, if approved.

Third-party payors, whether domestic or foreign, or governmental or commercial, are developing increasingly sophisticated methods of controlling healthcare costs. In both the United States and certain foreign jurisdictions, there have been a number of legislative and regulatory changes to the healthcare system that could impact Candid's ability to profitably sell its drug candidates, if approved. For example, in 2010 the Affordable Care Act was enacted. The Affordable Care Act and its implementing regulations substantially changed the way healthcare is financed by both governmental and private insurers.

Since its enactment, there have been executive, judicial and political challenges to certain aspects of the Affordable Care Act. For example, on July 4, 2025, the OBBBA was signed into law, which narrowed access to Affordable Care Act marketplace exchange enrollment and declined to extend the Affordable Care Act enhanced advanced premium tax credits that expired at the end of 2025, which, among other provisions in the law, are anticipated to reduce the number of Americans with health insurance. The OBBBA also is expected to reduce Medicaid spending and enrollment by implementing work requirements for some beneficiaries, capping state-directed payments, reducing federal funding, and limiting provider taxes used to fund the program. Congress is considering proposed legislation intended to further reduce healthcare costs with alternatives to replace the expired Affordable Care Act subsidies.

Other legislative changes have been proposed and adopted since the Affordable Care Act was enacted, including aggregate reductions to Medicare payments to providers, which went into effect beginning on April 1, 2013 and due to subsequent legislative amendments to the statute will stay in effect through 2032, unless additional Congressional action is taken.

The current administration is pursuing policies to reduce regulations and expenditures across government agencies including at HHS, the FDA, CMS and related agencies. These actions, presently directed by executive orders or memoranda from the Office of Management and Budget, may propose policy changes that create additional uncertainty for our business. For example, the current administration has announced agreements with several pharmaceutical companies that require the drug manufacturers to offer, through a direct-to-consumer platform (TrumpRx) U.S. patients and Medicaid programs prescription drug Most-Favored Nation pricing equal to or lower than those paid in other developed nations, with additional mandates for direct-to-patient discounts and repatriation of foreign revenues. Other recent actions, for example, include (1) directing agencies to reduce agency workforce and cut programs; (2) directing HHS and other agencies to lower prescription drug costs through a variety of initiatives; (3) imposing tariffs on imported pharmaceutical products; and (4) as part of the Make America Healthy Again Commission's Strategy Report released in September 2025, working across government agencies to increase enforcement on direct-to-consumer pharmaceutical advertising. Additionally, the current administration recently called on Congress to enact "The Great Healthcare Plan," to codify and expand Most-Favored Nation pricing, lower government subsidies to private insurance companies, increase healthcare price transparency, expand pharmaceutical drugs available for over-the-counter purchase, and enact restrictions on pharmacy benefit manager payment methodologies, among other things. These actions and policies may significantly reduce U.S. drug prices, potentially impacting manufacturers' global pricing strategies and profitability, while increasing their operational costs and compliance risks. In June 2024, the U.S. Supreme Court's Loper Bright decision greatly reduced judicial deference to regulatory agencies, which could increase successful legal challenges to federal regulations affecting our operations. Congress may introduce and ultimately pass health care related legislation that could impact the drug approval process and make changes to the Medicare Drug Price Negotiation Program.

Individual states in the United States have also become increasingly active in passing legislation and implementing regulations designed to control pharmaceutical product pricing, including price or patient reimbursement constraints, discounts, restrictions on certain product access and marketing cost disclosure and transparency measures and, in some cases, designed to encourage importation from other countries and bulk purchasing.

Additional state and federal healthcare reform measures likely will be adopted in the future, any of which could impact Candid's operations. Candid's revenue prospects could be affected by changes in healthcare spending and policy in the U.S. and abroad. Candid operates in a highly regulated industry and new laws, regulations or judicial decisions, or new interpretations of existing laws, regulations or decisions, related to healthcare availability, the method of delivery or payment for healthcare products and services could negatively impact Candid's business, operations and financial condition.

There have been, and likely will continue to be, legislative and regulatory proposals at the foreign, federal and state levels directed at broadening the availability of healthcare and containing or lowering the cost of healthcare. The continuing efforts of the government, insurance companies, managed care organizations and other payors of healthcare services to contain or reduce costs of healthcare and/or impose price controls may adversely affect Candid's ability to generate revenue and achieve or maintain profitability.

The advancement of healthcare reform globally may negatively impact Candid's ability to profitably sell its drug candidates, if approved.

In the EU, similar developments may affect Candid's ability to profitably commercialize its drug candidates, if approved. In addition to continuing pressure on prices and cost containment measures, legislative developments at the EU or Member State level may result in significant additional requirements or obstacles that may increase Candid's operating costs. The delivery of healthcare in the EU, including the establishment and operation of health services and the pricing and reimbursement of medicinal drugs, is almost exclusively a matter for national, rather than EU, law and policy. National governments and health service providers have different priorities and approaches to the delivery of health care and the pricing and reimbursement of drugs in that context. In general, however, the healthcare budgetary constraints in most EU Member States have resulted in restrictions on the pricing and reimbursement of medicinal drugs by relevant health service providers. Coupled with ever-increasing EU and national regulatory burdens on those wishing to develop and market drugs, this could prevent or delay marketing approval of Candid's drug candidates, restrict or regulate post-approval activities and affect Candid's ability to commercialize its drug candidates, if approved. In markets outside of the United States and EU, reimbursement and healthcare payment systems vary significantly by country, and many countries have instituted price ceilings on specific drugs and therapies.

On January 12, 2025, Regulation (EU) 2021/2282 on Health Technology Assessment (the “HTA Regulation”) entered into application through a phased implementation. It is intended to increase cooperation among EU Member States in assessing clinical aspects of health technologies, including new medicinal products. The Regulation establishes a framework for joint clinical assessments, joint scientific consultations, and the early identification of emerging health technologies. The Regulation permits EU Member States to use common tools, methodologies, and procedures and requires them to rely on EU-level joint clinical assessment reports for the clinical components of their national HTA evaluations. EU Member States, however, remain responsible for assessing non-clinical aspects, such as economic, ethical, and social considerations, and for making pricing and reimbursement decisions at the national level. Candid cannot predict the initiatives that may be adopted in the future. The continuing efforts of the government, insurance companies, managed care organizations and other payors of healthcare services to contain or reduce costs of healthcare and/or impose price controls may adversely affect:

- the demand for Candid’s drug candidates, if Candid obtains regulatory approval;
- Candid’s ability to set a price that Candid believes is fair for its drugs;
- Candid’s ability to generate revenue and achieve or maintain profitability;
- the level of taxes that Candid is required to pay; and
- the availability of capital.

Any reduction in reimbursement from Medicare or other government programs may result in a similar reduction in payments from private payors, which may adversely affect Candid’s future profitability.

Candid and the third parties with whom Candid works are subject to stringent and evolving U.S. and foreign laws, regulations, and rules, contractual obligations, industry standards, policies and other obligations related to data privacy and security. Candid’s actual or perceived failure to comply with such obligations (or such failure by the third parties with whom Candid works) could lead to regulatory investigations or actions; litigation (including class claims) and mass arbitration demands; fines and penalties; disruptions of Candid’s business operations; reputational harm; loss of revenue or profits; and other adverse business consequences.

In the ordinary course of business, Candid collects, receives, stores, processes, generates, uses, transfers, discloses, makes accessible, protects, secures, disposes of, transmits, and shares (collectively, “processes”) personal data and other sensitive information, including proprietary and confidential business data, trade secrets, intellectual property, clinical trial data, and sensitive third-party data (collectively, “sensitive information”).

Candid’s data processing activities subject Candid to numerous data privacy and security obligations, such as various laws, regulations, guidance, industry standards, external and internal privacy and security policies, contractual requirements, and other obligations relating to data privacy and security.

In the United States, federal, state, and local governments have enacted numerous data privacy and security laws, including data breach notification laws, personal data privacy laws, consumer protection laws (e.g., Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act), and other similar laws (e.g., wiretapping laws). For example, HIPAA, as amended by the HITECH, imposes specific requirements relating to the privacy, security, and transmission of individually identifiable protected health information. Additionally, numerous U.S. states have enacted comprehensive privacy laws that impose certain obligations on covered businesses, including providing specific disclosures in privacy notices and affording residents with certain rights concerning their personal data. As applicable, such rights may include the right to access, correct, or delete certain personal data, and to opt-out of certain data processing activities, such as targeted advertising, profiling, and automated decision-making. The exercise of these rights may impact Candid’s business and ability to provide Candid’s products and services. Certain states also impose stricter requirements for processing certain personal data, including sensitive information, such as conducting data privacy impact assessments. These state laws allow for statutory fines for noncompliance. For example, the CCPA, applies to personal data of consumers, business representatives, and employees who are California residents, and requires businesses subject to the CCPA to provide specific disclosures in privacy notices and respond to requests of such individuals to exercise certain privacy rights. The CCPA and other comprehensive U.S. state privacy laws exempt some data processed in the context of clinical trials. Similar laws are being considered at the federal and local levels, and Candid expects more governmental bodies to pass similar laws in the future. These developments further complicate compliance efforts and increase legal risk and compliance costs for Candid and the third parties upon whom Candid relies.

Outside the United States, an increasing number of laws, regulations, and industry standards govern data privacy and security. For example, the European Union's General Data Protection Regulation ("EU GDPR"), the United Kingdom's GDPR ("UK GDPR"), Brazil's General Data Protection Law (Law No. 13,709/2018), and China's Personal Information Protection Law ("PIPL") impose requirements for processing personal data. For example, the PIPL requires an organization that determines the processing purposes and means to provide sufficient notice and rely on an adequate legal basis when processing personal data. In addition, the PIPL allows for fines to be assessed for noncompliance of up to RMB 50 million, or 5% of the prior year's total annual revenue.

Candid's personnel and personnel of third parties with whom Candid works use generative artificial intelligence ("AI") and/or automated machine learning technologies to perform their work and the disclosure and use of personal data in AI technologies is subject to various privacy laws and other obligations. Governments have passed and are likely to pass additional laws and regulations regulating AI and/or automated decision-making technologies. Candid's use of this technology imposes additional compliance costs and noncompliance with our relevant obligations could lead to, among other things, regulatory investigations and actions, as well as private claims. If Candid were unable to use AI and/or automated decision-making technologies, it could make Candid's business less efficient and result in competitive disadvantages.

In addition, Candid may be unable to transfer personal data from Europe, China and other jurisdictions to the United States or other countries due to data localization requirements or limitations on cross-border data flows. Europe, China and other jurisdictions have enacted laws requiring data to be localized or limiting the transfer of data (including personal data in certain instances) to other countries. In particular, the EEA and the UK have significantly restricted the transfer of personal data to the United States and other countries whose privacy laws it generally believes are inadequate. China has established a cross-border data transfer regulatory framework that requires organizations to adopt an applicable transfer mechanism for the transfer if certain threshold is reached. Other jurisdictions (including the U.S.) have in the past and may in the future adopt similarly stringent interpretations of their data localization and cross-border data transfer laws. Although there are, for example, currently various mechanisms that may be used to transfer personal data from the EEA, the UK and China to the United States in compliance with law, such as the EU's standard contractual clauses, the UK's International Data Transfer Agreement / Addendum, and the EU-U.S. Data Privacy Framework, the UK extension thereto (which allows for transfers for relevant U.S.-based organizations who self-certify compliance and participate in the Framework) and China's Standard Contract for the Cross-border Transfer of Personal Information, these mechanisms are subject to legal challenges or contain practical enforcement uncertainties, and there is no assurance that Candid can satisfy or rely on these measures to lawfully transfer personal data to the United States or other jurisdictions. If there were no lawful manner for Candid to transfer personal data from the EEA, the UK, China or other jurisdictions to the United States, or if the requirements for a legally-compliant transfer are too onerous, Candid could face significant adverse consequences, including the interruption or degradation of Candid's operations, the need to relocate part of or all of our business or data processing activities to other jurisdictions (such as Europe) at significant expense, increased exposure to regulatory actions, substantial fines and penalties, the inability to transfer data and work with partners, vendors and other third parties, and injunctions against our processing or transferring of personal data necessary to operate our business. Additionally, companies that transfer personal data out of the EEA and UK to other jurisdictions, particularly to the United States, are subject to increased scrutiny from regulators, individual litigants, and activities groups. Some European regulators have ordered certain companies to suspend or permanently cease certain transfers of personal data out of Europe for allegedly violating the GDPR's cross-border data transfer limitations. Additionally, the DOJ issued a rule entitled the Preventing Access to U.S. Sensitive Personal Data and Government-Related Data by Countries of Concern or Covered Persons, which places additional restriction on certain data transactions involving countries of concern (e.g., China, Russia, Iran) and covered individuals persons (i.e., individuals and entities who are designated as such by the U.S. Attorney General or considered "foreign persons" and are majority owned by, organized under the laws of, a primary resident in, or a contractor of, a covered person or country of concern, as applicable) that impacts certain business activities such as vendor engagements, sale or sharing of data, employment of certain individuals, and investor agreements. Violations of the rule could lead to significant civil and criminal fines and penalties. The rule applies regardless of whether data is anonymized, key-coded, pseudonymized, de-identified or encrypted, which presents particular challenges for companies like ours that operate in the clinical trial space and impacts the ability to transfer data in connection with certain transactions or agreements.

In addition to data privacy and security laws, Candid is contractually subject to industry standards adopted by industry groups and is, or may become, subject to such obligations in the future. Candid is also bound by contractual obligations related to data privacy and security, and its efforts to comply with such obligations may not be successful.

Candid has in the past and may in the future publish privacy policies, marketing materials, and other statements concerning data privacy or security. Regulators are increasingly scrutinizing these statements, and if these policies, materials or statements are found to be deficient, lacking in transparency, deceptive, unfair, misleading, or misrepresentative of our practices, Candid may be subject to investigation, enforcement actions by regulators or other adverse consequences.

Obligations related to data privacy and security (and individuals' data privacy expectations) are quickly changing, becoming increasingly stringent and creating uncertainty. Additionally, these obligations may be subject to differing applications and interpretations, which may be inconsistent or conflict among jurisdictions. Preparing for and complying with these obligations requires Candid to devote significant resources, which may necessitate changes to Candid's business, information technologies, systems, and practices and to those of any third parties that process personal data on Candid's behalf.

Candid may at times fail (or be perceived to have failed) in its efforts to comply with its data privacy and security obligations, and despite Candid's efforts, Candid's personnel or third parties with whom Candid works may fail to comply with such obligations, which could negatively impact Candid's business operations.

If Candid or the third parties with whom Candid works fail, or are perceived to have failed, to address or comply with applicable data privacy and security obligations, Candid could face significant consequences, including but not limited to: government enforcement actions (e.g., investigations, fines, penalties, audits, inspections, and similar); litigation (including class-action claims) and mass arbitration demands; additional reporting requirements and/or oversight; bans or restrictions on processing personal data; orders to destroy or not use personal data; and imprisonment of company officials.

In particular, plaintiffs have become increasingly more active in bringing privacy-related claims against companies, including class claims and mass arbitration demands. Some of these claims allow for the recovery of statutory damages on a per violation basis, and, if viable, carry the potential for significant statutory damages.

Any of these events could have a material adverse effect on Candid's reputation, business, or financial condition, including but not limited to: interruptions or stoppages in Candid's business operations (including, as relevant, clinical trials); inability to process personal data or to operate in certain jurisdictions; limited ability to develop or commercialize Candid's drugs; expenditure of time and resources to comply or defend any claim or inquiry; adverse publicity; or substantial changes to Candid's business model or operations.

Compliance with China's Data Security Law, Cybersecurity Law, Personal Information Protection Law and any other future laws and regulations may entail significant expenses and could affect Candid's business.

China has implemented or will implement rules and is considering a number of additional proposals relating to data privacy and security. China's Data Security Law took effect in September 2021. The Data Security Law mandates the country to establish a data categorization and classification framework and entities processing "important data" must comply with specific data protection obligations. In addition, the Data Security Law prohibits entities in China from transferring data stored in China to foreign law enforcement agencies or judicial authorities without prior approval by the Chinese government.

According to China's Cybersecurity Law, which as enacted in November 2016, came into effect in June 2017, and revised on October 28, 2025 and effective on January 1, 2026, network operators must follow the principles of legality, legitimacy and necessity when collecting and using personal information, publicly disclose the rules for personal information collection and use, clearly state the purpose, method and scope of collecting and using personal information, and obtain the consent of the person whose information is collected and used. Network operators shall not collect personal information unrelated to the services they provide. Network operators are not allowed to leak, tamper with, or damage the personal information they have collected, and are not allowed to provide personal information to others without the consent of the person whose data has been collected. Network operators should take technical measures and other necessary measures to ensure the security of the personal information collected and used and prevent the leakage, damage and loss of such personal information.

On September 24, 2024, the State Council issued the Regulations on Network Data Security Management, which came into effect on January 1, 2025. The Regulations on Network Data Security Management aim to implement the general requirements for data security management set forth in the Cybersecurity Law, the Data Security Law, and the PIPL. These regulations specify the compliance requirements for data processing activities, personal information protection, "important data" security, cross-border data transfer and the obligations of online platform service providers.

Also, China enacted the PIPL, which became effective on November 1, 2021. The PIPL creates a comprehensive data privacy and protection framework that applies both to the processing of personal information in China and the processing activities conducted outside of China if such processing is for purposes of providing products and services to, or analyzing and evaluating the behavior of, individuals in China. The PIPL also introduces data localization and cross-border data transfer restrictions, including requiring critical information infrastructure operators and personal information processing entities who process personal information meeting a volume threshold set by the Cyberspace Administration of China ("CAC") to store in China personal information generated or collected in China locally, and to pass a security assessment administered by the CAC for any export of such personal information. Lastly, the PIPL imposes significant fines for serious violations of up to RMB 50 million or 5% of annual revenues from the prior year. For clinical trials conducted in China, Candid receives trial subject identification codes and clinical trial data from collaborating research institutions in clinical trial projects. Candid cannot use such information to re-identify the specific identity of the trial subject.

In addition, certain industry-specific Chinese laws and regulations apply to the collection and processing of data in China and the transfer of data outside of China. China's Regulations on the Administration of Human Genetic Resources ("HGR Regulation"), was promulgated by the State Council in May 2019 and came into effect in July 2019 and was then revised in March 2024 with revisions taking effect in May 2024. It stipulates that foreign organizations, individuals and the entities established or actually controlled by foreign organizations or individuals are forbidden to collect, preserve and export China's human genetic resources. Foreign organizations and the entities established or actually controlled by foreign organizations or individuals may only utilize and be provided with China's human genetic resources after satisfaction of all requirements under the HGR Regulation and other applicable laws, such as (i) China's human genetic resources being utilized only in international cooperation with Chinese scientific research institutions, universities, medical institutions and enterprises for scientific research and clinical trials after completion of requisite approval or filing formalities with competent governmental authorities, and (ii) China's human genetic resources information being provided after required filing and information backup procedures have been gone through. In May 2023, the Ministry of Science and Technology issued the Implementation Rules for the Administrative Regulation on Human Genetic Resources, which came into effect on July 1, 2023. These rules clarify key definitions under the HGR Regulation and provided detailed measures on the approval and filing process established under the HGR Regulation. On October 17, 2020, China enacted the Biosecurity Law, which became effective on April 15, 2021, and latest amended on April 26, 2024. The Biosecurity Law establishes a comprehensive framework governing the prevention and control of outbreak of major newly-emerged infectious diseases, animal and plant epidemics, security of biotechnology research, development and application, biosafety management of pathogenic microbiology laboratories, security management of human genetic resources and biological resources, prevention of the invasion of alien species and protection of biodiversity, countermeasures against microbial resistance and prevention of bioterrorism and threat of biological weapons.

While Candid intends to closely monitor the evolving laws and regulations in this area and take reasonable measures to mitigate compliance risks, Candid cannot guarantee that its business and operations will not be adversely affected by Chinese laws and regulations related to data privacy and security. In addition, there remains uncertainties on the interpretation, application and enforcement of these laws, rules and regulations and their scopes may continually change, through new legislation, amendments to existing legislation or changes in enforcement. Compliance with China's data privacy and security laws, including without limitation, the Cybersecurity Law, Data Security Law and the PIPL could significantly increase the cost to Candid of providing its service offerings, require significant changes to its operations or even prevent it from providing certain service offerings in jurisdictions in which Candid currently operates or in which it may operate in the future. Despite Candid's efforts to comply with applicable laws, regulations and other obligations relating to data privacy and security, it is possible that Candid's practices, offerings or platform could fail to meet all of the requirements. Any failure on Candid's part to comply with such law or regulations or any other obligations relating to data privacy and security, or any compromise of security that results in unauthorized access, use or disclosure of personal information or other data, or the perception or allegation that any of the foregoing types of failure or compromise has occurred, could damage Candid's reputation, discourage new and existing counterparties from contracting with Candid or result in investigations, fines, suspension or other penalties by Chinese government authorities and private claims or litigation, any of which could adversely affect Candid's business, financial condition and results of operations. Even if Candid's practices are not subject to legal challenge, the perception of privacy concerns, whether or not valid, may harm its reputation and brand and adversely affect its business, financial condition and results of operations.

Candid's business activities may be subject to the FCPA and similar anti-bribery and anti-corruption laws of other countries in which Candid operates, as well as U.S. and certain foreign export controls, trade sanctions and import laws and regulations. Compliance with these legal requirements could limit Candid's ability to compete in foreign markets and subject Candid to liability if Candid violates them.

If Candid expands its operations outside of the United States, Candid must dedicate additional resources to comply with numerous laws and regulations in each jurisdiction in which Candid plans to operate. Candid's business activities may be subject to the FCPA and similar anti-bribery or anti-corruption laws, regulations or rules of other countries in which Candid operates. The FCPA generally prohibits companies and their employees and third-party intermediaries from offering, promising, giving or authorizing the provision of anything of value, either directly or indirectly, to a non-U.S. government official in order to influence official action or otherwise obtain or retain business. The FCPA also requires public companies to make and keep books and records that accurately and fairly reflect the transactions of the corporation and to devise and maintain an adequate system of internal accounting controls.

Candid's business is heavily regulated and therefore involves significant interaction with public officials, including officials of non-U.S. governments. Additionally, in many other countries, hospitals owned and operated by the government, and doctors and other hospital employees would be considered foreign officials under the FCPA. Recently the SEC and DOJ have increased their FCPA enforcement activities with respect to biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies. There is no certainty that all of Candid's employees, agents or contractors, or those of Candid's affiliates, will comply with all applicable laws and regulations, particularly given the high level of complexity of these laws. Violations of these laws and regulations could result in fines, criminal sanctions against Candid, its officers or its employees, disgorgement and other sanctions and remedial measures, and prohibitions on the conduct of Candid's business. Any such violations could include prohibitions on Candid's ability to offer its product in one or more countries and could materially damage Candid's reputation, its brand, its international activities, its ability to attract and retain employees and its business.

In addition, Candid's product and activities may be subject to U.S. and foreign export controls, trade sanctions and import laws and regulations. Governmental regulation of the import or export of Candid's product, or Candid's failure to obtain any required import or export authorization for its product, when applicable, could harm Candid's international sales and adversely affect its revenue. Compliance with applicable regulatory requirements regarding the export of Candid's product may create delays in the introduction of Candid's product in international markets or, in some cases, prevent the export of Candid's product to some countries altogether. Furthermore, U.S. export control laws and economic sanctions prohibit the shipment of certain drugs and services to countries, governments and persons targeted by U.S. sanctions. If Candid fails to comply with export and import regulations and such economic sanctions, penalties could be imposed, including fines and/or denial of certain export privileges. Moreover, any new export or import restrictions, new legislation or shifting approaches in the enforcement or scope of existing regulations, or in the countries, persons, or product targeted by such regulations, could result in decreased use of Candid's product by, or in Candid's decreased ability to export its product to, existing or potential customers with international operations. Any decreased use of Candid's product or limitation on Candid's ability to export or sell access to its product would likely significantly harm Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

Candid is subject to various laws relating to foreign investment and the export of certain technologies, and Candid's failure to comply with these laws or adequately monitor the compliance of its suppliers and others Candid does business with could subject Candid to substantial fines, penalties and even injunctions, the imposition of which on Candid could have a material adverse effect on the success of Candid's business.

Candid is subject to U.S. laws that regulate foreign investments in U.S. businesses and access by foreign persons to technology developed and produced in the United States. These laws include Section 721 of the Defense Production Act of 1950, as amended by the Foreign Investment Risk Review Modernization Act of 2018, and the regulations at 31 C.F.R. Parts 800 and 801, as amended, administered by the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States; and the Export Control Reform Act of 2018, which is being implemented in part through Commerce Department rulemakings to impose new export control restrictions on "emerging and foundational technologies" yet to be fully identified. Application of these laws, including as they are implemented through regulations being developed, may negatively impact Candid's business in various ways, including by restricting Candid's access to capital and markets; limiting the collaborations Candid may pursue; regulating the export of Candid's drugs, services and technology from the United States and abroad; increasing Candid's costs and the time necessary to obtain required authorizations and to ensure compliance; and threatening monetary fines and other penalties if Candid does not comply.

Any failure to comply with Chinese regulations regarding the registration requirements for our employee equity incentive plans may subject us to fines and other legal or administrative sanctions, which could adversely affect our business, financial condition and results of operations.

In February 2012, the PRC State Administration of Foreign Exchange ("SAFE") promulgated the Notices on Issues Concerning the Foreign Exchange Administration for Domestic Individuals Participating in Stock Incentive Plans of Overseas Publicly Listed Companies ("Stock Option Rules"). In accordance with the Stock Option Rules and other relevant rules and regulations, Chinese citizens or non-Chinese citizens residing in China for a continuous period of not less than one year who participate in any stock incentive plan of an overseas publicly listed company, subject to a few exceptions, are required to register with SAFE through a domestic qualified agent, which could be a Chinese subsidiary of such overseas listed company, and complete certain procedures. Candid and Candid's employees who are Chinese citizens or who reside in China for a continuous period of not less than one year and who participate in Candid's share incentive plans will be subject to such regulation after the Closing. Candid plans to assist its employees to register their equity awards. However, any failure of Candid's Chinese individual beneficial owners and holders of equity awards to comply with the SAFE registration requirements may subject them to fines and legal sanctions and may limit the ability of Candid's Chinese subsidiary to distribute dividends to Candid. Candid also faces regulatory uncertainties that could restrict its ability to adopt additional incentive plans for its directors and employees under Chinese law.

As a company with operations and business relationships outside of the United States, Candid's business is subject to economic, political, regulatory and other risks associated with international operations.

Candid's business is subject to risks associated with conducting business outside the United States, including its operations in China. Candid's future results could be harmed by a variety of factors, including:

- economic weakness, including inflation, or political instability in particular non-U.S. economies and markets;
- differing and changing regulatory requirements for drug development activities, clinical trials, registration, production, distribution, packaging, labeling, storage and shipment, advertising, licensing and post-approval pharmacovigilance certification requirements and procedures, periodic renewal and reassessment processes, data privacy and security requirements and compliance, environmental protection, health and safety;
- limitations on access to clinical data or other results from foreign vendors or from certain foreign geographies;

- communication, language or cultural barriers, including with respect to translations of preclinical studies or clinical trial data or protocols;
- differing jurisdictions could present different issues for securing, maintaining or obtaining freedom to operate in such jurisdictions;
- potentially reduced protection for intellectual property rights;
- difficulties in compliance with different, complex and changing laws, regulations and court systems of multiple jurisdictions and compliance with a wide variety of foreign laws, treaties and regulations;
- inquiries, investigations or other actions or proceedings by foreign regulatory authorities or judicial systems;
- changes in non-U.S. regulations and customs, tariffs and trade barriers;
- changes in non-U.S. currency exchange rates, including of the RMB, or restrictions on the ability to obtain non-U.S. currency exchange, including Candid's ability to finance its PRC subsidiary;
- changes in a specific country's or region's political or economic environment especially with respect to a particular country's treatment of or stance towards other countries;
- trade protection measures, import or export licensing requirements or other restrictive actions by governments;
- differing reimbursement regimes and price controls in certain non-U.S. markets;
- negative consequences from changes in tax laws;
- compliance with tax, employment, immigration and labor laws for employees living or traveling abroad;
- variable tax treatment in different jurisdictions of options granted under our equity incentive plans;
- regulations restricting foreign investment or involving complex reporting or compliance requirements, particularly in the PRC;
- workforce uncertainty in countries where labor unrest is more common than in the United States; and
- business interruptions resulting from geopolitical actions, including war, military conflicts and terrorism, health epidemics, or natural disasters including earthquakes, typhoons, floods and fires.

Risks Related to Candid's Intellectual Property

Candid depends substantially on intellectual property rights granted under its agreements with Genor, EpimAb, and Wuxi Biologics. If Candid loses its existing licenses or is unable to acquire or license additional proprietary rights from third parties, Candid may not be able to continue developing its drug candidates.

Candid is dependent on patents, know-how and proprietary technology that it owns and licenses from others. Candid depends substantially on its agreements with Genor, EpimAb, and Wuxi Biologics, including the licenses granted thereunder. These licenses may be terminated upon certain conditions. Any termination of these licenses could result in the loss of significant rights and could harm Candid's ability to commercialize its drug candidates. In the future, Candid may also enter into additional license agreements that are material to the development of its drug candidates.

Candid may also enter into additional agreements, including license agreements, with other parties in the future that impose diligence, development and commercialization timelines, milestone payments, royalties, insurance and other obligations on Candid. Candid is also obligated to achieve certain development milestones with respect to licensed drugs in Candid's fields of use within specified time periods. If Candid fails to comply with its obligations to Genor, EpimAb, Wuxi Biologics or any of Candid's other current or future collaborators, Candid's counterparties may have the right to terminate these agreements, in which event Candid might not be able to develop, manufacture or market any drug candidate that is covered by these agreements, which could adversely affect the value of the drug candidate being developed under any such agreement. Termination of these agreements or reduction or elimination of Candid's rights under these agreements may result in Candid having to negotiate new or reinstated agreements with less favorable terms, or cause Candid to lose its rights under these agreements, including Candid's rights to important intellectual property or technology.

Candid may rely on third parties from whom it licenses proprietary technology to file and prosecute patent applications and maintain patents and otherwise protect the intellectual property Candid licenses from them. Candid may have limited control over these activities or any other intellectual property that may be related to Candid's in-licensed intellectual property. In certain situations in Candid's agreements with Genor, EpimAb and WuXi Biologics, Candid does not have the right to control patent prosecution, and Candid cannot be certain that any action or inaction taken by Candid's licensors will not have an adverse impact on Candid's intellectual property rights. For example, Candid cannot be certain that such activities by these licensors will be conducted in compliance with applicable laws and regulations or will result in valid and enforceable patents and other intellectual property rights. Additionally, under Candid's agreements with Genor, EpimAb and WuXi Biologics, the territories exclude China, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and Macau. As such, Candid has limited control over the patent prosecution in these jurisdictions, and Candid cannot be certain that the licensors will not make a statement or take a position that is inconsistent with Candid's patent prosecution strategy in the other jurisdictions. If this should happen in the excluded territories, this could negatively impact Candid's patent prosecution strategies in the other jurisdictions. Candid may have limited control over the manner in which its licensors initiate an infringement proceeding against a third-party infringer of the intellectual property rights, or defend certain of the intellectual property that may be licensed to Candid. In addition, Candid may in the future co-own some of its patent rights with other third parties. Candid may need the cooperation of any future co-owners of its patent rights in order to enforce such patent rights against third parties, and such cooperation may not be provided to Candid. It is also possible that Candid's licensors' or co-owners' infringement proceedings or defense activities may be less vigorous than if Candid conducts them itself. Any of the foregoing could have a material adverse effect on Candid's competitive position, business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

The licensing and acquisition of third-party intellectual property rights is a competitive practice, and companies that may be more established, or have greater resources than Candid, may also be pursuing strategies to license or acquire third-party intellectual property rights that Candid may consider necessary or attractive in order to commercialize its drug candidates. More established companies may have a competitive advantage over Candid due to their larger size and cash resources or greater clinical development and commercialization capabilities. Candid may not be able to successfully complete such negotiations and ultimately acquire on commercially acceptable terms the rights to the intellectual property surrounding the additional drug candidates that Candid may seek to acquire. Furthermore, Candid may be unable to in-license on commercially acceptable terms any compositions, methods of use, processes, or other third-party intellectual property rights from third parties, which Candid identifies as necessary for its drug candidates.

If Candid is unable to obtain and maintain sufficient intellectual property protection for its drug candidates, or if the scope of the intellectual property protection is not sufficiently broad, Candid's competitors could develop and commercialize drugs similar or identical to Candid's, and Candid's ability to successfully commercialize its drugs may be adversely affected.

Candid relies, and will continue to rely, upon a combination of patents, know-how, trade secrets and confidentiality agreements to protect the intellectual property related to its drugs and technologies and to prevent third parties from copying and surpassing Candid's achievements, thus eroding Candid's competitive position in its market. Candid also relies on protection afforded by in-licensed intellectual property rights and proprietary technology of third parties.

Candid's success depends in large part on its ability to obtain, maintain and enforce issued patents, trademarks and other intellectual property rights and proprietary technology in the United States and other countries for its drug candidates and their uses, as well as Candid's ability to operate without infringing the proprietary rights of others. Candid seeks to protect its proprietary position by filing patent applications in the United States and abroad related to its novel discoveries and technologies that are important to its business. Candid's pending and future patent applications may not result in patents being issued or provide assurance that issued patents will afford sufficient protection of Candid's drug candidates or their intended uses against competitors, nor can there be any assurance that the patents issued will not be infringed, designed around, invalidated by third parties, or effectively prevent others from commercializing competitive technologies, drugs or drug candidates.

Obtaining and enforcing patents is expensive and time-consuming, and Candid may not be able to file and prosecute all necessary or desirable patent applications or maintain and/or enforce patents that may issue based on Candid's patent applications, at a reasonable cost or in a timely manner. It is also possible that Candid will fail to identify patentable aspects of its research and development results before it is too late to obtain patent protection. Although Candid may have the right to have some input in connection with such activities, Candid may not have the right to control the preparation, filing, and prosecution of patent applications that are licensed to Candid by third parties in the future, or to control prosecution and maintenance of patents that Candid out-licenses to third parties in the future. Although Candid enters into non-disclosure and confidentiality agreements with parties who have access to patentable aspects of its research and development output, such as Candid's employees, corporate collaborators, outside scientific collaborators, CROs, CDMOs, consultants, advisors and other third parties, any of these parties may breach these agreements and disclose such results before a patent application is filed, thereby jeopardizing Candid's ability to seek patent protection. Consequently, Candid may not be able to prevent any third parties from using any of Candid's technology that is in the public domain to compete with Candid's technologies or drug candidates.

Composition of matter patents for biological and pharmaceutical drug candidates often provide a strong form of intellectual property protection for those types of drugs, as such patents provide protection without regard to any method of use. Candid cannot be certain that the claims in Candid's or its licensors' pending patent applications directed to composition of matter of Candid's drug candidates will be considered patentable by the USPTO or by patent offices in foreign countries, or that any claims that issue from Candid's patent applications will be considered valid and enforceable by courts in the United States or foreign countries. In addition, Candid cannot be certain that the claims of such patents, if granted, will be sufficiently broad to effectively prevent competitors from working around Candid's claimed inventions by developing an alternative formulation and thereby competing with Candid without infringing Candid's patent rights. Method of use patents protect the use of a product for the specified method. This type of patent does not prevent a competitor from making and marketing a product that is identical to Candid's product for an indication that is outside the scope of the patented method. Moreover, even if competitors do not actively promote their product for Candid's targeted indications, physicians may prescribe these drugs "off-label." Although off-label prescriptions may infringe or contribute to the infringement of method of use patents, the practice is common and such infringement is difficult to prevent or prosecute.

The patent position of biopharmaceutical companies generally is highly uncertain, involves complex legal and factual questions and has in recent years been the subject of much litigation, resulting in court decisions, including U.S. Supreme Court decisions, which have increased uncertainties as to the ability to enforce patent rights in the future. In addition, the laws of foreign countries may not protect Candid's rights to the same extent as the laws of the United States, or vice versa. European applications now have the option, upon grant of a patent, of becoming a Unitary Patent which will be subject to the jurisdiction of the UPC. This has been a significant change in European patent practice. As the UPC is a new court system, there is no precedent for the court, increasing the uncertainty of any litigation. During the first seven years of the UPC's existence, a patent owner may opt its European patents out of the jurisdiction of the UPC. Candid may decide to opt out its future European patents from the UPC, but doing so may preclude Candid from realizing the benefits of the UPC. Moreover, if Candid does not meet all of the formalities and requirements for opt-out under the UPC, Candid's future European patents could remain under the jurisdiction of the UPC. The UPC will provide Candid's competitors with a new forum to centrally revoke Candid's European patents and allow for the possibility of a competitor to obtain a pan-European injunction. Such a loss of patent protection could have a material adverse impact on Candid's business and its ability to commercialize its technology and drug candidates.

Geopolitical actions in the United States and in foreign countries could increase the uncertainties and costs surrounding the prosecution or maintenance of Candid's patent applications or those of any current or future licensors and the maintenance, enforcement or defense of Candid's issued patents or those of any current or future licensors. For example, the United States and foreign government actions related to the military conflict in Ukraine and Russia may limit or prevent filing, prosecution and maintenance of patent applications in Russia. Government actions may also prevent maintenance of issued patents in Russia. These actions could result in abandonment or lapse of Candid's patents or patent applications, resulting in partial or complete loss of patent rights in Russia. If such an event were to occur, it could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business. In addition, a decree was adopted by the Russian government in March 2022, allowing Russian companies and individuals to exploit inventions owned by patentees that have citizenship or nationality in, are registered in, or have predominately primary place of business or profit-making activities in the United States and other countries that Russia has deemed unfriendly without consent or compensation. Consequently, Candid would not be able to prevent third parties from practicing Candid's inventions in Russia or from selling or importing drugs made using Candid's inventions in and into Russia. Accordingly, Candid's competitive position may be impaired, and Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects may be adversely affected.

As noted above, Candid depends substantially on its agreements with Genor, EpimAb, and WuXi Biologics, all of which are companies that are based in China. Any escalation in geopolitical tensions with China and the United States could have unpredictable consequences related to the ability to enforce the agreements and also the enforceability of the associated intellectual property rights. Any inability to enforce these agreements or intellectual property rights could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business. Additionally, unlike U.S. bankruptcy law which grants safe harbor to non-debtor licensees, Chinese bankruptcy law gives a court-appointed administrator authority to determine whether or not to continue to perform an agreement formed before the bankruptcy application. As a result, a license agreement may be terminated by an administrator and thus result in termination of the license and loss of freedom-to-operate. Candid cannot be certain that it will not lose freedom-to-operate in the event Genor, EpimAb, and WuXi Biologics file for bankruptcy.

The patent application process is subject to numerous risks and uncertainties, and there can be no assurance that Candid or any of its potential future collaborators will be successful in protecting Candid's drug candidates by obtaining and defending patents. For example, Candid may not be aware of all third-party intellectual property rights potentially relating to Candid's drug candidates or their intended uses, and as a result the impact of such third-party intellectual property rights upon the patentability of Candid's own patents and patent applications, as well as the impact of such third-party intellectual property upon Candid's freedom to operate, is highly uncertain. Patent applications in the United States and other jurisdictions are typically not published until 18 months after filing or, in some cases, not at all. Therefore, Candid cannot know with certainty whether Candid was the first to make the inventions claimed in its patents or pending patent applications, or that Candid was the first to file for patent protection of such inventions. As a result, the issuance, inventorship, scope, validity, enforceability and commercial value of Candid's patent rights are highly uncertain. Candid's pending patent applications may be challenged in patent offices in the United States and abroad. Even issued patents may later be found invalid or unenforceable or may be modified or revoked in proceedings instituted by third parties before various patent offices or in courts. For example, Candid's pending patent applications may be subject to third-party pre-issuance submissions of prior art to the USPTO or Candid's issued patents may be subject to post-grant review proceedings, oppositions, derivations, reexaminations, or inter partes review proceedings, in the United States or elsewhere, challenging Candid's patent rights or the patent rights of others. Such submissions may also be made prior to a patent's issuance, precluding the granting of a patent based on one or more of our owned or licensed pending patent applications. An adverse determination in any such challenges may result in loss of exclusivity or in patent claims being narrowed, invalidated, or held unenforceable, in whole or in part, which could limit Candid's ability to stop others from using or commercializing similar or identical technology and drugs, or limit the duration of the patent protection of Candid's technology and drugs. In addition, given the amount of time required for the development, testing and regulatory review of new drug candidates, patents protecting such candidates might expire before or shortly after such candidates are commercialized. The degree of future protection for Candid's proprietary rights is uncertain. Only limited protection may be available and may not adequately protect Candid's rights or permit Candid to gain or keep any competitive advantage. Any failure to obtain or maintain patent protection with respect to Candid's drug candidates or their uses could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects. Such challenges also may result in substantial cost and require significant time from our scientists and management, even if the eventual outcome is favorable to us. Any of the foregoing could adversely affect our business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects.

In addition to the protection afforded by patents, Candid relies on trade secret protection and confidentiality agreements to protect proprietary know-how that is not patentable, processes for which patents are difficult to obtain and any other elements of Candid's discovery and development processes that involve proprietary know-how, information or technology that are not covered by Candid's patents. Candid may also rely on trade secret protection as temporary protection for concepts that may be included in a future patent filing. However, trade secret protection will not protect Candid from innovations that a competitor develops independently of Candid's proprietary know-how. If a competitor independently develops a technology that Candid protects as a trade secret and files a patent application on that technology, then Candid may not be able to patent that technology in the future, may require a license from the competitor to use Candid's own know-how, and if the license is not available on commercially-viable terms, then Candid may not be able to launch its product. Although Candid requires all of its employees to assign their inventions to Candid, and requires all of its employees, consultants, advisors and any third parties who have access to Candid's proprietary know-how, information or technology to enter into confidentiality agreements, Candid cannot be certain that its trade secrets and other confidential proprietary information will not be disclosed or that competitors will not otherwise gain access to Candid's trade secrets or independently develop substantially equivalent information and techniques. Furthermore, the laws of some foreign countries do not protect proprietary rights to the same extent or in the same manner as the laws of the United States. As a result, Candid may encounter significant problems in protecting and defending its intellectual property both in the United States and abroad. If Candid is unable to prevent unauthorized material disclosure of its intellectual property to third parties, Candid will not be able to establish or maintain a competitive advantage in its market, and this scenario could materially adversely affect Candid's business, financial condition and results of operations.

Candid cannot ensure that patent rights relating to inventions described and claimed in its pending patent applications will issue or that patents based on Candid's patent applications will not be challenged and rendered invalid and/or unenforceable.

The patent application process is subject to numerous risks and uncertainties, and there can be no assurance that Candid or any of its potential future collaborators will be successful in protecting Candid's drug candidates by obtaining and defending patents. Candid has pending Patent Cooperation Treaty applications, and U.S. and foreign patent applications in its portfolio; however, Candid cannot predict:

- if and when patents may issue based on Candid's patent applications;
- the scope of protection of any patent issuing based on Candid's patent applications;
- whether the claims of any patent issuing based on Candid's patent applications will provide protection against competitors;
- whether or not third parties will find ways to invalidate or circumvent Candid's patent rights;
- whether or not others will obtain patents claiming aspects similar to those covered by Candid's patents and patent applications;
- whether Candid will need to initiate litigation or administrative proceedings to enforce and/or defend Candid's patent rights, which will be costly whether Candid wins or loses; and/or
- whether the patent applications that Candid owns or has in-licensed will result in issued patents with claims that cover Candid's drug candidates or uses thereof in the United States or in other foreign countries.

Candid cannot be certain that the claims in its pending patent applications directed to Candid's drug candidates and/or technologies will be considered patentable by the USPTO or by patent offices in foreign countries. There can be no assurance that any such patent applications will issue as granted patents. One aspect of the determination of patentability of Candid's inventions depends on the scope and content of the "prior art," information that was or is deemed available to a person of skill in the relevant art prior to the priority date of the claimed invention. There may be prior art of which Candid is not aware that may affect the patentability of Candid's patent claims or, if issued, affect the validity or enforceability of a patent claim. Even if the patents do issue based on Candid's patent applications, third parties may challenge the validity, enforceability or scope thereof, which may result in such patents being narrowed, invalidated or held unenforceable. Furthermore, even if they are unchallenged, patents in Candid's portfolio may not adequately exclude third parties from practicing relevant technology or prevent others from designing around Candid's claims. If the breadth or strength of Candid's intellectual property position with respect to its drug candidates is threatened, it could dissuade companies from collaborating with Candid to develop and threaten Candid's ability to commercialize its drug candidates. In the event of litigation or administrative proceedings, Candid cannot be certain that the claims in any of its issued patents will be considered valid by courts in the United States or foreign countries.

Intellectual property rights do not necessarily address all potential threats to Candid's competitive advantage.

The degree of future protection afforded by Candid's intellectual property rights is uncertain because intellectual property rights have limitations and may not adequately protect Candid's business or permit Candid to maintain its competitive advantage. For example:

- others may be able to make drug candidates that are similar to Candid's but that are not covered by the claims of the patents or patent applications that Candid owns or has exclusively licensed or the patent applications that Candid may file in the future;
- Candid or its licensors or collaborators might not have been the first to make the inventions covered by the patents or patent applications that Candid owns or has exclusively licensed or the patent applications that Candid may file in the future;
- Candid or its licensors or collaborators might not have been the first to file patent applications covering certain aspects of Candid's inventions;
- others may independently develop similar or alternative technologies or duplicate any of Candid's technologies without infringing Candid's intellectual property rights;
- it is possible that noncompliance with the USPTO and foreign governmental patent agencies' requirements for a number of procedural, documentary, fee payment and other provisions during the patent process can result in abandonment or lapse of a patent or patent application, and partial or complete loss of patent rights in the relevant jurisdiction;
- it is possible that Candid's pending patent applications will not lead to issued patents;
- issued patents that Candid owns or have exclusively licensed may be revoked, modified, or held invalid or unenforceable, as a result of legal challenges by Candid's competitors;
- Candid's competitors might conduct research and development activities in countries where Candid does not have patent rights and then use the information learned from such activities to develop competitive drugs for sale in Candid's major commercial markets;
- Candid may not develop additional proprietary technologies that are patentable;
- Candid cannot predict the scope of protection of any patent issuing based on Candid's patent applications, including whether the patent applications that Candid owns or has in-licensed will result in issued patents with claims directed to Candid's drug candidates or uses thereof in the United States or in other foreign countries;
- there may be significant pressure on the U.S. government and international governmental bodies to limit the scope of patent protection both inside and outside the United States for disease treatments that prove successful, as a matter of public policy regarding worldwide health concerns;
- countries other than the United States may have patent laws less favorable to patentees than those upheld by U.S. courts, allowing foreign competitors a better opportunity to create, develop and market competing drug candidates;
- the claims of any patent issuing based on Candid's patent applications may not provide protection against competitors or any competitive advantages, or may be challenged by third parties;
- if enforced, a court may not hold that Candid's patents are valid, enforceable and infringed;
- Candid may need to initiate litigation or administrative proceedings to enforce and/or defend Candid's patent rights, which will be costly whether Candid wins or loses;
- Candid may choose not to file a patent application in order to maintain certain trade secrets or know-how, and a third-party may subsequently file a patent application covering such intellectual property;
- Candid may fail to adequately protect and police its trademarks and trade secrets; and
- the patents of others may have an adverse effect on Candid's business, including if others obtain patents claiming subject matter similar to or improving that covered by Candid's patents and patent applications.

Should any of these or similar events occur, they could significantly harm Candid's business, results of operations and prospects.

Candid may not identify relevant third-party patents or may incorrectly interpret the relevance, scope or expiration of a third-party patent, which might adversely affect Candid's ability to develop and market its drugs.

Candid cannot guarantee that any of its patent searches or analyses, including the identification of relevant patents, the scope of patent claims or the expiration of relevant patents, are complete or thorough, nor can Candid be certain that it has identified each and every third-party patent and pending application in the United States and abroad that is relevant to or necessary for the commercialization of Candid's drug candidates in any jurisdiction.

The scope of a patent claim is determined by an interpretation of the law, the written disclosure in a patent and the patent's prosecution history. Candid's interpretation of the relevance or the scope of a patent or a pending application may be incorrect. For example, Candid may incorrectly determine that its drugs are not covered by a third-party patent or may incorrectly predict whether a third-party's pending application will issue with claims of relevant scope. Candid's determination of the expiration date of any patent in the United States or abroad that Candid considers relevant may be incorrect. Candid's failure to identify and correctly interpret relevant patents may negatively impact Candid's ability to develop and market its drugs.

Candid's intellectual property licenses with third parties may be subject to disagreements over contract interpretation, which could narrow the scope of Candid's rights to the relevant intellectual property or technology or increase Candid's financial or other obligations to its licensors.

Candid currently depends, and will continue to depend, on its license agreements, including its agreements with Genor, EpimAb, and WuXi Biologics. Further development and commercialization of Candid's current or any future drug candidates may require Candid to enter into additional license or collaboration agreements. The agreements under which Candid currently licenses intellectual property or technology from third parties are complex, and certain provisions in such agreements may be susceptible to multiple interpretations. The resolution of any contract interpretation disagreement that may arise could narrow what Candid believes to be the scope of its rights to the relevant intellectual property or technology, or increase what Candid believes to be its financial or other obligations under the relevant agreement, either of which could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

If any of Candid's licenses or material relationships or any in-licenses upon which Candid's licenses are based are terminated or breached, Candid may:

- lose its rights to develop and market its drugs;
- lose patent protection for its drugs;
- lose rights to important confidential know-how for manufacturing its drugs;
- experience significant delays in the development or commercialization of its drugs;
- incur significant extra costs in order to develop, manufacture and commercialize its drugs;
- not be able to obtain any other licenses on acceptable terms, if at all; or
- incur liability for damages.

These risks apply to any agreements that Candid may enter into in the future for its drugs or for any future drug candidates. If Candid experiences any of the foregoing, it could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

In the future, Candid may need to obtain licenses of third-party technology that may not be available to Candid or are available only on commercially unreasonable terms, and which may cause Candid to operate its business in a more costly or otherwise adverse manner than was not anticipated.

Other pharmaceutical companies and academic institutions may also have filed or are planning to file patent applications potentially relevant to Candid's business. From time to time, in order to avoid infringing these third-party patents, Candid may be required to license technology from additional third parties to further develop or commercialize its drug candidates. Should Candid be required to obtain licenses to any third-party technology, including any such patents required to manufacture, use or sell Candid's drug candidates, such licenses may not be available to Candid on commercially reasonable terms, or at all. The inability to obtain any third-party license required to develop or commercialize any of Candid's drug candidates could cause Candid to abandon any related efforts, which could seriously harm Candid's business and operations.

The licensing or acquisition of third-party intellectual property rights is a competitive area, and several more established companies may pursue strategies to license or acquire third-party intellectual property rights Candid may consider attractive or necessary. These established companies may have a competitive advantage over Candid due to their size, capital resources and greater clinical development and commercialization capabilities. In addition, companies that perceive Candid to be a competitor may be unwilling to assign or license rights to Candid.

If Candid is sued for infringing intellectual property rights of third parties, such litigation could be costly and time consuming and could prevent or delay Candid from developing or commercializing its drug candidates.

Candid's commercial success depends, in part, on its ability to develop, manufacture, market and sell its drug candidates without infringing the intellectual property and other proprietary rights of third parties. Third parties may allege that Candid has infringed or misappropriated their intellectual property. Litigation or other legal proceedings relating to intellectual property claims, with or without merit, is unpredictable and generally expensive and time consuming and, even if resolved in Candid's favor, is likely to divert significant resources from Candid's core business, including distracting Candid's technical and management personnel from their normal responsibilities. In addition, there could be public announcements of the results of hearings, motions or other interim proceedings or developments and if securities analysts or investors perceive these results to be negative, it could have a substantial adverse effect on the market price of Candid Common Stock. Such litigation or proceedings could substantially increase Candid's operating losses and reduce the resources available for development activities or any future sales, marketing or distribution activities. Candid may not have sufficient financial or other resources to adequately conduct such litigation or proceedings. Some of Candid's competitors may be able to sustain the costs of such litigation or proceedings more effectively than Candid can because of their greater financial resources and more mature and developed intellectual property portfolios. Uncertainties resulting from the initiation and continuation of patent litigation or other proceedings could have a material adverse effect on Candid's ability to compete in the marketplace.

There is a substantial amount of intellectual property litigation in the biotechnology and pharmaceutical industries, and Candid may become party to, or threatened with, litigation or other adversarial proceedings regarding intellectual property rights with respect to its drug candidates. Candid cannot be certain that its drug candidates and other proprietary technologies Candid may develop will not infringe existing or future patents owned by third parties. Third parties may assert infringement claims against Candid or its licensors based on existing or future intellectual property rights. Proving invalidity may be difficult. For example, in the United States, proving invalidity in court requires a showing of clear and convincing evidence to overcome the presumption of validity enjoyed by issued patents. If Candid or its licensors are found to infringe a third-party's intellectual property rights, Candid could be forced, including by court order, to cease developing, manufacturing or commercializing the infringing candidate product or product. Alternatively, Candid may be required to obtain a license from such third-party in order to use the infringing technology and continue developing, manufacturing or marketing the infringing candidate product or product. However, Candid may not be able to obtain any required license on commercially reasonable terms or at all. Even if Candid were able to obtain a license, it could be non-exclusive, thereby giving Candid's competitors access to the same technologies licensed to Candid. In addition, Candid could be found liable for monetary damages, including treble damages and attorneys' fees if Candid is found to have willfully infringed a patent. A finding of infringement could prevent Candid from commercializing its investigational drugs or force Candid to cease some of its business operations, which could materially harm Candid's business.

Candid or its licensors may not be aware of patents that have already been issued and that a third-party, for example, a competitor in the fields in which Candid is developing its drug candidates, might assert are infringed by Candid's current or future drug candidates, including claims to compositions, formulations, methods of manufacture or methods of use or treatment that cover Candid's drug candidates. It is also possible that patents owned by third parties of which Candid or its licensors are aware, but which Candid does not believe are relevant to its drug candidates and other proprietary technologies Candid may develop, could be found to be infringed by Candid's drug candidates. In addition, because patent applications can take many years to issue, there may be currently pending patent applications that may later result in issued patents that Candid's drug candidates may infringe. Candid's competitors in both the United States and abroad, many of which have substantially greater resources and have made substantial investments in patent portfolios and competing technologies, may have applied for or obtained or may in the future apply for and obtain, patents that will prevent, limit or otherwise interfere with Candid's ability to make, use and sell its drug candidates. The pharmaceutical and biotechnology industries have produced a considerable number of patents, and it may not always be clear to industry participants, including Candid, which patents cover various types of drugs or methods of use. The coverage of patents is subject to interpretation by the courts, and the interpretation is not always uniform. If Candid were sued for patent infringement, Candid would need to demonstrate that its drug candidates, drugs or methods either do not infringe the patent claims of the relevant patent or that the patent claims are invalid or unenforceable, and Candid may not be able to do this. Proving invalidity may be difficult and there is no assurance that a court of competent jurisdiction would invalidate the claims of any such U.S. patent. Even if Candid is successful in these proceedings, Candid may incur substantial costs and the time and attention of Candid's management and scientific personnel could be diverted in pursuing these proceedings, which could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business and operations. Furthermore, because of the substantial amount of discovery required in connection with intellectual property litigation, there is a risk that some of Candid's confidential information could be compromised by disclosure during litigation. In addition, Candid may not have sufficient resources to bring these actions to a successful conclusion.

Candid may choose to challenge the enforceability or validity of claims in a third-party's U.S. patent by requesting that the USPTO review the patent claims in an ex-parte re-exam, inter partes review or post-grant review proceedings. These proceedings are expensive and may consume Candid's time or other resources. Candid may choose to challenge a third-party's patent in patent opposition proceedings in the European Patent Office ("EPO"), or other foreign patent office. The costs of these opposition proceedings could be substantial and may consume Candid's time or other resources. If Candid fails to obtain a favorable result at the USPTO, EPO or other patent office then Candid may be exposed to litigation by a third-party alleging that the patent may be infringed by Candid's drug candidates or proprietary technologies.

If Candid is found to infringe a third-party's intellectual property rights, Candid could be forced, including by court order, to cease developing, manufacturing or commercializing the infringing drug candidate or product. Alternatively, Candid may be required to obtain a license from such third-party in order to use the infringing technology and continue developing, manufacturing or marketing the infringing drug candidate. However, Candid may not be able to obtain any required license on commercially reasonable terms or at all. Even if Candid were able to obtain a license, it could be non-exclusive, thereby giving Candid's competitors access to the same technologies licensed to Candid. In addition, Candid could be found liable for monetary damages, including treble damages and attorneys' fees if Candid is found to have willfully infringed a patent. A finding of infringement could prevent Candid from commercializing its drug candidates or force Candid to cease some of its business operations, and could divert the time and attention of Candid's technical personnel and management, cause development delays, and/or require Candid to develop non-infringing technology, which may not be possible on a cost-effective basis, any of which could materially harm Candid's business. In the event of a successful claim of infringement against Candid, Candid may have to pay substantial monetary damages, including treble damages and attorneys' fees for willful infringement, pay royalties and other fees, redesign Candid's infringing drug or obtain one or more licenses from third parties, which may be impossible or require substantial time and monetary expenditure. Claims that Candid has misappropriated the confidential information or trade secrets of third parties could have a similar negative impact on Candid's business.

Candid may become involved in lawsuits to protect or enforce its patents or other intellectual property, which could be expensive, time consuming and unsuccessful.

Competitors or other third parties may infringe Candid's patents, trademarks or other intellectual property. To counter infringement or unauthorized use, Candid may be required to file infringement claims, which can be expensive and time consuming and divert the time and attention of Candid's management and scientific personnel. Candid's pending patent applications cannot be enforced against third parties practicing the technology claimed in such applications unless and until a patent issues from such applications. Any claims Candid asserts against perceived infringers could provoke these parties to assert counterclaims against Candid alleging that Candid infringes their patents, in addition to counterclaims asserting that Candid's patents are invalid or unenforceable, or both. In patent litigation in the United States, defendant counterclaims alleging invalidity and/or unenforceability are commonplace. Grounds for a validity challenge could be an alleged failure to meet any of several statutory requirements, including lack of novelty, obviousness, non-enablement or insufficient written description. Grounds for an unenforceability assertion could be an allegation that someone connected with prosecution of the patent withheld relevant information from the USPTO or made a misleading statement during prosecution. The outcome following legal assertions of invalidity and unenforceability is unpredictable. In any patent infringement proceeding, there is a risk that a court will decide that a patent of Candid's is invalid or unenforceable, in whole or in part, and that Candid does not have the right to stop the other party from using the invention at issue. There is also a risk that, even if the validity of such patents is upheld, the court will construe the patent's claims narrowly or decide that Candid does not have the right to stop the other party from using the invention at issue on the grounds that Candid's patent claims do not cover the invention, or decide that the other party's use of Candid's patented technology falls under the safe harbor to patent infringement under 35 U.S.C. §271(e)(1). An adverse outcome in a litigation or proceeding involving Candid's patents could limit Candid's ability to assert its patents against those parties or other competitors and may curtail or preclude Candid's ability to exclude third parties from making and selling similar or competitive drugs. Any of these occurrences could adversely affect Candid's competitive business position, business prospects and financial condition. Similarly, if Candid asserts trademark infringement claims, a court may determine that the marks Candid has asserted are invalid or unenforceable, or that the party against whom Candid has asserted trademark infringement has superior rights to the marks in question. In this case, Candid could ultimately be forced to cease use of such trademarks.

Even if Candid establishes infringement, the court may decide not to grant an injunction against further infringing activity and instead award only monetary damages, which may or may not be an adequate remedy. Furthermore, because of the substantial amount of discovery required in connection with intellectual property litigation, there is a risk that some of Candid's confidential information could be compromised by disclosure during litigation. There could also be public announcements of the results of hearings, motions or other interim proceedings or developments. If securities analysts or investors perceive these results to be negative, it could have a material adverse effect on the price of shares of Candid Common Stock. Moreover, Candid cannot assure you that it will have sufficient financial or other resources to file and pursue such infringement claims, which typically last for years before they are concluded. Even if Candid ultimately prevails in such claims, the monetary cost of such litigation and the diversion of the attention of Candid's management and scientific personnel could outweigh any benefit Candid receives as a result of the proceedings.

Because of the expense and uncertainty of litigation, Candid may not be in a position to enforce its intellectual property rights against third parties.

Because of the expense and uncertainty of litigation, Candid may conclude that even if a third-party is infringing Candid's patents that may be issued as a result of Candid's pending or future patent applications or other intellectual property rights, the risk-adjusted cost of bringing and enforcing such a claim or action may be too high or not in the best interest of Candid or its stockholders, or it may be otherwise impractical or undesirable to enforce Candid's intellectual property against some third parties. Candid's competitors or other third parties may be able to sustain the costs of complex patent litigation or proceedings more effectively than Candid can because of their greater financial resources and more mature and developed intellectual property portfolios. In such cases, Candid may decide that the more prudent course of action is to simply monitor the situation or initiate or seek some other non-litigious action or solution. In addition, the uncertainties associated with litigation could compromise Candid's ability to raise the funds necessary to continue its preclinical studies, initiate and continue clinical trials, continue its internal research programs, in-license needed technology or other drug candidates, or enter into development partnerships that would help Candid bring its drug candidates to market.

Candid may be subject to claims that it has wrongfully hired an employee from a competitor or that Candid's employees, consultants or independent contractors have misappropriated or disclosed confidential information of third parties.

Candid may be subject to claims that its employees, consultants or advisors have misappropriated for Candid's benefit or disclosed to Candid confidential information of third parties. As is common in the pharmaceutical industry, in addition to its employees, in the future Candid may engage the services of consultants to assist Candid in the development of its drug candidates. Many of these potential consultants, and many of Candid's employees, were previously employed at, or may have previously provided or may be currently providing consulting services to, other pharmaceutical companies including Candid's competitors or potential competitors. Candid could in the future be subject to claims that Candid or its employees or consultants have inadvertently, or otherwise, misappropriated alleged trade secrets or other confidential information of former employers, clients or competitors. To the extent that Candid's employees, consultants or advisors use intellectual property rights or proprietary information owned by others in their work for Candid, disputes may arise as to the rights in any related or resulting know-how and inventions. Although Candid tries to ensure that its employees and consultants do not use the intellectual property, proprietary information, know-how or trade secrets of others in their work for Candid, Candid may become subject to claims that Candid caused an employee to breach the terms of his or her non-competition or non-solicitation agreement, or that Candid or these individuals have, inadvertently, or otherwise, used or disclosed the alleged trade secrets or other proprietary information of a former employer or competitor.

While Candid may litigate to defend itself against these claims, even if Candid is successful, litigation could result in substantial costs and could be a distraction to management. If Candid's defenses to these claims fail, in addition to requiring Candid to pay monetary damages, a court could prohibit Candid from using technologies or features that are essential to its drug candidates, if such technologies or features are found to incorporate or be derived from the trade secrets or other proprietary information of the former employers. Moreover, any such litigation or the threat thereof may adversely affect Candid's reputation, Candid's ability to form strategic alliances or sublicense its rights to collaborators, engage with scientific advisors or hire employees or consultants, each of which would have an adverse effect on Candid's business, results of operations and financial condition. Even if Candid is successful in defending against such claims, litigation could result in substantial costs and be a distraction to management.

Changes in patent law in the United States and other jurisdictions could diminish the value of patents in general, thereby impairing Candid's ability to protect its drug candidates.

As is the case with other biopharmaceutical companies, Candid's success is heavily dependent on intellectual property, particularly patents. Obtaining and enforcing patents in the biopharmaceutical industry involves both technological and legal complexity and is therefore costly, time consuming and inherently uncertain. Changes in either the patent laws or interpretation of the patent laws in the United States could increase the uncertainties and costs, and may diminish Candid's ability to protect its inventions, obtain, maintain, and enforce its intellectual property rights and, more generally, could affect the value of Candid's intellectual property or narrow the scope of Candid's patents that issue in the future. Patent reform legislation in the United States and other countries, including the Leahy-Smith America Invents Act ("Leahy-Smith Act"), signed into law on September 16, 2011, could increase those uncertainties and costs surrounding the prosecution of Candid's patent applications and the enforcement or defense of Candid's issued patents. The Leahy-Smith Act includes a number of significant changes to U.S. patent law. These include provisions that affect the way patent applications are prosecuted, redefine prior art and provide more efficient and cost-effective avenues for competitors to challenge the validity of patents. These include allowing third-party submission of prior art to the USPTO during patent prosecution and additional procedures to attack the validity of a patent by USPTO-administered post-grant proceedings, including post-grant review, inter partes review and derivation proceedings. Further, because of a lower evidentiary standard in these USPTO post-grant proceedings compared to the evidentiary standard in United States federal courts necessary to invalidate a patent claim, a third-party could potentially provide evidence in a USPTO proceeding sufficient for the USPTO to hold a claim invalid even though the same evidence would be insufficient to invalidate the claim if first presented in a district court action. Accordingly, a third-party may attempt to use the USPTO procedures to invalidate Candid's patent claims that would not have been invalidated if first challenged by the third-party as a defendant in a district court action. Thus, the Leahy-Smith Act and its implementation could increase the uncertainties and costs surrounding the prosecution of Candid's patent applications and the enforcement or defense of Candid's issued patents, all of which could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

After March 2013, under the Leahy-Smith Act, the United States transitioned to a first inventor to file system in which, assuming that the other statutory requirements are met, the first inventor to file a patent application will be entitled to the patent on an invention regardless of whether a third-party was the first to invent the claimed invention. A third-party that files a patent application with the USPTO after March 2013, but before Candid files an application covering the same invention, could therefore be awarded a patent covering an invention of Candid's even if Candid had made the invention before it was made by such third-party. This will require Candid to be cognizant going forward of the time from invention to filing of a patent application. Since patent applications in the United States and most other countries are confidential for a period of time after filing or until issuance, Candid cannot be certain that Candid or its licensors were the first to either (i) file any patent application related to Candid's drug candidates and other proprietary technologies Candid may develop or (ii) invent any of the inventions claimed in Candid's or Candid's licensor's patents or patent applications. Even where Candid has a valid and enforceable patent, Candid may not be able to exclude others from practicing the claimed invention where the other party can show that they used the invention in commerce before Candid's filing date or the other party benefits from a compulsory license. However, the Leahy-Smith Act and its implementation could increase the uncertainties and costs surrounding the prosecution of Candid's patent applications and the enforcement or defense of Candid's issued patents, all of which could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects.

In addition, the patent positions of companies in the development and commercialization of pharmaceuticals are particularly uncertain. The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled on several patent cases in recent years, either narrowing the scope of patent protection available in certain circumstances or weakening the rights of patent owners in certain situations. Candid cannot predict how decisions by the federal courts, the U.S. Congress or the USPTO may impact the value of Candid's patent rights. For example, in the 2013 case Assoc. for Molecular Pathology v. Myriad Genetics, Inc., the Supreme Court of the United States held that certain claims to DNA molecules are not patentable. As another example, the Supreme Court of the United States held in Amgen v. Sanofi (2023) that a functionally claimed genus of antibodies that bind and block the PCSK9 receptor was invalid for failing to comply with the enablement requirement of the Patent Act. In addition, the Federal Circuit issued a decision involving the interaction of patent term adjustment ("PTA"), terminal disclaimers, and obvious-type double patenting. Depending on future actions by the U.S. Congress, the U.S. courts, the USPTO and the relevant law-making bodies in other countries, the laws and regulations governing patents could change in unpredictable ways that would weaken Candid's ability to obtain new patents or to enforce its existing patents and patents that Candid might obtain in the future. While Candid does not believe that any of the patents or patents that issue from pending patent applications that are owned or licensed by Candid will be found invalid based on these decisions, Candid cannot predict how future decisions by the courts, the U.S. Congress or the USPTO may impact the value of Candid's patents.

Many countries have compulsory licensing laws under which a patent owner may be compelled to grant licenses to third parties. In addition, many countries limit the enforceability of patents against government agencies or government contractors. In these countries, the patent owner may have limited remedies, which could materially diminish the value of such patent. If Candid is, or Candid's licensor is, forced to grant a license to third parties with respect to any patents relevant to Candid's business, Candid's competitive position may be impaired, and Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects may be adversely affected.

Obtaining and maintaining patent protection depends on compliance with various procedural, document submissions, fee payment and other requirements imposed by governmental patent agencies, and Candid's patent protection could be reduced or eliminated for non-compliance with these requirements.

Periodic maintenance fees, renewal fees, annuity fees and various other governmental fees on patents and/or patent applications are due to be paid to the USPTO and foreign patent agencies in several stages over the lifetime of the patent and/or patent application. The USPTO and various foreign governmental patent agencies also require compliance with a number of procedural, documentary, fee payment and other similar provisions during the patent application process. While an inadvertent lapse can in many cases be cured by payment of a late fee or by other means in accordance with the applicable rules, there are situations in which noncompliance can result in abandonment or lapse of the patent or patent application, resulting in partial or complete loss of patent rights in the relevant jurisdiction. Non-compliance events that could result in abandonment or lapse of a patent or patent application include, but are not limited to, failure to respond to official actions within prescribed time limits, non-payment of fees and failure to properly legalize and submit formal documents. If Candid fails to maintain the patents and patent applications covering its drug candidates, Candid's competitive position would be adversely affected.

Candid may rely on trade secret and proprietary know-how which can be difficult to trace and enforce and, if Candid is unable to protect the confidentiality of its trade secrets, Candid's business and competitive position would be harmed.

In addition to seeking patents for some of its technology and drug candidates, Candid may also rely on trade secrets, including unpatented know-how, technology and other proprietary information, to maintain its competitive position. Elements of Candid's drug candidates, including processes for their preparation and manufacture, may involve proprietary know-how, information, or technology that is not covered by patents, and thus for these aspects Candid may consider trade secrets and know-how to be its primary intellectual property. Any disclosure, either intentional or unintentional, by Candid's employees, the employees of third parties with whom Candid Capital Stock its facilities or third-party consultants and vendors that Candid engages to perform research, clinical trials or manufacturing activities, or misappropriation by third parties (such as through a cybersecurity breach) of Candid's trade secrets or proprietary information could enable competitors to duplicate or surpass Candid's technological achievements, thus eroding Candid's competitive position in its market. Because Candid expects to rely on third parties in the development and manufacture of its drug candidates, Candid must, at times, share trade secrets with them. Candid's reliance on third parties requires Candid to share its trade secrets, which increases the possibility that a competitor will discover them or that Candid's trade secrets will be misappropriated or disclosed.

Trade secrets and know-how can be difficult to protect. Candid requires its employees to enter into written employment agreements containing provisions of confidentiality and obligations to assign to Candid any inventions generated in the course of their employment. Candid and any third parties with whom Candid Capital Stock facilities enter into written agreements that include confidentiality and intellectual property obligations to protect each party's property, trade secrets, proprietary know-how, and information. Candid further seeks to protect its trade secrets, proprietary know-how, and information in part, by entering into confidentiality agreements with parties who are given access to them, such as Candid's corporate collaborators, outside scientific collaborators, CROs, CDMOs, consultants, advisors and other third parties. With Candid's consultants, contractors, and outside scientific collaborators, these agreements typically include invention assignment obligations. Candid cannot guarantee that it has entered into such agreements with each party that may have or has had access to Candid's trade secrets or proprietary technology and processes. Candid cannot be certain that its trade secrets and other confidential proprietary information will not be disclosed or that competitors will not otherwise gain access to Candid's trade secrets or independently develop substantially equivalent information and techniques. Despite these efforts, any of these parties may breach the agreements and disclose Candid's proprietary information, including its trade secrets, and Candid may not be able to obtain adequate remedies for such breaches. Enforcing a claim that a party illegally disclosed or misappropriated a trade secret is difficult, expensive and time-consuming, and the outcome is unpredictable. In addition, some courts inside and outside the United States are less willing or unwilling to protect trade secrets to the same extent or in the same manner as the laws of the United States. Candid may need to share its proprietary information, including trade secrets, with future business partners, collaborators, contractors and others located in countries at heightened risk of theft of trade secrets, including through direct intrusion by private parties or foreign actors, and those affiliated with or controlled by state actors. Further, if any of Candid's trade secrets were to be lawfully obtained or independently developed by a competitor or other third-party, Candid would have no right to prevent them from using that technology or information to compete with Candid. If any of Candid's trade secrets were to be disclosed to or independently developed by a competitor or other third-party, Candid's competitive position would be harmed.

Candid may become subject to claims challenging the inventorship or ownership of its patents and other intellectual property.

Candid may be subject to claims that former employees, collaborators or other third parties have an interest in Candid's patents or other intellectual property as an inventor or co-inventor. The failure to name the proper inventors on a patent application can result in the patents issuing thereon being unenforceable. Inventorship disputes may arise from conflicting views regarding the contributions of different individuals named as inventors, the effects of foreign laws where foreign nationals are involved in the development of the subject matter of the patent, conflicting obligations of third parties involved in developing Candid's drug candidates or as a result of questions regarding co-ownership of potential joint inventions. Litigation may be necessary to resolve these and other claims challenging inventorship and/or ownership. Alternatively, or additionally, Candid may enter into agreements to clarify the scope of its rights in such intellectual property. If Candid fails in defending any such claims, in addition to paying monetary damages, Candid may lose valuable intellectual property rights, such as exclusive ownership of, or right to use, valuable intellectual property. Such an outcome could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business. Even if Candid is successful in defending against such claims, litigation could result in substantial costs and be a distraction to management and other employees.

Candid's current or future licensors may have relied on third-party consultants or collaborators or on funds from third parties, such as the U.S. government, such that Candid's licensors are not the sole and exclusive owners of the patents Candid has in-licensed. The U.S. federal government retains certain rights in inventions produced with its financial assistance under the Bayh-Dole Act. The federal government retains a "nonexclusive, nontransferable, irrevocable, paid-up license" for its own benefit. The Bayh-Dole Act also provides federal agencies with "march-in rights." March-in rights allow the government, in specified circumstances, to require the contractor or successors in title to the patent to grant a "nonexclusive, partially exclusive, or exclusive license" to a "responsible applicant or applicants." If the patent owner refuses to do so, the government may grant the license itself. If, in the future, Candid co-owns or licenses in technology which is critical to Candid's business that is developed in whole or in part with federal funds subject to the Bayh-Dole Act, Candid's ability to enforce or otherwise exploit patents covering such technology may be adversely affected. If other third parties have ownership rights or other rights to Candid's in-licensed patents, they may be able to license such patents to Candid's competitors, and Candid's competitors could market competing drugs and technology. This could have a material adverse effect on Candid's competitive position, business, financial conditions, results of operations, and prospects.

In addition, while it is Candid's policy to require its employees and contractors who may be involved in the conception or development of intellectual property to execute agreements assigning such intellectual property to Candid, Candid may be unsuccessful in executing such an agreement with each party who, in fact, conceives or develops intellectual property that Candid regards as its own. The assignment of intellectual property rights may not be self-executing, or the assignment agreements may be breached, and Candid may be forced to bring claims against third parties, or defend claims that they may bring against Candid, to determine the ownership of what Candid regards as its intellectual property. Such claims could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects.

Patent terms may be inadequate to protect Candid's competitive position on its drug candidates for an adequate amount of time.

Patent rights are of limited duration. In the United States, if all maintenance fees are paid timely, the natural expiration of a patent is generally 20 years after its first effective filing date excluding U.S. provisional patent applications. Given the amount of time required for the development, testing and regulatory review of new drug candidates, patents protecting such candidates might expire before or shortly after such drug candidates are commercialized. Even if patents covering Candid's drug candidates are obtained, once the patent life has expired for a product, Candid may be open to competition from biosimilar or generic drugs. As a result, Candid's patent portfolio may not provide Candid with sufficient rights to exclude others from commercializing drug candidates similar or identical to Candid's. Upon issuance in the United States, the term of a patent can be increased by patent term adjustment, which is based on certain delays caused by the USPTO, but this increase can be reduced or eliminated based on certain delays caused by the patent applicant during patent prosecution. Candid may also be required to disclaim a portion of patent term in order to overcome double patenting rejections from the patent office, thus potentially shortening Candid's exclusivity period. The term of a U.S. patent may also be shortened if the patent is terminally disclaimed over an earlier-filed patent. A PTE based on regulatory delay may be available in the United States. However, only a single patent can be extended for each marketing approval, and any patent can be extended only once, for a single product. Moreover, the scope of protection during the period of the PTE does not extend to the full scope of the claim, but instead only to the scope of the product as approved. Laws governing analogous PTEs in foreign jurisdictions vary widely, as do laws governing the ability to obtain multiple patents from a single patent family. Additionally, Candid may not receive an extension if Candid fails to exercise due diligence during the testing phase or regulatory review process, applies within applicable deadlines, fails to apply prior to the expiration of relevant patents or otherwise fails to satisfy applicable requirements. If Candid is unable to obtain PTE or restoration, or the term of any such extension is less than Candid requests, the period during which Candid will have the right to exclusively market its product will be shortened and Candid's competitors may obtain approval of competing drugs following Candid's patent expiration and may take advantage of Candid's investment in development and clinical trials by referencing Candid's clinical and preclinical data to launch their product earlier than might otherwise be the case, and Candid's revenue could be reduced, possibly materially.

If Candid's trademarks and trade names are not adequately protected, then Candid may not be able to build name recognition in its markets of interest and Candid's business may be adversely affected.

Candid's current or future trademarks or trade names may be challenged, infringed, circumvented or declared generic or descriptive or determined to be infringing on other marks. Candid may not be able to protect its rights to these trademarks and trade names or may be forced to stop using these names, which Candid needs for name recognition by potential partners or customers in its markets of interest. During trademark registration proceedings, Candid may receive rejections of its applications by the USPTO or in other foreign jurisdictions. Although Candid would be given an opportunity to respond to those rejections, Candid may be unable to overcome such rejections. In addition, in the USPTO and in comparable agencies in many foreign jurisdictions, third parties are given an opportunity to oppose pending trademark applications and to seek to cancel registered trademarks. Opposition or cancellation proceedings may be filed against Candid's trademarks, and Candid's trademarks may not survive such proceedings. If Candid is unable to establish name recognition based on its trademarks and trade names, Candid may not be able to compete effectively, and Candid's business may be adversely affected. Candid may license its trademarks and trade names to third parties, such as distributors. Although these license agreements may provide guidelines for how Candid's trademarks and trade names may be used, a breach of these agreements or misuse of Candid's trademarks and trade names by Candid's licensees may jeopardize Candid's rights in or diminish the goodwill associated with Candid's trademarks and trade names.

Moreover, any name Candid has proposed to use with its drug candidate in the United States must be approved by the FDA, regardless of whether Candid has registered it, or applied to register it, as a trademark. Similar requirements exist in Europe. The FDA typically conducts a review of proposed product names, including an evaluation of potential for confusion with other product names. If the FDA (or an equivalent administrative body in a foreign jurisdiction) objects to any of Candid's proposed proprietary product names, Candid may be required to expend significant additional resources in an effort to identify a suitable substitute name that would qualify under applicable trademark laws, not infringe the existing rights of third parties and be acceptable to the FDA. Furthermore, in many countries, owning and maintaining a trademark registration may not provide an adequate defense against a subsequent infringement claim asserted by the owner of a senior trademark. At times, competitors or other third parties may adopt trade names or trademarks similar to Candid's, thereby impeding Candid's ability to build brand identity and possibly leading to market confusion. In addition, there could be potential trade name or trademark infringement claims brought by owners of other registered trademarks or trademarks that incorporate variations of Candid's registered or unregistered trademarks or trade names. If Candid asserts trademark infringement claims, a court may determine that the marks Candid has asserted are invalid or unenforceable, or that the party against whom Candid has asserted trademark infringement has superior rights to the marks in question. In this case, Candid could ultimately be forced to cease use of such trademarks.

Risks Related to Candid's Industry and Business

Candid will need to expand its organization, and may experience challenges in managing this growth as it builds its capabilities, which could disrupt its operations.

As of December 31, 2025, Candid had 48 full-time employees. Candid will need to expand its organization, and may have difficulty identifying, hiring and integrating new personnel. Future growth would impose significant additional responsibilities on Candid's management, including the need to identify, recruit, maintain, motivate and integrate additional employees, consultants and contractors. Also, Candid's management may need to divert a disproportionate amount of its attention away from day-to-day activities and devote a substantial amount of time to managing these growth activities. Candid may not be able to effectively manage the expansion of its operations, which may result in weaknesses in its infrastructure, give rise to operational mistakes, loss of business opportunities, loss of employees and reduced productivity among remaining employees. Candid's expected growth could require significant capital expenditures and may divert financial resources from other projects, such as the development of drug candidates. If Candid's management is unable to effectively manage its growth, Candid's expenses may increase more than expected, Candid's ability to generate and/or grow revenues could be reduced, and Candid may not be able to implement its business strategy. Candid's future financial performance and its ability to commercialize its drug candidates and compete effectively will depend, in part, on Candid's ability to effectively manage any future growth.

Candid's future success depends on its ability to retain its key personnel and to attract, retain and motivate qualified personnel.

Candid's industry has experienced a high rate of turnover of management personnel in recent years. Candid is highly dependent on its executive officers, as well as the other members of its current and future management, scientific and clinical teams. Although Candid has formal employment agreements with its executive officers, these agreements do not prevent them from terminating their employment with Candid at any time. Certain of Candid's executive officers are also eligible to receive severance benefits upon certain qualifying terminations of employment pursuant to their agreements. Additional details regarding these arrangements can be found in the sections titled “Candid Executive Officer and Director Compensation—Employment Arrangements with Candid’s Named Executive Officers” and “Candid Executive Officer and Director Compensation—Potential Payments upon Termination or Change in Control.”

If Candid loses one or more of its executive officers or key employees, Candid’s ability to implement its business strategy successfully could be seriously harmed. Furthermore, replacing executive officers and key employees may be difficult and may take an extended period of time because of the limited number of individuals in Candid’s industry with the breadth of highly specialized skills and experience required to develop, gain regulatory approval of, and commercialize Candid’s drug candidates successfully. Competition to hire from this limited pool is intense, and Candid may be unable to hire, train, retain or motivate these additional key personnel on acceptable terms given the competition among numerous biopharmaceutical and biotechnology companies for similar personnel. Candid also experiences competition for the hiring of scientific and clinical personnel from universities and research institutions. In addition, Candid relies on consultants and advisors, including scientific and clinical advisors, to assist Candid in formulating its research and development and commercialization strategy. Candid’s consultants and advisors may be engaged by entities other than Candid and may have commitments under consulting or advisory contracts with other entities that may limit their availability to Candid. If Candid is unable to continue to attract and retain high quality personnel, Candid’s ability to advance the clinical development of and commercialize drug candidates will be limited.

Candid’s operating results may fluctuate significantly, which makes Candid’s future operating results difficult to predict and could cause Candid’s operating results to fall below expectations or any guidance Candid may provide.

Candid’s quarterly and annual operating results may fluctuate significantly, which makes it difficult for Candid to predict its future operating results. These fluctuations may occur due to a variety of factors, many of which are outside of Candid’s control, including, but not limited to:

- the timing and cost of, and level of investment in, research, development, regulatory approval, and commercialization activities relating to any of Candid’s current or future drug candidates, which may change from time to time, including the need to conduct unanticipated clinical trials or trials that are larger or more complex than anticipated;
- Candid’s ability to enroll patients in clinical trials and the timing of enrollment;
- the timing and success or failure of preclinical studies or clinical trials for any of Candid’s current or future drug candidates or competing drug candidates, or any other change in the competitive landscape of Candid’s industry, including consolidation among Candid’s competitors or partners;
- coverage and reimbursement policies with respect to any of Candid’s current or future drug candidates, if approved, and potential future drugs that compete with Candid’s drugs;
- the cost of manufacturing any of Candid’s current or future drug candidates, which may vary depending on the quantity of production and the terms of Candid’s agreements with third-party manufacturers;
- expenditures that Candid may incur to acquire, in-license, develop, or commercialize additional drug candidates;
- the level of demand for any approved drugs, which may vary significantly and be difficult to predict;
- Candid’s ability to commercialize any of its current or future drug candidates, if approved, inside and outside of the United States, either independently or working with third parties;
- Candid’s ability to establish and maintain collaborations, licensing or other arrangements;
- potential unforeseen business disruptions that increase Candid’s costs or expenses;
- future accounting pronouncements or changes in Candid’s accounting policies; and
- the timing and amount of any milestone, royalty or other payments payable by Candid or due to Candid under any collaboration, licensing or other similar agreement.

The cumulative effects of these factors could result in large fluctuations and unpredictability in Candid’s quarterly and annual operating results. As a result, comparing Candid’s operating results on a period-to-period basis may not be meaningful. Investors should not rely on Candid’s past results as an indication of Candid’s future performance.

This variability and unpredictability could also result in Candid failing to meet the expectations of industry or financial analysts or investors for any period. If Candid's revenue or operating results fall below the expectations of analysts or investors or below any forecasts Candid may provide to the market, or if the forecasts Candid provides to the market are below the expectations of analysts or investors, the price of Candid Common Stock could decline substantially. Such a stock price decline could occur even when Candid has met any previously publicly stated revenue or earnings guidance Candid may provide.

If Candid's information technology systems or those of third parties with whom Candid works, or Candid's data, are or were compromised, Candid could experience adverse consequences resulting from such compromise, including but not limited to regulatory investigations or actions; litigation; fines and penalties; disruptions of Candid's business operations; reputational harm; loss of revenue or profits; and other adverse consequences.

In the ordinary course of its business, Candid and the third parties with whom Candid works process sensitive information, and, as a result, Candid and the third parties with whom Candid works face a variety of evolving threats which could cause security incidents. Cyber-attacks, malicious internet-based activity, online and offline fraud, natural disasters, telecommunications issues and other similar activities threaten the confidentiality, integrity, and availability of Candid's sensitive information and information technology systems, and those of the third parties with whom Candid works. Such threats are prevalent and continue to rise, are increasingly difficult to detect, and certain of these threats come from a variety of sources, including traditional computer "hackers," threat actors, "hacktivists," organized criminal threat actors, personnel (such as through theft or misuse), sophisticated nation states, and nation-state-supported actors.

Some actors now engage and are expected to continue to engage in cyber-attacks, including without limitation nation-state actors for geopolitical reasons and in conjunction with military conflicts and defense activities. During times of war and other major conflicts, Candid and the third parties with whom Candid works may be vulnerable to a heightened risk of these attacks, including retaliatory cyber-attacks, that could materially disrupt Candid's systems and operations, supply chain, and ability to conduct its business.

Candid and the third parties with whom Candid works are subject to a variety of evolving threats, including but not limited to social-engineering attacks (including through those that may be increasingly more difficult to identify such as deep fakes and phishing attacks), malicious code (such as viruses and worms), malware (including as a result of advanced persistent threat intrusions), denial-of-service attacks, credential stuffing attacks, credential harvesting, personnel misconduct or error, ransomware attacks, supply-chain attacks, software bugs, server malfunctions, software or hardware failures, loss or theft of data or other information technology assets, adware, telecommunications failures, earthquakes, fires, floods, attacks enhanced or facilitated by AI, and other similar threats.

In particular, severe ransomware attacks are becoming increasingly prevalent and can lead to significant interruptions in Candid's operations, ability to conduct its business, loss of sensitive information and income, reputational harm, and diversion of funds. Extortion payments may alleviate the negative impact of a ransomware attack, but Candid may be unwilling or unable to make such payments due to, for example, applicable laws or regulations prohibiting such payments.

It may be difficult and/or costly to prevent, detect, investigate, mitigate, contain, and remediate a security incident. Candid's efforts to do so may not be successful. Actions taken by Candid or the third parties with whom Candid works to detect, investigate, mitigate, contain, and remediate a security incident could result in outages, data losses, and disruptions of Candid's business. Threat actors may also gain access to other networks and systems after a compromise of Candid's networks and systems. For example, threat actors may use an initial compromise of one part of Candid's environment (or that of third parties with whom Candid works) to gain access to other parts of Candid's environment, or leverage a compromise of the relevant networks or systems to gain access to the networks or systems of third parties with whom Candid works, such as through phishing or supply chain attacks.

Remote work has increased risks to Candid's information technology systems and data, as more of Candid's employees utilize network connections, computers and devices outside Candid's premises or network, including working at home, while in transit and in public locations.

Future or past business transactions (such as acquisitions or integrations) expose Candid to additional cybersecurity risks and vulnerabilities, as Candid's systems could be negatively affected by vulnerabilities present in acquired or integrated entities' systems and technologies. Furthermore, Candid may discover security issues that were not found during due diligence of such acquired or integrated entities, and it may be difficult to integrate companies into Candid's information technology environment and security program.

Candid relies on third parties to operate critical business systems to process sensitive information in a variety of contexts, including, without limitation, cloud-based infrastructure, data center facilities, encryption and authentication technology, employee email, content delivery, and other functions. Candid's ability to monitor these third parties' information security practices is limited, and these third parties may not have adequate information security measures in place. If the third parties with whom Candid works experience a security incident or other interruption, Candid could experience adverse consequences. While Candid may be entitled to damages if the third parties with whom Candid works fail to satisfy their privacy or security-related obligations to Candid, any award may be insufficient to cover Candid's damages, or Candid may be unable to recover such award.

In addition, supply-chain attacks have increased in frequency and severity, and Candid cannot guarantee that third parties' infrastructure in Candid's supply chain or that of the third parties with whom Candid works have not been compromised.

While Candid has implemented security measures designed to protect against security incidents, there can be no assurance that these measures will be effective. Candid takes steps designed to detect, mitigate, and remediate vulnerabilities in its information systems (such as Candid's hardware and/or software, including that of third parties with whom Candid works). Candid has not and may not in the future, however, detect and remediate all such vulnerabilities including on a timely basis. Further, Candid has and may in the future experience delays in deploying remedial measures and patches designed to address identified vulnerabilities. Vulnerabilities could be exploited and result in a security incident.

Any of the previously identified or similar threats have in the past and may in the future could cause a security incident or other interruption that has in the past and may in the future result in unauthorized, unlawful, or accidental acquisition, modification, destruction, loss, alteration, encryption, disclosure of, or access to Candid's sensitive information or Candid's information technology systems, or those of the third parties with whom Candid works. For example, Candid is aware of an event where a vendor's information systems were compromised, allowing hackers to intercept the vendor's emails and impersonate the vendor in communication with Candid. A security incident or other interruption could disrupt Candid's ability (and that of third parties with whom Candid works) to conduct its business.

Candid has in the past and may in the future expend resources or modify its business activities (including its clinical trial activities) to try to protect against security incidents. Certain data privacy and security obligations require Candid to implement and maintain specific security measures or industry-standard or reasonable security measures to protect Candid's information technology systems and sensitive information.

Applicable data privacy and security obligations may require Candid, or Candid may voluntarily choose, to notify relevant stakeholders, including affected individuals, customers, regulators, and investors, of security incidents, or to take other actions, such as providing credit monitoring and identity theft protection services. Such disclosures and related actions are costly, and the disclosure or the failure to comply with such applicable requirements could lead to adverse consequences.

If Candid (or a third party with whom Candid works) experiences a security incident or is perceived to have experienced a security incident, Candid may experience adverse consequences, such as government enforcement actions (for example, investigations, fines, penalties, audits, and inspections); additional reporting requirements and/or oversight; restrictions on processing sensitive information (including personal data); litigation (including class claims); indemnification obligations; negative publicity; reputational harm; monetary fund diversions; diversion of management attention; interruptions in Candid's operations (including availability of data); financial loss; and other similar harms. Security incidents and attendant consequences may negatively impact Candid's ability to grow and operate its business. For example, the loss of data from clinical trials or similar activities could result in significant delays in our regulatory approval efforts and significantly increase our costs to recover or reproduce the data.

Candid's contracts may not contain limitations of liability, and even where they do, there can be no assurance that limitations of liability in Candid's contracts are sufficient to protect Candid from liabilities, damages, or claims related to Candid's data privacy and security obligations.

Candid cannot be sure that any insurance coverage will be adequate or sufficient to protect Candid from or to mitigate liabilities arising out of Candid's privacy and security practices, that such coverage will continue to be available on commercially reasonable terms or at all, or that such coverage will pay future claims.

In addition to experiencing a security incident, third parties may gather, collect, or infer sensitive information about Candid from public sources, data brokers, or other means that reveals competitively sensitive details about Candid's organization and could be used to undermine Candid's competitive advantage or market position. Additionally, sensitive information of Candid could be leaked, disclosed, or revealed as a result of or in connection with Candid's employees', personnel's, or vendors' use of generative AI technologies.

Candid's business could be affected by litigation, government investigations, and enforcement actions.

Candid currently operates in a number of jurisdictions in a highly regulated industry, and could be subject to litigation, government investigation and enforcement actions on a variety of matters in the United States or foreign jurisdictions, including, without limitation, intellectual property, regulatory, product liability, environmental, whistleblower, false claims, data privacy and security, anti-kickback, anti-bribery, securities, commercial, employment and other claims and legal proceedings that may arise from conducting Candid's business. Any determination that Candid's operations or activities are not in compliance with existing laws or regulations could result in the imposition of fines, civil and criminal penalties, equitable remedies, including disgorgement, injunctive relief and/or other sanctions against Candid, and remediation of any such findings could have an adverse effect on Candid's business operations.

Legal proceedings, government investigations and enforcement actions can be expensive and time-consuming. An adverse outcome resulting from any such proceedings, investigations or enforcement actions could result in significant damages awards, fines, penalties, exclusion from the federal healthcare programs, healthcare debarment, injunctive relief, product recalls, reputational damage and modifications of Candid's business practices, which could have a material adverse effect on Candid's business and results of operations. Even if such a proceeding, investigation, or enforcement action is ultimately decided in Candid's favor, the investigation and defense thereof could require substantial financial and management resources.

Candid's employees and independent contractors, including consultants, vendors and any third parties Candid may engage in connection with development and commercialization may engage in misconduct or other improper activities, including noncompliance with regulatory standards and requirements, which could harm Candid's business.

Misconduct by Candid's employees and independent contractors, including consultants, vendors and any third parties Candid may engage in connection with development and commercialization, could include intentional, reckless or negligent conduct or unauthorized activities that violate: (1) the laws and regulations of the FDA, the EU, EU Member States and comparable foreign regulatory authorities, including those laws that require the reporting of true, complete and accurate information to such authorities; (2) manufacturing standards; (3) data privacy and security laws, and fraud and abuse and other healthcare laws and regulations; or (4) other laws that require the reporting of true, complete and accurate financial information and data. Specifically, sales, marketing and business arrangements in the healthcare industry are subject to extensive laws and regulations intended to prevent fraud, misconduct, kickbacks, self-dealing and other abusive practices. These laws and regulations may restrict or prohibit a wide range of pricing, discounting, marketing and promotion, sales commission, customer incentive programs and other business arrangements. Activities subject to these laws could also involve the improper use or misrepresentation of information obtained in the course of clinical trials, creation of fraudulent data in preclinical studies or clinical trials or illegal misappropriation of drug product, which could result in regulatory sanctions and cause serious harm to Candid's reputation. It is not always possible to identify and deter misconduct by employees and other third parties, and the precautions Candid takes to detect and prevent this activity may not be effective in controlling unknown or unmanaged risks or losses or in protecting Candid from governmental investigations or other actions or lawsuits stemming from a failure to comply with such laws or regulations. Additionally, Candid is subject to the risk that a person or government could allege fraud or other misconduct, even if none occurred. If any such actions are instituted against Candid, and Candid is not successful in defending itself or asserting its rights, those actions could have a significant impact on Candid's business and results of operations, including the imposition of significant civil, criminal and administrative penalties, damages, monetary fines, disgorgements, possible exclusion from participation in Medicare, Medicaid, other U.S. federal healthcare programs or healthcare programs in other jurisdictions, integrity oversight and reporting obligations to resolve allegations of non-compliance, imprisonment, other sanctions, contractual damages, reputational harm, diminished profits and future earnings and curtailment of Candid's operations.

Changes in tax laws or regulations that are applied adversely to Candid or its customers may have a material adverse effect on Candid's business, cash flow, financial condition or results of operations.

New U.S. federal, state or foreign income, sales, use, VAT, or other tax laws, statutes, rules, regulations or ordinances could be enacted at any time, which could adversely affect Candid's business operations, cash flows and financial performance. Further, existing tax laws, statutes, rules, regulations or ordinances could be interpreted, changed, modified or applied adversely to Candid. For example, legislation informally titled the TCJA, the CARES Act, the IRA, and the OBBA enacted many significant changes to U.S. tax laws. Future guidance from the IRS and other tax authorities with respect to such legislation may affect Candid, and certain aspects of such legislation could be repealed or modified in future legislation. In addition, it is uncertain if and to what extent various states will conform to such legislation or any newly enacted federal tax legislation. Changes in corporate tax rates, the realization of net deferred tax assets relating to Candid's operations, the taxation of foreign earnings and the deductibility of expenses or future reform legislation could have a material impact on the value of Candid's deferred tax assets, could result in significant one-time charges and could increase Candid's future tax expense.

Candid's ability to use its net operating loss carryforwards and certain other tax attributes may be limited.

As of December 31, 2025, Candid had federal and state NOL carryforwards of approximately $24.9 million and $53.7 million, respectively. Candid's federal NOL carryforwards may be carried forward indefinitely but are limited to 80% of taxable income in such taxable year. It is uncertain if and to what extent various states will conform to federal law. There also may be periods during which the use of state NOL carryforwards is suspended or otherwise limited, which could accelerate or permanently increase state taxes owed.

Under Sections 382 and 383 of the Code, and corresponding provisions of state and local law, if a corporation undergoes an "ownership change," which generally is defined as a greater than 50% change, by value, in its equity ownership over a three-year period, the corporation's ability to use its pre-change NOL carryforwards and certain other tax attributes to offset its post-change income or taxes may be limited. Candid may have experienced ownership changes in the past, and Candid may experience ownership changes as a result of subsequent shifts in Candid's stock ownership (including as a result of the Merger), some of which may be outside of Candid's control. If Candid's ability to use its NOL carryforwards and certain other tax attributes is materially limited by any ownership change, it could harm Candid's future results of operations by effectively increasing Candid's future tax obligations.

Investors' expectations of Candid's performance relating to environmental, social and governance factors may impose additional costs and expose Candid to new risks.

There is an increasing focus from certain investors, employees and other stakeholders concerning corporate responsibility, specifically related to environmental, social and governance factors. Some investors may use these factors to guide their investment strategies and, in some cases, may choose not to invest in Candid if they believe Candid's policies relating to corporate responsibility are inadequate. Third-party providers of corporate responsibility ratings and reports on companies have increased to meet growing investor demand for measurement of corporate responsibility performance. The criteria by which companies' corporate responsibility practices are assessed may change, which could result in greater expectations of Candid and cause Candid to undertake costly initiatives to satisfy such new criteria. If Candid elects not to or is unable to satisfy such new criteria, investors may conclude that Candid's policies with respect to corporate responsibility are inadequate. Candid may face reputational damage in the event that Candid's corporate responsibility procedures or standards do not meet the standards set by various constituencies.

Furthermore, if Candid's competitors' corporate responsibility performance is perceived to be greater than Candid's, potential or current investors may elect to invest with Candid's competitors instead. In addition, in the event that Candid communicates certain initiatives and goals regarding environmental, social and governance matters, Candid could fail, or be perceived to fail, in its achievement of such initiatives or goals, or Candid could be criticized for the scope of such initiatives or goals. If Candid fails to satisfy the expectations of investors, employees and other stakeholders or Candid's initiatives are not executed as planned, Candid's reputation and financial results could be materially and adversely affected.

Candid's business is subject to risks arising from pandemic and epidemic diseases.

The COVID-19 worldwide pandemic presented substantial public health and economic challenges and affected Candid's employees, patients, physicians and other healthcare providers, communities and business operations, as well as the U.S. and global economies and financial markets. Any future pandemic or epidemic disease outbreaks could disrupt the supply chain and the manufacture or shipment of Candid's drug candidates for use in its clinical trials and research and preclinical studies and, delay, limit or prevent Candid's employees and CROs from continuing research and development activities, impede Candid's clinical trial initiation and recruitment and the ability of patients to continue in clinical trials, alter the results of the clinical trial due to disease progression in participants, impede testing, monitoring, data collection and analysis and other related activities, any of which could delay Candid's preclinical studies and clinical trials and increase Candid's development costs, and have a material adverse effect on Candid's business, financial condition and results of operations. Any future pandemic or epidemic disease outbreak could also potentially further affect the business of the FDA or other comparable foreign regulatory authorities, which could result in delays in meetings related to Candid's planned clinical trials, as well as have an adverse impact on global economic conditions, which could have an adverse effect on Candid's business and financial condition, including impairing Candid's ability to raise capital when needed.

Risks Related to the Combined Company

In determining whether you should approve the proposals contained in this proxy statement/prospectus, you should carefully read the following risk factors in addition to the risks described above.

The combined company will need to raise substantial additional financing in the future to fund its operations, which may not be available to it on favorable terms or at all.

The combined company will require substantial additional funds to advance its drug candidates into clinical development and to complete the clinical development of, seek regulatory approvals for and commercialize its drug candidates, if approved. The combined company's future capital requirements will depend upon a number of factors, including: the number, scope, rate of progress and costs of the combined company's planned clinical trials for cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460 and drug discovery and preclinical development activities for any future drug candidates; the number and scope of clinical programs the combined company decides to pursue, including the number of indications it decides to pursue for a particular drug candidate; the scope and costs of manufacturing development for any of the combined company's current or future drug candidates, including commercial manufacturing at scale, if any drug candidate receives marketing approval, including as a result of inflation or any supply chain issues; the costs associated with hiring additional personnel and consultants as the combined company's business grows, including additional research and development personnel; the cost, timing and outcome of regulatory review of cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460 and any future drug candidates; the costs of preparing, filing and prosecuting patent applications, maintaining and enforcing the combined company's intellectual property rights and defending intellectual property-related claims; the terms and timing of establishing and maintaining collaborations, licenses and other similar arrangements; the timing of any milestone and royalty payments to the combined company's existing or future suppliers, collaborators or licensors; the costs associated with enhancing the combined company's operational systems and public reporting and compliance requirements; the extent to which the combined company acquires or in-licenses other drug candidates and technologies; and the costs associated with commercializing cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460 or any future drug candidates, if they receive marketing approval.

Raising additional capital may be costly or difficult to obtain and could significantly dilute stockholders' ownership interests or inhibit the combined company's ability to achieve its business objectives. If the combined company raises additional funds through public or private equity offerings, the terms of these securities may include liquidation or other preferences that adversely affect the rights of its common stockholders. Further, to the extent that the combined company raises additional capital through the sale of common stock or securities convertible or exchangeable into common stock, its stockholder's ownership interest in the combined company will be diluted. In addition, any debt financing may subject the combined company to fixed payment obligations and covenants limiting or restricting its ability to take specific actions, such as incurring additional debt, making capital expenditures or declaring dividends. If the combined company raises additional capital through marketing and distribution arrangements or other collaborations, strategic alliances or licensing arrangements with third parties, the combined company may have to relinquish certain valuable intellectual property or other rights to its drug candidates, technologies, future revenue streams or research programs or grant licenses on terms that may not be favorable to it. Even if the combined company were to obtain sufficient funding, there can be no assurance that it will be available on terms acceptable to the combined company or its stockholders.

Following the Merger, the combined company may be unable to successfully integrate the businesses of Rallybio and Candid and realize some or all of the anticipated benefits of the Merger.

The Merger involves the combination of two companies which currently operate as independent companies. Following the Merger, the combined company will be required to devote significant management attention and resources to integrating its business practices and operations. The combined company may fail to realize some or all of the anticipated benefits of the Merger if the integration process takes longer than expected or is more costly than expected. Potential difficulties the combined company may encounter in the integration process include the following:

- the inability to successfully combine the businesses of Rallybio and Candid in a manner that permits the combined company to achieve the anticipated benefits from the Merger, which would result in the anticipated benefits of the Merger not being realized partly or wholly in the time frame currently anticipated or at all;
- creation of uniform standards, controls, procedures, policies and information systems; and
- potential unknown liabilities and unforeseen increased expenses, delays or regulatory conditions associated with the Merger.

In addition, Rallybio and Candid have operated and, until the completion of the Merger, will continue to operate, independently. It is possible that the integration process also could result in the diversion of each company's management's attention, the disruption or interruption of, or the loss of momentum in, each company's ongoing businesses or inconsistencies in standards, controls, procedures and policies, any of which could adversely affect the combined company's ability to maintain its business relationships or the ability to achieve the anticipated benefits of the merger, or could otherwise adversely affect the business and financial results of the combined company.

The market price of the combined company's common stock is expected to be volatile, and the market price of the common stock may drop following the Merger.

The market price of the combined company's common stock following the Merger could be subject to significant fluctuations. Market prices for securities of early-stage pharmaceutical, biotechnology and other life sciences companies have historically been particularly volatile. Some of the factors that may cause the market price of the combined company's common stock to fluctuate include:

- the ability of the combined company to obtain regulatory approvals for its drug candidates, and delays or failures to obtain such approvals;
- failure of any of the combined company's drug candidates, if approved, to achieve commercial success;
- failure by the combined company to maintain its existing third-party license and supply agreements;
- failure by the combined company or its licensors to prosecute, maintain, or enforce its intellectual property rights;
- changes in laws or regulations applicable to the combined company's drug candidates;
- any inability to obtain adequate supply of the combined company's drug candidates or the inability to do so at acceptable prices;
- adverse regulatory authority decisions;
- introduction of new products, services or technologies by the combined company's competitors;
- failure to meet or exceed financial and development projections the combined company may provide to the public;

- failure to meet or exceed the financial and development projections of the investment community;
- the perception of the pharmaceutical industry by the public, legislatures, regulators and the investment community;
- announcements of significant acquisitions, strategic collaborations, joint ventures or capital commitments by the combined company or its competitors;
- disputes or other developments relating to proprietary rights, including patents, litigation matters, and the combined company's ability to obtain patent protection for its technologies;
- additions or departures of key personnel;
- significant lawsuits, including patent or stockholder litigation;
- if securities or industry analysts do not publish research or reports about the combined company's business, or if they issue an adverse or misleading opinion regarding its business and stock;
- changes in the market valuations of similar companies;
- general market or macroeconomic conditions;
- sales of its common stock by the combined company or its stockholders in the future;
- trading volume of the combined company's common stock;
- failure to maintain compliance with the listing requirements of Nasdaq;
- announcements by commercial partners or competitors of new commercial products, clinical progress or the lack thereof, significant contracts, commercial relationships or capital commitments;
- adverse publicity generally, including with respect to other products and potential products in such markets;
- the introduction of technological innovations or new therapies that compete with potential products of the combined company;
- changes in the structure of health care payment systems; and
- and period-to-period fluctuations in the combined company's financial results.

Moreover, the stock markets in general have experienced substantial volatility that has often been unrelated to the operating performance of individual companies. These broad market fluctuations may also adversely affect the trading price of the combined company's common stock.

In the past, following periods of volatility in the market price of a company's securities, stockholders have often instituted class action securities litigation against those companies. Such litigation, if instituted, could result in substantial costs and diversion of management attention and resources, which could significantly harm the combined company's profitability and reputation.

Additionally, a decrease in the stock price of the combined company may cause the combined company's common stock to no longer satisfy the continued listing standards of Nasdaq. If the combined company is not able to maintain the requirements for listing on Nasdaq, it could be delisted, which could have a materially adverse effect on its ability to raise additional funds as well as the price and liquidity of its common stock.

The combined company will incur costs and demands upon management as a result of complying with the laws, rules and regulations affecting public companies.

The combined company will incur significant legal, accounting and other expenses that Candid did not incur as a private company, including costs associated with public company reporting requirements.

The combined company will also incur costs associated with corporate governance requirements, including requirements under the laws, rules and regulations of the SEC as well as the Nasdaq rules. These laws, rules and regulations are expected to increase the combined company's legal and financial compliance costs and to make some activities more time consuming and costly. These laws, rules and regulations also may make it difficult and expensive for the combined company to obtain directors' and officers' liability insurance. As a result, it may be more difficult for the combined company to attract and retain qualified individuals to serve on the combined company board of directors or as executive officers of the combined company, which may adversely affect investor confidence in the combined company and could cause the combined company's business or stock price to suffer.

If the assets subject to the Rallybio CVR Agreement are not disposed of in a timely manner, the combined company may have to incur time and resources to wind down or dispose of such assets.

In connection with the Merger, holders of Rallybio Common Stock, pre-funded warrants, restricted stock units and in the money stock options as of the close of business on the last business day prior to the Effective Time will receive one Rallybio CVR for each outstanding share of Rallybio Common Stock, or share underlying an equity award of Rallybio Common Stock, held. Each Rallybio CVR will entitle the holder thereof to certain payments in respect of certain Legacy Assets. Please see the section titled "Agreements Related to the Merger—Rallybio Contingent Value Rights Agreement." If Rallybio does not enter into disposition agreements related to such Legacy Assets prior to the Closing, the combined company may need to allocate time and resources to wind down or dispose of such assets. In addition, certain proceeds from such disposition agreements entered into prior to or following the Closing, will be distributed to the holders of the Rallybio CVRs, pursuant to the Rallybio CVR Agreement. As a result, the combined company's stockholders may receive no or limited benefits from any time or resources allocated to such Legacy Assets and such activities may be a distraction to the combined company's management and employees. As a result, the combined company's operations and financial condition may be adversely affected.

Nasdaq may delist the combined company's securities from trading on its exchange, which could limit investors' ability to make transactions in its securities and subject the combined company to additional trading restrictions.

Currently, Rallybio's common stock is publicly traded on Nasdaq. In connection with the proposed Merger, Candid will file an initial listing application with Nasdaq pursuant to Nasdaq's "reverse merger" rules. The combined company will be required to meet the initial listing requirements for its securities to be listed on Nasdaq.

If the combined company fails to meet the Nasdaq listing requirements and their respective boards choose to close the Merger without Nasdaq's approval, then Nasdaq may notify the combined company of its determination to delist the company's securities based upon the failure to satisfy the criteria in the Nasdaq application. For more information, refer to the section titled "Risk Factors—Risks Related to the Merger—Rallybio or Candid may waive one or more of the conditions to the Merger without recirculation of this proxy statement/prospectus or resoliciting stockholder approval."

We cannot assure you that the combined company will be able to meet those initial listing requirements. Even if the combined company's securities are so listed, the combined company may be unable to maintain the listing of its securities in the future. In order to continue listing its securities on Nasdaq following the proposed Merger, the combined company will be required to maintain certain financial, distribution and stock price levels. If Nasdaq delists the combined company's securities from trading on its exchange at the Closing (or thereafter) and the combined company is not able to list its securities on another national securities exchange or regain compliance with Nasdaq, the combined company's securities could be quoted on an over-the-counter market. If this were to occur, the combined company could face significant material adverse consequences, including:

- a limited availability of market quotations for its securities;
- reduced liquidity for its securities;
- a determination that the combined company's common stock is a "penny stock" which will require brokers trading in the combined company's common stock to adhere to more stringent rules and possibly result in a reduced level of trading activity in the secondary trading market for our securities;
- a limited amount of news and analyst coverage; and
- a decreased ability to issue additional securities or obtain additional financing in the future.

The National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996, which is a federal statute, prevents or preempts states from regulating the sale of certain securities, which are referred to as "covered securities." Since the Rallybio Common Stock is listed on Nasdaq, they are covered securities. Although states are preempted from regulating the sale of covered securities, the federal statute does allow states to investigate companies if there is a suspicion of fraud, and, if there is a finding of fraudulent activity, then states can regulate or bar the sale of covered securities in a particular case. If Rallybio was no longer listed on Nasdaq, its securities would not be covered securities and it would be subject to regulation in each state in which it offers its securities, including in connection with the Merger.

Provisions in the combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation, the combined company's amended and restated bylaws and Delaware law may have anti-takeover effects that could discourage an acquisition of the combined company by others, even if an acquisition would be beneficial to the combined company's stockholders, and may prevent attempts by the combined company's stockholders to replace or remove the combined company's current management.

The amended and restated certificate of incorporation and amended and restated bylaws of the combined company will be the amended and restated certificate of incorporation and amended and restated bylaws of Rallybio, which, along with Delaware law will contain provisions that may have the effect of discouraging, delaying or preventing a change in control of the combined company or changes in the combined company's management that stockholders may consider favorable, including transactions in which the combined company's stockholders might otherwise receive a premium for their shares. The combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation and bylaws will include provisions that:

- authorize "blank check" preferred stock, which could be issued by the combined company's board of directors without stockholder approval and may contain voting, liquidation, dividend and other rights superior to the combined company's common stock;
- create a classified board of directors whose members serve staggered three-year terms;
- specify that special meetings of the combined company's stockholders can be called only by the combined company's board of directors;
- prohibit stockholder action by written consent;
- establish an advance notice procedure for stockholder approvals to be brought before an annual meeting of the combined company's stockholders, including proposed nominations of persons for election to the combined company's board of directors;
- provide that vacancies on the combined company's board of directors may be filled only by a majority of directors then in office, even though less than a quorum;
- provide that the combined company's directors may be removed only for cause;
- specify that no stockholder is permitted to cumulate votes at any election of directors;
- expressly authorize the combined company's board of directors to modify, alter or repeal the combined company's amended and restated bylaws; and
- require supermajority votes of the holders of the combined company's common stock to amend specified provisions of the combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation and amended and restated bylaws.

These provisions, alone or together, could delay or prevent hostile takeovers and changes in control or changes in the combined company's management. These provisions could also limit the price that investors might be willing to pay in the future for shares of the combined company's common stock, thereby depressing the market price of the combined company's common stock.

In addition, because the combined company will be incorporated in the State of Delaware, the combined company will be governed by the provisions of Section 203 of the General DGCL which will prohibit a person who owns in excess of 15% of the combined company's outstanding voting stock from merging or combining with the combined company for a period of three years after the date of the transaction in which the person acquired in excess of 15% of the combined company's outstanding voting stock, unless the merger or combination is approved in a prescribed manner.

Any provision of the combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation, amended and restated bylaws or Delaware law that has the effect of delaying or deterring a change in control could limit the opportunity for the combined company's stockholders to receive a premium for their shares of our common stock, and could also affect the price that some investors are willing to pay for the combined company's common stock.

The combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation will designate the state or federal courts within the State of Delaware as the exclusive forum for certain types of actions and proceedings that may be initiated by the combined company's stockholders, which could limit the combined company's stockholders' ability to obtain a favorable judicial forum for disputes with the combined company or its directors, officers or employees.

The combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation, which will be Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation, will provide that, subject to limited exceptions, the state or federal courts (as appropriate) within the State of Delaware will be exclusive forums for (1) any derivative action or proceeding brought on the combined company's behalf, (2) any action asserting a claim of breach of a fiduciary duty owed by any of the combined company's directors, officers or other employees to the combined company or its stockholders, (3) any action asserting a claim against the combined company arising pursuant to any provision of the DGCL, the combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation or the combined company's amended and restated bylaws, (4) action against the combined company or any of its directors or officers involving a claim or defense arising pursuant to the Exchange Act or the Securities Act, or (5) any other action asserting a claim against the combined company that is governed by the internal affairs doctrine. Any person or entity purchasing or otherwise acquiring any interest in shares of the combined company's capital stock shall be deemed to have notice of and to have consented to the provisions of the combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation described above. This exclusive forum provision will not apply to claims which are vested in the exclusive jurisdiction of a court or forum other than the Court of Chancery of the State of Delaware, or for which the Court of Chancery of the State of Delaware does not have subject matter jurisdiction. For instance, the provision will not apply to actions arising under federal securities laws, including suits brought to enforce any liability or duty created by the Exchange Act or the rules and regulations thereunder. This choice of forum provision may limit a stockholder's ability to bring a claim in a judicial forum that it finds favorable for disputes with the combined company or its directors, officers or other employees, which may discourage such lawsuits against the combined company and its directors, officers and employees. Alternatively, if a court were to find these provisions of the combined company's amended and restated certificate of incorporation inapplicable to, or unenforceable in respect of, one or more of the specified types of actions or proceedings, the combined company may incur additional costs associated with resolving such matters in other jurisdictions, which could adversely affect the combined company's business and financial condition. In addition, while the Delaware Supreme Court ruled in March 2020 that federal forum selection provisions purporting to require claims under the Securities Act be brought in federal court are "facially valid" under Delaware law, there is uncertainty as to whether other courts will enforce the combined company's federal forum provision. If the federal forum provision is found to be unenforceable, the combined company may incur additional costs associated with resolving such matters. The federal forum provision may also impose additional litigation costs on stockholders who assert that the provision is not enforceable or invalid.

Rallybio and Candid do not anticipate that the combined company will pay any cash dividends in the foreseeable future.

The current expectation is that the combined company will retain its future earnings, if any, to fund the development and growth of the combined company's business. As a result, capital appreciation, if any, of the common stock of the combined company will be its stockholders' sole source of gain, if any, for the foreseeable future.

An active trading market for the combined company's common stock may not develop and its stockholders may not be able to resell their shares of common stock for a profit, if at all.

Prior to the Merger, there had been no public market for Candid's common stock. An active trading market for the combined company's shares of common stock may never develop or be sustained. If an active market for its common stock does not develop or is not sustained, it may be difficult for its stockholders to sell their shares at an attractive price or at all.

Future sales of shares by existing stockholders could cause the combined company's stock price to decline.

If existing stockholders of Rallybio and Candid sell, or indicate an intention to sell, substantial amounts of the combined company's common stock in the public market after legal restrictions on resale discussed in this proxy statement/prospectus lapse, including upon the expiration or release of lock-up restrictions pursuant to the terms of the Lock-Up Agreements, the trading price of the common stock of the combined company could decline. Neither Rallybio nor Candid is able to predict the effect that sales may have on the prevailing market price of the combined company's common stock.

If equity research analysts do not publish research or reports, or publish unfavorable research or reports, about the combined company, its business or its market, its stock price and trading volume could decline.

The trading market for the combined company's common stock will be influenced by the research and reports that equity research analysts publish about it and its business. Equity research analysts may elect not to provide research coverage of the combined company's common stock after the completion of the Merger, and such lack of research coverage may adversely affect the market price of its common stock. In the event it does have equity research analyst coverage, the combined company will not have any control over the analysts, or the content and opinions included in their reports. The price of the combined company's common stock could decline if one or more equity research analysts downgrade its stock or issue other unfavorable commentary or research. If one or more equity research analysts ceases coverage of the combined company or fails to publish reports on it regularly, demand for its common stock could decrease, which in turn could cause its stock price or trading volume to decline.

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial statements included in this proxy statement/prospectus are presented for illustrative purposes only and may not be an indication of the combined company's financial condition or results of operations following the completion of the Merger.

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial statements contained in this proxy statement/prospectus are presented for illustrative purposes only and may not be an indication of the combined company's financial condition or results of operations following the Merger for several reasons. The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial statements have been derived from the historical audited financial statements of Rallybio and Candid for the year ended December 31, 2025 and certain adjustments and assumptions have been made regarding the combined company after giving effect to the Merger. The information upon which these adjustments and assumptions have been made is preliminary, and these kinds of adjustments and assumptions are difficult to make with accuracy. Moreover, the unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial statements do not reflect all costs that are expected to be incurred by the combined company in connection with the Merger. For example, the impact of any incremental costs incurred in integrating the two companies is not reflected in the unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial statements. As a result, the actual financial condition of the combined company following the Merger may not be consistent with, or evident from, these unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial statements. The assumptions used in preparing the unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial statements may not prove to be accurate, and other factors may affect the combined company's financial condition following the Merger. For more information, please see the section titled "Unaudited Pro Forma Condensed Combined Financial Information" in this proxy statement/prospectus.

If the combined company fails to maintain proper and effective internal controls, its ability to produce accurate financial statements on a timely basis could be impaired.

The combined company will be subject to the reporting requirements of the Exchange Act, the Sarbanes-Oxley Act and the rules and regulations of Nasdaq. The Sarbanes-Oxley Act requires, among other things, that the combined company maintain effective disclosure controls and procedures and internal control over financial reporting. The combined company must perform system and process evaluation and testing of its internal control over financial reporting to allow management to report on the effectiveness of its internal controls over financial reporting in its Annual Report on Form 10-K filing for that year, as required by Section 404 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act. As a private company, Candid has never been required to test its internal controls within a specified period. This will require that the combined company incur substantial professional fees and internal costs to expand its accounting and finance functions and that it expends significant management efforts. The combined company may experience difficulty in meeting these reporting requirements in a timely manner.

The combined company may discover weaknesses in its system of internal financial and accounting controls and procedures that could result in a material misstatement of its financial statements. The combined company's internal control over financial reporting will not prevent or detect all errors and all fraud. A control system, no matter how well designed and operated, can provide only reasonable, not absolute, assurance that the control system's objectives will be met. Because of the inherent limitations in all control systems, no evaluation of controls can provide absolute assurance that misstatements due to error or fraud will not occur or that all control issues and instances of fraud will be detected.

If the combined company is not able to comply with the requirements of Section 404 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, or if it is unable to maintain proper and effective internal controls, the combined company may not be able to produce timely and accurate financial statements. If that were to happen, the market price of its common stock could decline and it could be subject to sanctions or investigations by Nasdaq, the SEC or other regulatory authorities.

If the combined company fails to attract and retain management and other key personnel, it may be unable to continue to successfully develop or commercialize its drug candidates or otherwise implement its business plan.

The combined company's ability to compete in the highly competitive pharmaceuticals industry depends on its ability to attract and retain highly qualified managerial, scientific, medical, legal, sales and marketing and other personnel. The combined company will be highly dependent on its management and scientific personnel. The loss of the services of any of these individuals could impede, delay, or prevent the successful development of the combined company's product pipeline, completion of its planned clinical trials, commercialization of its drug candidates or in-licensing or acquisition of new assets and could impact negatively its ability to implement successfully its business plan. If the combined company loses the services of any of these individuals, it might not be able to find suitable replacements on a timely basis or at all, and its business could be harmed as a result. The combined company might not be able to attract or retain qualified management and other key personnel in the future due to the intense competition for qualified personnel among biotechnology, pharmaceutical and other businesses.

The combined company is expected to take advantage of reduced disclosure and governance requirements applicable to smaller reporting companies and emerging growth companies, which could result in its common stock being less attractive to investors.

Following the Merger, the combined company is expected to continue to be eligible to use the reduced disclosure requirements applicable to smaller reporting companies until the next determination date, in accordance with the rules of the SEC. In addition, the combined company is expected to be an emerging growth company until the earlier of (i) the last day of the fiscal year in which the combined company has total annual gross revenues of $1.235 billion or more; (ii) December 31, 2026; (iii) the date on which the combined company has issued more than $1 billion in nonconvertible debt during the previous three years; or (iv) the date on which the combined company is deemed to be a large accelerated filer under the rules of the SEC, which means the market value of the combined company's common stock that is held by non-affiliates exceeds $700 million as of the last business day of the combined company's second fiscal quarter. As an emerging growth company and/or smaller reporting company, the combined company will be able to take advantage of reduced disclosure requirements, such as simplified executive compensation disclosures and reduced financial statement disclosure requirements in its SEC filings. Decreased disclosures in the combined company's SEC filings due to its status as an emerging growth company and/or smaller reporting company may make it harder for investors to analyze its results of operations and financial prospects. Rallybio and Candid cannot predict if investors will find the combined company's common stock less attractive if it relies on these exemptions. If some investors find its common stock less attractive as a result, there may be a less active trading market for its common stock and its stock price may be more volatile. The combined company may take advantage of the reporting exemptions applicable to a smaller reporting company until it is no longer a smaller reporting company, which status would end once it has a public float greater than $250 million as of the last business day of the combined company's second fiscal quarter. In that event, the combined company could still be a smaller reporting company if its annual revenues were below $100 million and it has a public float of less than $700 million as of the last business day of the combined company's second fiscal quarter.

Changes in tax laws may materially adversely affect the combined company's business, prospects, financial condition and operating results.

New tax laws, statutes, rules, regulations or ordinances could be enacted at any time, which could adversely affect the combined company's business, prospects, financial condition and operating results. Further, existing tax laws, statutes, rules, regulations or ordinances could be interpreted, changed, modified or applied adversely to the combined company. For example, the TCJA, the CARES Act, the IRA, and the OBBBA enacted many significant changes to the U.S. tax laws. Future guidance from the IRS and other tax authorities with respect to such legislation may affect the combined company, and certain aspects of such legislation could be repealed or modified in future legislation. Such tax law changes could have a material adverse impact on the combined company. In addition, it is uncertain if and to what extent various states will conform to newly enacted federal tax legislation. While it is too early to assess the overall impact of these changes, as these and other tax laws and related regulations are revised, enacted, and implemented, the combined company's financial condition, results of operations, and cash flows could be materially adversely impacted.

The combined company's ability to use net operating loss carryforwards and other tax attributes may be limited, including as a result of the Merger.

Each of Rallybio and Candid has incurred losses during its history, and the combined company does not expect to become profitable in the near future and may never achieve profitability. To the extent that the combined company continues to generate taxable losses, unused losses will carry forward to offset future taxable income, if any, until such unused losses expire, if at all. As of December 31, 2025, Rallybio had U.S. federal NOL carryforwards and state NOL carryforwards of $183.3 million and $181.6 million, respectively, and Candid had U.S. federal and state NOL carryforwards of approximately $24.9 million and $53.7 million, respectively. Under current law, U.S. federal NOL carryforwards generated in taxable periods beginning after December 31, 2017, may be carried forward indefinitely, but the deductibility of such NOL carryforwards is limited to 80% of taxable income. It is uncertain if and to what extent various states will conform to federal law. In addition, under Sections 382 and 383 of the Code, federal NOL carryforwards and other tax attributes may become subject to an annual limitation in the event of certain cumulative changes in ownership. An "ownership change" pursuant to Section 382 of the Code generally occurs if one or more stockholders or groups of stockholders who own at least 5% of a company's stock increase their ownership by more than 50 percentage points over their lowest ownership percentage within a rolling three-year period. The combined company's ability to utilize its NOL carryforwards and other tax attributes to offset future taxable income or tax liabilities may be limited as a result of ownership changes, including potential changes in connection with the Merger or other transactions. Similar rules may apply under state tax laws. If the combined company earns taxable income, such limitations could result in increased future income tax liability to the combined company, and the combined company's future cash flows could be adversely affected.

THE MERGER

Background of the Merger

The following chronology summarizes the material meetings and events that led to the execution of the Merger Agreement. It does not purport to catalog every discussion or interaction among the Rallybio Board, members of Rallybio's senior management or Rallybio's advisors or other parties and their respective financial advisors, legal advisors, affiliates or other representatives.

In an effort to enhance stockholder value, the Rallybio Board, together with senior management, regularly reviews and discusses Rallybio's near and long-term operating and strategic priorities. Among other things, these reviews and discussions have focused on the opportunities and risks associated with Rallybio's development programs and financial condition, as well as its strategic relationships and potential long-term strategic options.

Since inception, Rallybio's mission has been to develop and commercialize life-transforming therapies for patients with severe and rare diseases. Rallybio built a broad pipeline with product candidates aimed at addressing diseases with unmet medical need in the areas of maternal fetal health, complement dysregulation, hematology, and metabolic disorders.

In January 2025, Rallybio and Recursion, which each owned one-half of the membership interests of RE Ventures I, LLC ("REV-I"), a joint venture developing a product candidate for the treatment of patients with hypophosphatasia, began discussing potential transactions between the parties. After extensive discussion, the parties agreed to pursue a sale by Rallybio of its interests in REV-I to Recursion (the "JV Sale").

On February 24, 2025, Nasdaq notified Rallybio that Rallybio was not in compliance with Nasdaq's listing rules because the closing bid price of Rallybio's common stock had been below $1.00 per share for 30 consecutive business days. Nasdaq noted that Rallybio had until August 25, 2025 to cure the deficiency and regain compliance.

On April 8, 2025, Rallybio announced that it had discontinued its lead clinical program, RLYB212 for the prevention of fetal and neonatal alloimmune thrombocytopenia, based on pharmacokinetic data from its Phase 2 clinical trial. Rallybio announced that it would focus on advancing RLYB116, a once-weekly small volume C5 inhibitor for the treatment of complement-driven diseases, as well as its other emerging preclinical programs.

After Rallybio's April 8, 2025 announcement, representatives of Party A, a healthcare focused investment fund, contacted Rallybio to propose a potential transaction pursuant to which Rallybio would acquire a recently formed company owned primarily by Party A and the parties would concurrently complete a private placement financing to fund the combined business. Rallybio and Party A had entered into a mutual confidentiality agreement that did not include a standstill in connection with prior discussions about a potential investment by in Rallybio by Party A. Rallybio management and Party A held multiple meetings in April 2025 to discuss each company's product candidates and the proposed structure, including a potential reverse merger or asset purchase, and terms of the transaction.

On April 15, 2025, Rallybio received a proposal to acquire Rallybio for approximately $1 per share from a third party (the "April 2025 Proposal"), which amount valued Rallybio at less than the amount of cash and cash equivalents held by Rallybio on such date.

On May 2, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by members of management. During the meeting, the Rallybio Board discussed a proposed workforce reduction to streamline operations following the discontinuation of the RLYB212 program and to reduce Rallybio's cash burn rate. The Rallybio Board considered the terms of the workforce reduction and impact on Rallybio's operations and, following discussion, approved the separation of approximately 40% of Rallybio's employees. The Rallybio Board then discussed Rallybio's depressed market value and its past and current challenges to obtain financing, particularly in light of difficult market conditions for the biotechnology industry. It also considered the ongoing discussions with Party A, the potential JV Sale and other recent interactions with third parties regarding strategic transactions and financings, including discussions with privately held companies about potential reverse mergers and opportunities to monetize RLYB116. The Rallybio Board also reviewed the April 2025 Proposal and, following discussion, concluded that the proposal did not properly value Rallybio's existing programs and it was not in the best interests of Rallybio's stockholders to pursue the April 2025 Proposal at that time. The Rallybio Board then directed management to continue discussions with Party A and other third parties about potential business combination transactions.

On May 13, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management and Rallybio's financial and legal advisors at Evercore Group L.L.C. ("Evercore") and Ropes & Gray LLP ("Ropes & Gray"), respectively. During the meeting, management presented about the development plans, timelines and costs for Rallybio's product candidates and provided an overview of certain business development matters, including the JV Sale, discussions with Party A, and potential collaboration partners for RLYB116. A representative of Ropes & Gray reviewed director fiduciary duties, including in connection with the potential business development options being considered. Representatives of Evercore then reviewed biotech market trends and financing challenges, certain potential strategic alternatives available to Rallybio, including a sale of Rallybio, a reverse merger, selling certain assets, remaining a standalone independent company or winding down, and a potential process to evaluate the various alternatives and prospective counterparties. The Rallybio Board asked questions of management and Rallybio's advisors and discussed parties that should be contacted about potential transactions, based on recommendations from management and the advisors, as well as the Rallybio Board's experience in the biotech sector. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board directed management to continue discussions with Party A and Recursion, as well as to initiate a confidential process to explore strategic alternatives, including a reverse merger or sale of Rallybio.

On May 21, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management and Evercore. Management presented a proposal from Party A for a reverse merger, which ascribed a value of $25 million to Rallybio, which would result in Rallybio's stockholders owning 15% of the combined company following the proposed merger but without accounting for a concurrent equity financing that was contemplated to raise between $50-65 million. The Rallybio Board discussed, among other things, precedent transactions; the value being ascribed by Party A to Rallybio's current programs, management team and public listing; the viability of Party A's product candidate and development plans; the financing requirements of the combined company; and potential contingent value rights to be issued to Rallybio's stockholders to deliver value based on the development or divestiture of Rallybio's current programs. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board directed management to deliver a counterproposal to Party A and continue discussions. Representatives of Evercore then described potential timelines and approaches for outreach to third parties to evaluate other potential strategic alternatives. Following the discussion, the Rallybio Board directed representatives of Evercore to commence outreach to parties as previously discussed with the Rallybio Board at its meeting on May 13, 2025 to solicit proposals for a potential reverse merger with, or acquisition of, Rallybio. The Rallybio Board also agreed to hold regular meetings to receive updates about the strategic process and to provide guidance to management and the advisors.

On May 22, 2025, Rallybio provided a proposal to Party A that ascribed a value of $55 million to Rallybio, which would result in Rallybio's stockholders owning 35% of the combined company following the proposed merger but without accounting for the proposed concurrent financing that Rallybio proposed to be $60 million. In addition, Rallybio's stockholders would receive contingent value rights that would entitle them to a pro rata share of proceeds from any divestiture of Rallybio's legacy assets. Party A delivered a response on May 26, 2025 that ascribed a value of $41 million to Rallybio, which would result in Rallybio's stockholders owning 30% of the combined company following the proposed merger but prior to a concurrent financing.

On June 2, 2025 and June 4, 2025, the Rallybio Board held meetings attended by representatives of management and Evercore. Management provided updates on discussions with Party A, including Rallybio's and Party A's recent proposals, and also shared their perspectives on valuation of Rallybio. Representatives of Evercore noted that it had commenced outreach to potential counterparties regarding a potential reverse merger or acquisition, and the representatives provided feedback about initial engagement with third parties. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board directed management to continue negotiations with Party A and representatives of Evercore to continue its outreach.

On June 18, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management and Evercore. Rallybio management noted that Rallybio and Party A had agreed on the material economic terms of a potential reverse merger transaction, including that Rallybio's stockholders would own between 19.5-22.5% of the combined company after completing the proposed merger and concurrent financing, and that Rallybio's stockholders would receive contingent value rights that would entitle them to proceeds from the divestiture of any Rallybio assets. The Rallybio Board and management discussed next steps for the proposed transaction, including outreach to potential investors for the concurrent financing.

On June 25, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management provided an update on discussions with Recursion, as well as the anticipated economics and documentation for the JV Sale. Representatives of Evercore then provided an update on its outreach to third parties, noting that, at the direction of the Rallybio Board, it had initially contacted 16 privately held companies and healthcare-focused investment funds to gauge interest in a potential reverse merger, held calls with 12 of such companies and funds and delivered process letters to 10 of such potential counterparties, requesting bids by June 24, 2025. To date, three companies had submitted written proposals and one more was expected. Representatives of Evercore then provided a summary of such proposals and noted that it had contacted 17 strategic parties to inquire about their interest in acquiring Rallybio. Evercore held initial calls with 14 of such potential strategic parties and delivered process letters requesting bids by July 1, 2025. Rallybio granted access to a data room containing non-public information to six parties, each of which had previously signed a confidentiality agreement that either did not include a standstill or included a standstill that permitted the counterparty to request a waiver. No party had yet delivered a written proposal to acquire Rallybio in response to the outreach. The Rallybio Board asked questions about the proposals and discussed the proposed terms and process to evaluate each of the bids. The Rallybio Board directed the representatives of Evercore to continue its discussions with interested parties and directed management to conduct due diligence on the counterparties and their current programs.

On July 8, 2025, Rallybio entered into an agreement for the JV Sale (the "ENPP1 Purchase Agreement"), which provided that Rallybio would receive as upfront consideration shares of Recursion's common stock and additional payments of Recursion stock and cash upon achievement of certain development and clinical milestones, as well as low single digit royalties on annual net sales of certain products developed and sold by REV-I. The consideration from the transaction was expected to extend Rallybio's anticipated cash runway into at least the middle of 2027.

On July 9, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management provided an update on strategic alternatives, noting that it was continuing discussions with a few parties that expressed interest in acquiring RLYB116 and a few potential reverse merger counterparties. Management also noted that it was conducting diligence about the scientific and commercial viability of the programs being developed by the reverse merger counterparties. Representatives of Evercore stated that no parties had submitted a proposal to acquire Rallybio. However, one party had submitted a proposal to acquire RLYB116 for $11 million upfront, and two other parties had indicated they would submit proposals to acquire RLYB116. Representatives of Evercore also noted that Rallybio had received, in addition to the existing proposal from Party A, proposals from five parties contemplating a reverse merger. Representatives of Evercore summarized the terms of each proposal and discussed recent management presentations with two potential reverse merger counterparties.

On July 16, July 23 and July 30, 2025, the Rallybio Board held meetings attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. During each meeting, management provided updates on discussions with, and diligence of, counterparties regarding each strategic alternative being evaluated by the Rallybio Board. Management also provided an overview of its work with Party A to prepare a presentation for investors about the potential opportunity, which could be used to market the potential concurrent offering.

On July 28, 2025, Rallybio entered into an engagement letter with Evercore related to its services and advice in connection with potential transactions.

On August 5, 2025, the placement agents for a potential offering that would occur concurrently with a reverse merger transaction with Party A held an organizational call with Rallybio management and legal counsel to discuss the terms, process and documentation for such an offering.

On August 6, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management summarized the strategic alternatives being considered by Rallybio and recommended that Rallybio cease discussions with counterparties about a potential sale of RLYB116, because the current proposals did not adequately value the asset and the value should increase after additional clinical data became available later in 2025. Representatives of Evercore then summarized the terms of the proposed reverse merger transactions being evaluated by the Rallybio Board, including the counterparties' existing programs, the anticipated ownership of Rallybio's stockholders in the combined companies and future financing requirements. Representatives of management and Evercore responded to questions from the Rallybio Board and, after discussion, the Rallybio Board determined not to pursue a sale of RLYB116 at that time, to continue discussions with Party A and to proceed with marketing for a financing transaction that would close concurrently with that transaction. The Rallybio Board also directed management to continue discussions with two other parties that had proposed a reverse merger in case the transaction with Party A did not proceed. The Rallybio Board considered these proposed reverse mergers as less favorable options for Rallybio stockholders than a transaction with Party A for, among other reasons, the proposed valuation of the counterparties and the prospects of the counterparties' existing programs.

On August 11, 2025, representatives of Rallybio and Party A and each of their legal advisors held a meeting to discuss the structure of a potential reverse merger transaction, the potential equity consideration to be issued by Rallybio, the possibility of Rallybio's stockholders receiving contingent value rights that would entitle them to a pro rata share of consideration received upon the divestiture of Rallybio's legacy assets and other related issues.

On August 20, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management explained that Party A had recently indicated it would commit meaningfully less to the proposed financing than management had previously expected, so completing a financing of $60 million would be challenging. As a result, management recommended proposing modified terms to Party A pursuant to which the parties would seek to raise only $40 million through a concurrent financing and Rallybio's stockholders would not receive a contingent value right so any proceeds from asset dispositions or paid to Rallybio under the ENPP1 Purchase Agreement would be retained by the combined company to fund its operations, which would result in Rallybio's stockholders retaining a larger percentage of the combined business's equity. Representatives of Evercore reviewed potential execution risk for the financing given Party A's position. The Rallybio Board discussed their views of management's proposal. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board asked a director to contact Party A to discuss the reasons for Party A's reduced commitment.

On August 29, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management summarized the status of discussions with Party A, including Party A's continued unwillingness to increase the size of its commitment in the proposed financing, which Party A had confirmed to a Rallybio director. Management then outlined modified terms it recommended proposing to Party A, which would value Rallybio at $75 million, inclusive of its cash and cash equivalents, and which would not include any contingent value right for Rallybio's stockholders. As a result, Rallybio's stockholders would own approximately 45.5% of the combined company after closing the merger and concurrent financing. Management also provided an overview of other alternatives, including proposed reverse mergers, continuing to operate as a standalone company and liquidating Rallybio to return cash to stockholders. The Rallybio Board discussed the alternatives presented by management and, after discussion, directed management to deliver its recommended proposal to Party A, which management did following the meeting.

On September 10, 2025, Party A delivered an updated proposal to Rallybio that ascribed a value of $62 million to Rallybio, assuming that Rallybio had $53.6 million in cash and cash equivalents at the closing and a $40 million concurrent financing. Rallybio's stockholders would receive a contingent value right that would entitle them to a pro rata portion of any consideration received upon a divestiture of RLYB116. Based on these terms, following the transaction and related financing, Rallybio's stockholders would hold 37.8% of the equity of the combined company.

On September 15, 2025, Party B, a privately held, clinical stage biotech company that had a lead investor that was also invested in Rallybio and a director who also served on the Rallybio Board, submitted a written proposal to Rallybio. Party B had not received any non-public information prior to submitting its proposal, but had entered into a mutual confidentiality agreement with Rallybio that did not include a standstill in anticipation of discussion potential strategic alternatives. Party B's proposal ascribed a value of $50 million to Rallybio, which assumed that Rallybio had $40 million in cash and cash equivalents at the closing. The proposal also contemplated that Rallybio's valuation would be increased dollar-for-dollar for any cash proceeds it received from a sale of the RLYB116 assets.

prior to the closing, which proceeds Party B estimated could be up to $25 million. It also proposed that the parties would raise $45 million in connection with the transaction.

On September 24, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management provided an update on discussions with potential counterparties to potential strategic transactions, noting that Rallybio had recently received written proposals for a reverse merger from Party B, noting the related party nature of the proposed transaction, and a reverse merger from Party C, a privately held biotech company that had submitted a new drug application to the FDA for its lead product candidate, as well as a verbal indication of interest for a reverse merger from a newly formed consolidation vehicle. Management noted that Party C's proposal ascribed the same value to Rallybio as Party B's current proposal. Representatives from Evercore summarized the non-binding proposals currently in effect from Party A, Party B and Party C among others and responded to questions about the financing in connection with each of the proposed transactions. The representatives of Evercore also responded to questions from the Rallybio Board about certain of the opportunities under consideration and the timing of discussions with potential PIPE investors. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board determined to continue engaging with Party A and to seek investors to participate in the concurrent financing, and to initiate discussions with Party B and Party C based on their recent proposals.

On October 7, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management provided a brief update on discussions with Party A and other parties that had proposed a reverse merger, including Party B and Party C. They also summarized recent interactions about potential partnering opportunities for RLYB116, although most counterparties indicated they would like to see data from the ongoing trial before engaging further. A representative of Evercore then summarized the reverse merger proposals currently available for Rallybio, including those with Party A, Party B and Party C, as well as each counterparty's product pipelines, commercial opportunities and competitive landscape. The Rallybio Board discussed the scientific and commercial prospects of each potential counterparty's product candidates and valuation each counterparty ascribed to itself in their proposals. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board determined to continue discussions about potential reverse mergers, but agreed that it would discontinue discussions with Party A if a co-lead investor in the concurrent financing was not identified promptly. The Rallybio director who served on the board of Party B then reminded the Rallybio Board of his role at Party B and that the investment fund with which he worked had a significant investment in Party B, and stated that he would recuse himself from future discussions among the Rallybio Board about strategic alternatives, so long as a transaction with Party B remained an option. The director did not attend any portion of a Rallybio Board meeting during which strategic alternatives were discussed until the Rallybio Board's meeting on February 12, 2026, other than as noted below during the Rallybio Board's meeting on December 5, 2025.

On October 24, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management summarized the status of Rallybio's work with Party A and Party B, including discussions with institutional investors about a financing related to the transaction with Party A and diligence regarding the science and commercial opportunity for Party B's lead product candidate. Management also summarized the terms proposed by Party B for a potential transaction on September 15, 2025. The Rallybio Board and management discussed the commercial opportunity for Party B's lead product, anticipated future financing needs and potential risks of Party B achieving its projections, including adverse data, safety issues and competition, as well as the commercial opportunity for Party C. The Rallybio Board and management also discussed RLYB116 and the potential impact on Rallybio's valuation of positive data from its ongoing trial. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board determined to cease discussions with Party A based on recent discussions with potential investors and lack of progress towards a transaction, to deliver a revised term sheet to Party B and continue discussions about the business with representatives of Party B and to, in parallel, continue discussions with Party C, although the Rallybio Board expressed its view that, due to Party C's commercial prospects and proposed valuation, the proposed reverse merger with Party C was less advantageous to Rallybio stockholders than the proposed reverse merger with Party B.

On October 27, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management and certain directors summarized recent discussions they had with representatives of Party B, noting that Party B remained interested in a potential reverse merger transaction with Rallybio, but was also considering other alternatives. Management proposed terms for a counterproposal to Party B, and, following discussion, the Rallybio Board directed management to deliver the counterproposal as soon as possible. Management and the directors discussed how to accelerate the process with Party B and ensure that Rallybio's stockholders received the most value possible in the transaction.

On October 28, 2025, Rallybio delivered a term sheet to Party B that ascribed a value to Party B of $175 million and Rallybio of $59 million, which reflected the value of Rallybio's cash and cash equivalents but not RLYB116, and which would result in Rallybio's stockholders owning 25.2% of the combined company after the closing of the merger, but without accounting for a concurrent $45 million financing. The term sheet also provided that Rallybio's stockholders would receive contingent value rights that would entitle them to a pro rata portion of proceeds received upon the divestiture of Rallybio's legacy assets.

On November 7, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management provided an update on the status of discussions with Party B, including Party B's indication that it would like to continue to develop RLYB116 post-closing, rather than divest the asset, and that a portion of the anticipated financing would be required to fund Party B's operations prior to closing. The Rallybio Board discussed the strategy for negotiating the exchange ratio and RLYB116's valuation. The Rallybio Board directed management to continue discussions with Party B and also discussed whether to form a special committee to help manage negotiations with Party B and potential other alternative counterparties.

On November 9, 2025, the Rallybio Board executed a unanimous written consent forming a special transaction committee (the "Transaction Committee") comprised of Ms. Nash, Dr. Liu and Mr. Hunt to review, evaluate and negotiate possible strategic transactions. Each of the members was deemed independent under Nasdaq's listing rules and did not have any conflicts with any counterparty Rallybio was evaluating or expected to evaluate in connection with the strategic process. The Transaction Committee was delegated authority to propose and negotiate the price, structure, terms and conditions of possible transactions, but the Rallybio Board retained authority to approve any proposed transaction.

On November 11, 2025, the Transaction Committee held a meeting attended by representatives of management and Ropes & Gray. Management summarized recent discussions with the Chief Executive Officer of Party B, including about the value to be ascribed to Rallybio and RLYB116, which Party B would reflect in a written term sheet, and also noted that Rallybio's diligence of Party B was substantially complete, other than a review of financial information that had not yet been provided. Management and the Transaction Committee discussed the strategy and timing to finalize terms with Party B and the Transaction Committee directed the representative of Ropes & Gray to speak with Party B's legal counsel about the structure of the potential transaction and related issues.

On November 14, 2025, Party B delivered a written counterproposal to Rallybio that ascribed a value of $200 million to Party B and $72.5 million to Rallybio, which reflected the value of Rallybio's cash and cash equivalents and valued RLYB116 at $12.5 million. Based on these terms, Rallybio's stockholders would own 26.6% of the combined company after the closing of the merger and a concurrent $45 million financing. The term sheet noted that the proposed value of RLYB116 remained subject to diligence and $5 million of the proposed valuation was contingent on Rallybio having at least $37.5 million of net cash at the closing. It also proposed a 45-day exclusivity period during which the parties would be expected to negotiate a definitive documentation.

On November 17, 2025, representatives of Ropes & Gray and Party B's counsel held a call to discuss the structure of the proposed transaction between Rallybio and Party B, whether Rallybio's stockholders could receive contingent value rights in connection with the transaction, and the potential timeline for the transaction.

On November 17, 2025, the Transaction Committee held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. A representative of Ropes & Gray described his conversation with Party B's counsel earlier in the day and management summarized the key terms of the term sheet delivered by Party B, including the proposed transaction structure, value ascribed to the parties, the definition of net cash, Party B's financials and governance matters. Following discussion, the Transaction Committee directed management to return an updated term sheet to Party B that, among other things, provided for a simultaneous sign-and-close structure and to increase the value ascribed to Rallybio.

On November 18, 2025, Rallybio returned a draft term sheet to Party B as requested by the Transaction Committee, which contemplated a simultaneous sign-and-close structure, ascribed a value of $77.5 million to Rallybio, with RLYB116 being valued at $5 million more than in the most recent Party B proposal, and certain modifications to the definition of net cash used for determining the exchange ratio.

On November 21, 2025, Party B returned a further revised draft term sheet, which proposed a $75 million valuation for Rallybio and certain modifications to the net cash definition, as well as other adjustments to reflect the simultaneous sign-and-close structure.

On November 22, 2025, the Transaction Committee held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management summarized recent interactions with Party B and the current term sheet. The Transaction Committee and management discussed certain financial information of Party B that Rallybio would need to review and certain other diligence matters. Representatives of Evercore and Ropes & Gray discussed considerations about the proposed sign-and-close structure, including timing, regulatory and litigation risks, as well as potential financing implications. The Transaction Committee directed management to continue negotiating the term sheet and to complete diligence on Party B as soon as possible.

On November 25, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management provided an update on the status of discussions with Party B and terms reflected in Party B's most recent proposal, as well as an overview of Party B's lead asset, and Party B's future financing requirements. Management then provided an update on the positive data received to date in Rallybio's RLYB116 confirmatory trial, and discussed the current development plan for RLYB116, Rallybio's cash runway, potential partnering opportunities for RLYB116 and potential market reaction to the data. Management responded to questions from the Rallybio Board and directors discussed RLYB116 and the opportunity with Party B.

On December 3, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Representatives of Evercore summarized certain features of the proposed transaction with Party B, including, that the combined company would have a stockholder that owned more than 50% of the combined company's equity on a fully-diluted basis, that the contemplated concurrent financing would not be marketed to new investors and that the combined company would likely need to raise additional funds by mid-2027 based on Party B's management's current plan. The members of the Transaction Committee then provided an update on discussions with Party B and their perspectives about whether a transaction with Party B remained in the best interests of stockholders at that time given its potential risks and benefits. The members of the Transaction Committee responded to questions and the directors discussed their perspectives on the options available to Rallybio noting the prospects of Rallybio's and Party B's respective assets, the competitive landscape for the indications targeted by each company, financing challenges and the cash runway of Rallybio on a standalone basis and of the combined company. Following discussion, it was the consensus of the Rallybio Board that it was a viable option for Rallybio to remain independent, but that the Rallybio Board also wanted to meet with management to assess the best path for stockholders.

On December 5, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management and Ropes & Gray. At the request of the Rallybio Board, management outlined its strategy for developing RLYB116 and managing the business if Rallybio remained independent, including headcount requirements and potential partnering opportunities. Management responded to questions from the Rallybio Board and then departed the meeting. The Rallybio Board then invited the Rallybio director who also serves as a director of Party B to join the meeting and share his views regarding Party B and the opportunities presented by a combined company. He also responded to questions from the Rallybio Board and then departed the meeting. Following the Party B director's departure, the Rallybio Board discussed the two alternatives, including management's plan for RLYB116, the risks presented by remaining independent and combining with Party B and the potential benefits of each option. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board determined to request that Party B reduce its valuation to $150 million, which the Rallybio Board believes is more reflective of its actual value, but if Party B declines Rallybio will proceed as a standalone company. Following the meeting, a director communicated the proposed change to a representative of Party B.

On December 8, 2025, Party B delivered an updated term sheet that contemplated a $135 million valuation for Party B plus a new $15 million post-closing equity pool that would be used to compensate Party B employees. It also contemplated that Party B's valuation would be reduced if it had net liabilities above a certain threshold at closing and proposed a termination fee of $2.5 million payable by Rallybio if negotiations were abandoned by Rallybio prior to closing or if Rallybio sought to amend any terms in the term sheet. Following receipt, the Transaction Committee evaluated the term sheet and, after discussion, determined that it would recommend that the Rallybio Board agree to the term sheet, so long as Party B agreed to remove the termination fee.

On December 10, 2025, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Members of the Transaction Committee presented the draft term sheet from Party B noting that Party B had agreed to lower its valuation to $150 million, as previously requested by the Rallybio Board, which amount included $15 million of new equity awards that would be granted to Party B's executives, and had agreed to remove the proposed termination fee from the term sheet. The Transaction Committee noted that it recommended that the Rallybio Board approve the term sheet. A representative of Ropes & Gray then provided a reminder about the Rallybio Board's fiduciary duties. Representatives of management and Evercore responded to questions from the Rallybio Board and, after extensive discussion of the alternatives, the Rallybio Board determined to pursue a transaction with Party B and directed management to finalize the term sheet. The term sheet with Party B was executed later that day.

Between December 10, 2025 and early January 2026, Rallybio, Party B and their legal advisors engaged in negotiations regarding, and exchanged drafts of, the proposed merger agreement and disclosure schedules, and other ancillary documents. The parties also discussed the terms of documents and messaging related to the anticipated concurrent financing and regulatory and exchange listing matters related to the transaction.

On January 2, 2026, Rallybio filed a definitive proxy statement related to a special meeting of Rallybio's stockholders to consider a reverse split of the Rallybio Common Stock in order to regain compliance with the minimum bid requirements for continued listing on the Nasdaq Capital Market.

Later on January 2, 2026, the Transaction Committee held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management provided an update about negotiations with Party B, including the status of documentation. Representatives of management then reviewed the full data received from Rallybio's recently completed confirmatory study of RLYB116, noting that the study established that RLYB116 provides rapid, complete and sustained inhibition of terminal complement, and that its safety profile was significantly improved from earlier material and showed that RLYB116 has the potential to support a convenient dosing regimen. They suggested that the value of RLYB116 had likely increased due to the quality of the data and that it may be worth evaluating whether the terms of the Party B deal still appropriately reflect Rallybio's value. Representatives of Evercore then noted that they had received inbound interest from investors awaiting the data and discussed the timing and process for conducting a financing for Rallybio (the "RLYB116 PIPE") if Party B waived the exclusivity restrictions.

On January 6, 2026, the Rallybio Board and Transaction Committee each held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management provided an update on discussions with Party B, presented the RLYB116 data to the Rallybio Board and responded to questions about each. Representatives of Evercore then reviewed a potential RLYB116 PIPE and the potential timeline and process for conducting the RLYB116 PIPE. The Rallybio Board discussed the RLYB116 PIPE and determined that it would like to proceed, and directed the Transaction Committee and management to seek a waiver of Rallybio's exclusivity obligations to Party B and to offer to present the RLYB116 data to Party B. Later in the day, the Transaction Committee further discussed the size and potential process to pursue the RLYB116 PIPE and discussed the strategy for addressing with Party B.

On January 8, 2026, certain members of the Transaction Committee spoke with representatives of Party B to offer Party B the opportunity to receive the RLYB116 data and to request a waiver of Rallybio's exclusivity obligations to facilitate the RLYB116 PIPE process. Dr. Uden later presented the data to representatives of Party B, although Party B did not agree to waive the exclusivity obligations. Finally, the Transaction Committee held a meeting attended by representatives of management and Ropes & Gray. The members of the Transaction Committee discussed Party B's reaction to the waiver request and strategy for future correspondence with Party B, as well as potential legal considerations, and correspondence with the Rallybio Board about recent discussions with Party B and anticipated developments on the transaction with Party B.

Between January 8, 2026 and January 13, 2026, members of the Transaction Committee and management spoke with representatives of Party B and, on January 13, 2026, Party B agreed to release Rallybio from its exclusivity obligations under the term sheet in order to pursue the RLYB116 PIPE.

Following Party B's release, Rallybio and its advisors began preparing to conduct a confidential marketing process in connection with the RLYB116 PIPE and, on January 22, 2026, engaged placement agents to use best efforts to assist Rallybio with the offering.

On January 26, 2026, Rallybio held a special meeting of stockholders at which the stockholders approved an amendment to the Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to effect a reverse split at a ratio to be selected by the Rallybio Board. Later on January 26, 2026, the Rallybio Board approved a reverse split at a ratio of 1-for-8 shares of Rallybio Common Stock and Rallybio then filed a certificate of amendment to its amended and restated certificate of incorporation with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware to effect the reverse stock split effective at 12:01 a.m., Eastern Time, on February 6, 2026.

On January 28, 2026, the Transaction Committee held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Representatives of Evercore provided an update on the marketing process for the RLYB116 PIPE, noting they had reached out to 15 healthcare-focused investors, 14 of which elected to discuss the potential offering. The RLYB116 data had been well received by investors, but none had yet committed to participate in the RLYB116 PIPE. The Transaction Committee asked questions and discussed timing for the offering and agreed to wait until after it had more feedback from investors before updating the full Rallybio Board.

On January 30, 2026, the Transaction Committee held a brief meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management provided an update on the RLYB116 PIPE, noting that most investors had passed on the opportunity so it was unlikely an offering could proceed, but that there were a couple investors still reviewing information. The Transaction Committee asked questions about investors' responses and agreed to inform the Rallybio Board of the outcome of the marketing effort and to discuss with the Rallybio Board the messaging about reengaging with Party B on a reverse merger.

On February 2, 2026, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management began with an update on the marketing effort for the RLYB116 PIPE, noting that of the 16 investors contacted about participating, only two were continuing to evaluate the opportunity, so it was unlikely Rallybio could complete a financing at that time. The Rallybio Board then discussed reengaging with Party B and potentially reaching out to other third parties now that exclusivity with Party B had lapsed. A director mentioned that Candid's financial advisor had contacted him about whether Rallybio would consider a reverse merger with Candid and management noted that it had also been put in touch with Candid. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board requested a director to contact a representative of Party B to relay that Rallybio was unlikely to pursue the RLYB116 PIPE and was committed to pursuing a transaction with Party B. It also directed management to engage with Candid.

Following the meeting on February 2, 2026, a member of the Rallybio Board called a representative of Party B to explain that Rallybio was unlikely to proceed with the RLYB116 PIPE and, therefore, would be willing to re-open discussions with Party B. The representative of Party B noted that Party B had entered into exclusive negotiations with a third-party and would not be able to discuss a transaction with Rallybio at that time.

Also on February 2, 2026, Rallybio entered into a mutual confidentiality agreement with Candid that did not include a standstill to facilitate discussions about a potential reverse merger transaction. Later that day, Candid delivered a draft term sheet that ascribed a value of $8 million to Rallybio, which assumed that Rallybio would distribute all excess cash to its stockholders prior to the closing of a transaction and divest its legacy assets. Based on these terms, Rallybio's stockholders would own less than 1% of the equity of the combined company following closing of the proposed merger and a contemplated concurrent $200 million financing. The term sheet also provided that the equity to be issued to Candid stockholders would be registered on a Form S-4 prior to closing; would require Rallybio's stockholders to vote on the transaction unless the merger agreement was terminated prior to the stockholder meeting; permitted Candid to consider and terminate the merger agreement to accept a superior proposal subject to certain conditions; and provided that the parties would agree to negotiate exclusively (in the case of Candid, with respect to a reverse merger transaction) for 30 days.

On February 3 and 4, 2026, representatives of Evercore held calls with Party C's financial advisor to inquire about Party C's interest in re-engaging in reverse merger discussions with Rallybio and discussed the process for submitting a new proposal.

On February 4, 2026, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. The Rallybio Board discussed Party B's response, noting that it was uncertain if Party B would consummate an alternative transaction during its exclusivity period, so Rallybio should not wait to pursue alternatives. Management then summarized recent interactions with Candid, noting that the parties had entered into a confidentiality agreement and Candid had delivered a non-binding term sheet, which management summarized. The Rallybio Board discussed Candid and its proposal, including terms for a response to Candid's initial proposal and directed management to deliver a counterproposal to Candid. The Rallybio Board also discussed potential renewed interest in a reverse merger from Party C, which was simultaneously pursuing reverse merger transactions and an initial public offering. The Rallybio Board, management and the advisors discussed how to proceed with Candid, Party C and other alternative options, including requesting Party C to deliver a refreshed written proposal.

On February 5, 2026, representatives of Evercore held separate calls with Candid's Chief Financial Officer and financial advisor to discuss Candid's expectations and the process to pursue a reverse merger between Rallybio and Candid.

On February 9, 2026, Rallybio returned a draft term sheet to Candid, which provided for, among other things, a $47.5 million valuation for Rallybio, which assumed that Rallybio would have $37.5 million of net cash at the closing; that Rallybio's stockholders would own approximately 4.76% of the combined company's equity following the closing of the merger and a contemplated concurrent $200 million financing, and that Rallybio's stockholders would receive contingent value rights that would entitle them to receive a pro rata portion of any proceeds from a divestiture of Rallybio's legacy assets and any proceeds received from Recursion as a result of Rallybio's prior sale of its interests in REV-I.

On February 9, 2026, Party C delivered a revised non-binding proposal for a reverse merger transaction with Rallybio that ascribed a $46 million valuation to Rallybio, which assumed that Rallybio would have $36 million of net cash at the closing and that Rallybio's stockholders would own approximately 7.72% of the combined company's equity following the closing of the merger and a contemplated $100 million concurrent financing.

On February 10, 2026, a representative of Evercore held a call with Candid's Chief Financial Officer to discuss the terms of the proposed reverse merger, including the treatment of Rallybio's cash and the pro forma ownership of Rallybio's stockholders in the combined company. Additionally, Candid returned an updated draft term sheet to Rallybio with updates made to Rallybio's net cash definition regarding expenses associated with the divestiture or disposition of Rallybio's legacy assets.

Between February 10, 2026 and February 12, 2026, three Rallybio directors held separate calls with Dr. Song to discuss Candid's management team, product pipeline, anticipated corporate milestones and financing plans.

On February 12, 2026, the Rallybio Board held a meeting attended by representatives of management, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. Management confirmed that the remaining investors who had been evaluating the RLYB116 PIPE had withdrawn from the process, so Rallybio would no longer pursue a separate financing. They explained that Rallybio now had a few merger proposals to consider, including from Candid, Party B, which may not continue to engage after its exclusivity period, and Party C. Management also described the development pipeline for each company, noting that the FDA had recently granted marketing authorization for Party C's lead product. Representatives of Evercore then summarized the terms of the three proposals, highlighting that the value ascribed to Rallybio's cash and exchange listing was substantially similar in each proposal and noting the anticipated ownership of Rallybio's stockholders in the combined companies, the potential financing requirements proposed or required by each proposal based on assumptions provided by management of such potential counterparty and potential risks associated with each transaction. Party B had proposed a simultaneous sign-and-close structure, while the proposals from Candid and Party C required Rallybio to register the shares to be issued and to have a meeting of stockholders to approve the issuance of the shares between signing and closing. Each of the directors then provided their perspectives about the alternatives, focusing on each company's scientific and commercial potential, the future financing obligations of each, anticipated timing to sign and closing, and potential post-closing trading dynamics. Following discussion, the Rallybio Board concluded that the Candid proposal was the best available alternative for Rallybio's stockholders, due to the prospects of its product pipeline, strength of its management team, ability to complete the proposed concurrent financing and anticipated cash runway for the combined business, and directed management to deliver a non-binding term sheet to Candid for execution and proceed to legal and business diligence and negotiation of definitive documents as soon as possible. The Rallybio Board acknowledged that due to the exclusivity provisions of the term sheet with Candid, Rallybio would no longer be able to pursue a potential transaction with either of Party B or Party C.

Following the meeting, on February 12, 2026, a representative of Evercore spoke with each of Candid's Chief Financial Officer and a representative of Candid's financial advisor separately to convey that Rallybio intended to announce the results of its recently completed RLYB116 Phase 1 trial on February 17, 2026, and that Rallybio intended to send an updated term sheet to Candid later that same day. Subsequently on February 12, Rallybio returned a further revised term sheet draft to Candid that provided that, among other things, Rallybio's stockholders would receive a contingent value right that would entitle them to 100% of the net proceeds received by the combined company upon any divestiture of Rallybio's legacy assets.

On February 13, 2026, Rallybio and Candid signed the form of non-binding term sheet delivered by Rallybio on February 12. The parties promptly commenced legal and business diligence and representatives of Ropes & Gray and Cooley LLP, counsel to Candid ("Cooley"), discussed process and documentation.

Between February 14 and February 27, 2026, Rallybio, Candid and their legal and financial advisors engaged in extensive negotiations regarding, and exchanged multiple drafts of, the proposed merger agreement and disclosure schedules for each of Rallybio and Candid, the contingent value rights agreement, and forms of support agreements and a lock-up agreement. The parties also negotiated the terms of documents related to the Concurrent Financing with the placement agents for such financing and their legal counsel. The negotiation of the merger agreement focused on, among other things, the following key terms:

- the calculation of Rallybio's net cash, including the treatment of certain liabilities;
- the non-solicitation provisions, and specified exceptions, applicable to each party, including a proposal to permit Candid to solicit alternative acquisition proposals from third parties for 30 days following Candid's receipt of any superior offer (and associated tolling of Candid's obligation to deliver its stockholder written consent within seven business days of the effectiveness of the Form S-4 to be filed in connection with the proposed transactions), as well as a carve-out that would have permitted Candid to pursue certain strategic transactions without restriction. Following negotiation, Candid agreed to a more limited "fiduciary out" exception that would permit Candid to respond to unsolicited bona fide acquisition proposals that constituted, or were reasonably likely to lead to, a superior offer, which exception would not toll Candid's obligation to deliver the written consent executed by each Candid required signatory within seven business days of the date of the effectiveness of the Form S-4;
- the triggers for, and amounts payable upon, termination of the agreement. After extensive negotiation, the parties agreed to a termination fee of $50 million payable by Candid in certain termination scenarios involving Candid entering into an alternative acquisition, with a reduced fee of $10 million payable by Candid for a termination under certain circumstances following the expiration of the end date, and a termination fee of $1.425 payable by Rallybio in specified circumstances; and
- certain of the interim operating covenants, the closing conditions, and the representations and warranties made by each party.

In the contingent value rights agreement, the parties negotiated, among other things, the following key terms:

- the inclusion of and threshold for any level of efforts required to divest Rallybio's assets,
- the duration after the closing date of the Merger that such efforts obligations would last, which the parties finally agreed to be one year; and
- the end date of the combined company's obligations to make CVR payments to the CVR holders, which the parties agreed to be December 31, 2030.

On February 17, 2026, Rallybio announced positive results from its Phase 1 confirmatory pharmacokinetic/pharmacodynamic clinical trial evaluating RLYB116.

On February 18, 2026, the placement agents for the Concurrent Financing began marketing the offering to potential investors on a confidential basis.

On February 21, 2026, Mr. Lieber discussed the potential transaction with Citizens, any potential conflicts that Citizens may have, and asked that, if requested by the Rallybio Board, Citizens provide the Rallybio Board an opinion about the fairness, from a financial point of view, of the Exchange Ratio. Representatives of Citizens agreed to complete the work necessary to determine if it would be able to deliver its opinion and provided diligence information requested by Citizens to complete its work.

On February 24, 2026, Nasdaq notified Rallybio that it had regained compliance with the minimum bid requirements for continued listing on the Nasdaq Capital Market.

On February 27, 2026, Rallybio, Candid and their legal advisors exchanged advanced drafts of the proposed merger agreement prior to the Rallybio Board's consideration and approval of the Contemplated Transactions. Among other final key terms negotiated between the parties were the circumstances in which Candid could solicit alternative proposals from third parties and the amount of the termination fee payable by Candid in connection with the termination of the merger agreement under certain circumstances, as outlined in further detail above. Rallybio also entered into an engagement letter with Citizens in advance of the Rallybio Board's meeting.

Also on February 27, 2026, Evercore delivered a material relationships disclosure letter to Rallybio. Later on February 27, 2026, the Rallybio Board met with members of Rallybio's management and representatives of Citizens, Evercore and Ropes & Gray. At the meeting, a representative of Ropes & Gray reviewed the Rallybio directors' fiduciary duties and the terms and conditions of the transaction documents, including the structure, closing conditions, antitrust covenant, interim operating covenants, representations and warranties, non-solicitation covenants, and termination rights and fees. A director noted that the investment fund for which he works intended to invest in the Concurrent Financing and the other members of the Rallybio Board determined that such investment would not impair the director's independent judgment, so he should not be required to recuse himself. Citizens, after confirming to the Rallybio Board that it had no conflicts related to the proposed transaction, then reviewed its financial analysis of the Exchange Ratio and delivered to the Rallybio Board its oral opinion, confirmed by delivery of a written opinion dated March 1, 2026, to the effect that, as of such date and based upon and subject to the assumptions made, procedures followed, matters considered and limitations on the review undertaken by Citizens in preparing its opinion, the Exchange Ratio to be paid by Rallybio is fair, from a financial point of view, to Rallybio, as more fully described below in the section titled "—Opinion of Citizens JMP Securities, LLC (Rallybio's Financial Advisor)." Following discussions about the proposed transaction with Candid, including the potential merits and considerations for and against proceeding with it described further in the section titled "—Rallybio's Reasons for the Merger," the Rallybio Board unanimously (i) determined that the terms of the Merger Agreement, the Merger and the other Contemplated Transactions are fair to, advisable and in the best interests of Rallybio and its stockholders, (ii) approved and declared advisable the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, including the Merger and the issuance of shares of Rallybio Common Stock to the stockholders of Candid pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement, and (iii) determined to recommend, upon the terms and subject to the conditions set forth in the Merger Agreement, that Rallybio's stockholders vote to approve the Rallybio Stockholder Matters. The Rallybio Board also approved or ratified certain other actions to be taken by Rallybio in connection with the Contemplated Transactions.

On March 1, 2026, the parties executed the Merger Agreement, the support agreements, the Lock-Up Agreements and the Subscription Agreement.

On the morning of March 2, 2026, Rallybio and Candid issued a joint press release announcing the Contemplated Transactions.

Rallybio's Reasons for the Merger

In the course of its evaluation of the Merger, the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, the Rallybio Board held numerous meetings, consulted with Rallybio management, its legal counsel and its financial advisors and reviewed and assessed a significant amount of information and, in reaching its decision to approve the Merger, the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, the Rallybio Board considered the following factors, among others and not necessarily presented in any order of relative importance:

- Rallybio's business, financial performance (both past and prospective) and its financial condition, results of operations (both past and prospective), market capitalization and the need for future capital, business and strategic objectives, as well as the risks of accomplishing those objectives, including if Rallybio were to remain an independent company;
- the possible alternatives to the Merger available to Rallybio, the range of possible benefits and risks to the Rallybio stockholders of those alternatives and the timing and the likelihood of accomplishing the goal of any of such alternatives, and the Rallybio Board's assessment that the Merger presented a superior opportunity for Rallybio's stockholders to any such alternatives;
- the Rallybio Board's assessment of potential candidates for a strategic transaction, and in particular, the Rallybio Board's view that Candid was the most attractive and promising candidate and the Rallybio Board's belief that the Merger would create more value for Rallybio's stockholders than any of the other proposals that the Rallybio Board had received or Rallybio could create as a standalone company;
- the process undertaken by the Rallybio Board in pursuit of a strategic transaction, including the proposed Merger, in each case considering the current market dynamics;
- the prospects of and risks associated with the other strategic candidates that had made proposals for a strategic transaction with Rallybio based on the business, scientific, regulatory, intellectual property, financial, accounting and legal due diligence conducted by the Rallybio management and Rallybio's advisors;
- the Rallybio Board's belief, based in part on the clinical and scientific diligence process conducted by Rallybio's management and reviewed with the Rallybio Board, that Candid's product candidates present a market opportunity with the potential to create meaningful value for the stockholders of the combined company and an opportunity for Rallybio's stockholders to participate in the future potential growth of the combined company;
- the potential for Rallybio's equityholders to receive certain cash payments following the Closing pursuant to the Rallybio CVR Agreement, which the Rallybio Board believed preserves for Rallybio's existing equityholders the potential value from a sale or other disposition of Legacy Assets (as defined below) and obligates the combined company to use commercially reasonable efforts following the Closing to pursue a disposition of such assets if Rallybio has not completed such a disposition prior to the Closing;
- Rallybio's current market capitalization and the potential dilution from any financings required to support its plans and objectives were it to remain an independent company, as well as the uncertainty regarding the availability of such financing on terms acceptable to Rallybio;
- financial market conditions at the time of the signing of the Merger Agreement, including market prices, volatility and trading information with respect to Rallybio Common Stock;
- the financial analysis presented by Citizens to the Rallybio Board on March 1, 2026 and Citizens' opinion, dated March 1, 2026, to the Rallybio Board that, as of such date and based upon and subject to the qualifications, limitations, assumptions and other matters set forth therein, the Exchange Ratio was fair, from a financial point of view, to Rallybio (as more fully described in the section titled "The Merger—Opinion of Rallybio's Financial Advisor");
- the strength of the balance sheet of the combined organization, which includes Rallybio's anticipated Rallybio Net Cash at Closing of approximately $37.5 million, plus the aggregate commitment represented in the Concurrent Financing of approximately $505.5 million;

- the Rallybio Board's belief that the terms of the Merger Agreement and the related agreements, including the parties' respective representations, warranties and covenants, the conditions to their respective obligations to close the Merger and the termination rights of the parties, are reasonable under the circumstances, including:
 - the belief that, as a result of arm's-length negotiations with Candid, Rallybio and its representatives negotiated the most favorable Exchange Ratio to which Candid was willing to agree, and that the other terms of the Merger Agreement include the most favorable terms to Rallybio in the aggregate to which Candid was willing to agree;
 - the calculation of the Exchange Ratio, Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing and the estimated number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock to be issued in the Merger, and the fact that the relative valuation of Rallybio, and thus the relative percentage ownership of Rallybio's stockholders immediately following the Closing, is subject to change based on the amount of Rallybio net cash at the Closing;
 - the number and customary nature of the conditions to Rallybio's and Candid's respective obligations to complete the Merger and the likelihood that the Merger will be completed on a timely basis;
 - the ability of Rallybio under the Merger Agreement to consider unsolicited acquisition proposals under certain circumstances and for the Rallybio Board to potentially change its recommendation in favor of such a proposal should Rallybio determine such proposal to constitute, or be reasonably likely to result in, a superior offer;
 - the belief by the Rallybio Board of the reasonableness of the potential termination fee of $1.425 million and related reimbursement of certain transaction expenses of up to $500,000, payable by Rallybio if the Merger Agreement is terminated in certain circumstances; and
 - the belief by the Rallybio Board of the reasonableness of the potential termination fee of either $50 million or $10 million payable by Candid, depending on the circumstances of the termination, and related reimbursement of certain transaction expenses of up to $500,000, which could become payable if the Merger Agreement is terminated in certain circumstances, which the Rallybio Board believed would provide deterrence for competing acquisition proposals and provide Rallybio with compensation for the time, expense and disruption associated with negotiating the transaction if the Merger is not completed under such specified circumstances;
- the Lock-Up Agreements, pursuant to which certain executive officers, directors and stockholders of Candid have agreed not to transfer their shares of common stock of the combined company for the 180-day period after the effective time of the Merger;
- the Candid support agreements, pursuant to which certain stockholders of Candid, solely in their capacities as stockholders, have agreed, to execute a written consent or vote all of their shares of Candid Capital Stock in favor of the Merger and against any alternative acquisition proposals, and the fact that stockholders holding the necessary votes to adopt the Merger Agreement and approve the Merger have entered into Candid support agreements; and
- the Rallybio support agreements, pursuant to which certain stockholders of Rallybio, solely in their capacities as stockholders, have agreed, to vote all of their shares of Rallybio Common Stock in favor of the Proposals and against any alternative acquisition proposals.

In the course of its deliberations, the Rallybio Board also considered, among other things, a variety of risks and other countervailing factors related to entering into the Merger, the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, including:

- the possibility that the Merger will not be consummated in a timely manner or at all;
- the potential adverse effect of the public announcement of the Merger on Rallybio's business, including potential volatility of the trading price of Rallybio Common Stock following the announcement of the Merger;
- the possibility that any Legacy Assets remaining after the Closing will not be monetized and the consequential potential that Rallybio equityholders will not receive any consideration under the Rallybio CVRs and the Rallybio CVRs may otherwise expire valueless;

- the possibility that Candid will not be able to complete the Concurrent Financing on the terms or amounts contemplated or at all;
- the fact that certain provisions of the Merger Agreement could have the effect of discouraging competing proposals involving Rallybio, including the restrictions on Rallybio's ability to solicit alternative acquisition proposals;
- the fact that under certain circumstances Rallybio may be required to pay to Candid a termination fee of $1.425 million and/or an expense reimbursement of up to $500,000, and the potential effects of such termination fee and/or expense reimbursement;
- the provisions of the Merger Agreement that permit the Candid Board, subject to specified conditions, to consider and engage with third parties regarding alternative acquisition proposals and to change its recommendation if the Candid Board determines that such proposal constitutes, or is reasonably likely to result in, a superior offer;
- the strategic direction of the combined company following the completion of the Merger, which will be determined by the combined company's board, which will not include a representative of the current Rallybio Board, and the combined company's management, which is not expected to include any current Rallybio officers;
- the early-stage nature of Candid's drug candidates and the risks and uncertainties associated with development and commercialization of Candid's drug candidates, including that such drug candidates may not generate acceptable clinical data in the future or be successfully developed into products that are marketed and sold, as well as other scientific, technical and regulatory risks and uncertainties;
- the substantial fees and expenses incurred or that may be incurred by Rallybio or the combined company associated with completing the Merger, including the costs associated with any potential transaction related litigation;
- the possibility of disruptive stockholder demands or litigation following announcement of the Merger;
- the risk that the Merger may not be completed despite the parties' efforts or that the Closing may be unduly delayed and the effects on Rallybio as a standalone company because of such failure or delay, including that a more limited range of alternative strategic transactions may be available to Rallybio in such an event and that Rallybio may experience additional significant challenges associated with its need to raise additional capital through the public or private sale of equity securities;
- the fact that under certain circumstances, Rallybio will not be entitled to receive a termination fee from Candid even in the event that the Merger is not consummated as a result of circumstances which are not under Rallybio's control;
- the dilution to the existing stockholders of Rallybio upon the consummation of the Merger;
- the possibility that Rallybio Net Cash, as more fully described below under the caption "The Merger Agreement—Calculation of Rallybio's Net Cash" in this proxy statement/prospectus, may be lower at the determination time than currently anticipated, which would reduce the relative percentage ownership of Rallybio's existing equityholders in the combined company; and
- the various other risks associated with the combined company and the Merger, including those described in the section entitled "Risk Factors" in this proxy statement/prospectus.

In light of the variety of factors considered in connection with its evaluation of the Merger and the complexity of these matters, the Rallybio Board did not find it useful or practicable to, and did not attempt to, quantify, assign or rank any relative or specific weights to the various factors that it considered in reaching its determination that the Merger, the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions are advisable and in best interests of Rallybio and Rallybio's stockholders. In addition, the Rallybio Board did not undertake to make any specific determination as to whether any particular factor, or any aspect of any particular factor, was favorable or unfavorable to the ultimate determination of the Rallybio Board, but rather the Rallybio Board conducted an overall analysis of the factors described above, including discussions with and questioning of Rallybio management and representatives of the Rallybio's legal and financial advisors.

Candid's Reasons for the Merger

The following discussion sets forth material factors considered by the Candid Board in reaching its determination to approve the terms and authorize the execution of the Merger Agreement for the purpose of implementing the Merger and to approve the Concurrent Financing; however, it may not include all of the factors considered by the Candid Board. In light of the number and wide variety of factors considered in connection with its evaluation of the Merger Agreement and the Concurrent Financing, the Candid Board did not consider it practicable to, and did not attempt to, quantify or otherwise assign relative weights to the specific factors it considered in reaching its determination. The Candid Board viewed its position and determinations as being based on all of the information available and the factors presented to and considered by it. In addition, individual directors may have given different weight to different factors.

In the course of reaching its decision to approve the Merger and the Concurrent Financing, the Candid Board held meetings and conducted discussions, consulted with Candid's senior management, legal counsel and financial advisors, and considered a wide variety of factors in connection with its evaluation of the Merger Agreement and Concurrent Financing. Ultimately, the Candid Board concluded that a merger with Rallybio, together with the Concurrent Financing, was the best option to access the liquidity and capital-raising opportunities of the public markets and obtain capital to support the advancement of Candid's pipeline and the operations of the combined company.

Additional factors the Candid Board considered included, among others, the following (which factors are not necessarily presented in any order of relative importance):

- the historical and current information concerning Candid's business, including its financial performance and condition, operations, management, competitive position and preclinical and clinical data;
- Candid's prospects if it were to remain an independent privately held company, including its need to obtain additional financing and the terms on which it would be able to obtain such financing, if at all;
- the Concurrent Financing will generate substantial capital resources to fund the combined company through 2030;
- the potential benefits from increased public awareness of Candid and its pipeline;
- the Candid Board's belief that, after reviewing various financing options to enhance stockholder value, the Merger and Concurrent Financing represented the most favorable alternative reasonably available to Candid;
- the cash resources of the combined company expected to be available upon the closing of the Concurrent Financing and consummation of the Merger (including the ability to support Candid's current and planned clinical trials and operations through 2030);
- the Rallybio Net Cash that would be available to the combined company after the Merger;
- the access, as a public company, to a broader range of investors to support the development of Candid's drug candidates than if Candid continued to operate as a privately held company;
- the potential to provide its current stockholders with greater liquidity by owning stock in a public company;
- the expectation that the Merger with Rallybio, together with the funding committed in the Concurrent Financing, would be a higher probability and more efficient means to access capital than other potential options considered, including an IPO;
- the expectation that substantially all of Candid's employees, including its management, will serve in similar roles at the combined company;
- the Candid Board's fiduciary duties to Candid stockholders;
- the terms and conditions of the Merger Agreement, including, without limitation, the following:
 - the determination that the expected relative percentage ownership of Rallybio equityholders and Candid equityholders in the combined company was appropriate, based on Candid's Board's judgment and assessment of the approximate valuations of Rallybio (including the value the Rallybio Net Cash is expected to provide to the combined company) and Candid (including the value of the amount of proceeds from the Concurrent Financing);
 - the expectation that the Merger will be treated as a reorganization for U.S. federal income tax purposes, with the result that the Candid stockholders will generally not recognize taxable gain or loss for U.S. federal income tax purposes with respect to the Merger;

- the rights of the Candid Board under the Merger Agreement to consider certain unsolicited acquisition proposals, and, subject to specified conditions, to change its recommendation to approve the Merger and enter into a permitted alternative acquisition transaction, under certain circumstances should the Candid Board determine such acquisition proposal constitutes, or is reasonably likely to result in, a superior offer;
- the fact that Candid is permitted, subject to certain conditions, to engage with third parties and evaluate alternative acquisition proposals that may arise following receipt of a bona fide acquisition proposal that the Candid Board determines constitutes, or is reasonably likely to result in, a superior offer;
- the limited number and nature of the conditions of Rallybio's obligation to consummate the Merger;
- the conditions to Candid's obligation to consummate the Merger that Rallybio's net cash at Closing must be at least $0 and that Rallybio's cash and cash equivalents at Closing must be at least $1.0 million;
- the conclusion of the Candid Board that the potential termination fees payable by each of Rallybio or Candid to the other party (which the Candid Board evaluated together with the other deal protection provisions in the Merger Agreement), and the specific circumstances when such fees may be payable, were appropriate in light of the circumstances of the transaction, including the Candid Board's continued ability, subject to specified conditions, to consider and respond to alternative acquisition proposals and enter into a permitted alternative acquisition transaction; and
- the belief that the other terms of the Merger Agreement, including the parties' representations, warranties and covenants, and the conditions to their respective obligations, were reasonable in light of the entire transaction;
- the fact that shares of Rallybio Common Stock issued to Candid stockholders will be registered on a Form S-4 registration statement and will become freely tradable for Candid stockholders who are not affiliates of Candid and who are not parties to the Lock-Up Agreements;
- the support agreements, pursuant to which certain directors, officers and stockholders of Rallybio and Candid, respectively, have agreed, solely in their capacity as stockholders of Rallybio and Candid, respectively, to vote all of their shares of Rallybio Common Stock or Candid Capital Stock, respectively, in favor of the adoption and approval of the Merger Agreement;
- the anticipated Nasdaq listing of the combined company's common stock and the adoption of the name "Candid Therapeutics, Inc." for the combined company;
- the availability of appraisal rights under Section 262 of the DGCL, which permits holders of Candid Capital Stock who properly exercise such rights to seek judicial determination of the fair value of their shares of Candid Capital Stock ; and
- the likelihood that the Merger will be consummated on a timely basis.

The Candid Board also considered a number of uncertainties and risks in its deliberations concerning the Merger and the other transactions contemplated by the Merger Agreement, including the following:

- the risk that the potential benefits of the Merger may not be realized;
- the risk that the Merger might not be consummated in a timely manner or at all, including as a result of the failure of Rallybio to obtain the required Rallybio stockholder vote, and the potential adverse effect on the reputation of Candid and its ability to obtain future financing if the Merger and Concurrent Financing are not completed;
- the risk that future sales of common stock by existing Rallybio stockholders may cause the price of Rallybio Common Stock to fall, thus reducing the value of Rallybio Common Stock received by Candid stockholders in the Merger;
- the size of the termination fees payable by Candid to Rallybio upon the occurrence of certain events, and the potential effect of such termination fees in deterring potential acquirers from proposing an alternative transaction that may be more advantageous to Candid stockholders;
- the Exchange Ratio used to establish the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock to be issued to Candid stockholders in the Merger is fixed, except for adjustments due to Rallybio's Net Cash, the amount of proceeds received by Candid in the Concurrent Financing and changes in the parties' outstanding capital stock at Closing, and thus the relative percentage ownership of Rallybio stockholders and Candid stockholders in the combined company immediately following the consummation of the Merger is similarly fixed;

- the possibility that Rallybio could under certain circumstances consider unsolicited acquisition proposals the Rallybio Board deems to be superior to the Merger Agreement or change its recommendation to approve the Merger Agreement upon certain events;
- the expenses incurred and anticipated to be incurred in connection with the Merger and related administrative costs associated with combining the organizations;
- the additional costs and compliance obligations Candid will incur that are associated with operating as a public company following the consummation of the Merger;
- the fact that Rallybio's representations and warranties in the Merger Agreement do not survive the Closing, and the potential risk of liabilities that may arise after the Closing; and
- various other risks associated with the combined company and the Merger, including the risks described in the section titled "Risk Factors" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

The foregoing information is not intended to be exhaustive, but is believed to include a summary of all of the material factors considered by the Candid Board in its consideration of the Merger Agreement, the Concurrent Financing, and the various transactions contemplated thereby. After conducting an overall analysis of these and other factors, including thorough extensive discussions with Candid's senior management and outside advisors, the Candid Board concluded that the benefits, advantages and opportunities of a potential transaction outweighed the uncertainties and risks described above. Based on this overall analysis of the factors described above, the Candid Board unanimously approved the Merger Agreement, the Merger, the Concurrent Financing and the other transactions contemplated by the Merger Agreement.

Opinion of Citizens JMP Securities, LLC (Rallybio's Financial Advisor)

Introduction

Rallybio retained Citizens as a financial advisor in connection with the Merger. In connection with this engagement, the Rallybio Board requested that Citizens evaluate the fairness, from a financial point of view, to Rallybio of the Exchange Ratio to be paid by Rallybio pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement. On March 1, 2026, Citizens delivered to the Rallybio Board its written opinion that, as of such date and based upon and subject to the various assumptions made, and the qualifications and limitations upon the review undertaken by Citizens in preparing its opinion, the Exchange Ratio to be paid by Rallybio pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement is fair, from a financial point of view, to Rallybio. The full text of the written opinion of Citizens, which describes the assumptions made and the qualifications and limitations upon the review undertaken by Citizens in preparing its opinion, is attached as Annex B to this proxy statement / prospectus and is incorporated herein by reference.

The summary of the written opinion of Citizens set forth below is qualified in its entirety by the full text of the written opinion attached hereto as Annex B. Citizens' financial advisory services and opinion were provided for the information and assistance of the Rallybio Board (in their capacity as directors and not in any other capacity) in connection with and for purposes of the Rallybio Board's consideration of the Merger, and the opinion of Citizens addressed only the fairness, from a financial point of view, as of the date thereof, to Rallybio of the Exchange Ratio to be paid by Rallybio pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement. The opinion of Citizens did not address any other term or aspect of the Merger Agreement or the Merger and did not and does not constitute a recommendation to any stockholder of Rallybio or Candid as to whether or how such stockholder should vote with respect to the Merger or otherwise act with respect to the Merger or any other matter.

The full text of the written opinion of Citizens should be read carefully in its entirety for a description of the assumptions made and the qualifications and limitations upon the review undertaken by Citizens in preparing its opinion.

In connection with rendering the opinion described above and performing its related financial analyses, Citizens reviewed, among other things:

- certain publicly available financial statements and certain other business and financial information relating to Rallybio;
- the historical trading prices and trading activity for Rallybio Common Stock;
- certain financial and operating data concerning Candid prepared by the management of Candid;
- publicly available market capitalization data regarding companies in the biotechnology industry that Citizens believed to be comparable in certain respects to Candid, and publicly available financial terms of certain initial public offerings involving companies in the biotechnology industry that Citizens believed to be comparable in certain respects to Candid; and
- the Merger Agreement draft, dated February 27, 2026, and certain related documents.

Citizens also participated in discussions with members of the senior management of Rallybio and Candid and their respective advisors and representatives. Citizens also performed such other analysis and considered such other factors as Citizens deemed appropriate.

Citizens assumed and relied, without independent verification, upon the accuracy and completeness of all information and data that was publicly available or furnished to or otherwise reviewed by or discussed with Citizens and relied upon the assurance of the management of Rallybio and Candid that they are not aware of any facts or circumstances that would make such information inaccurate or misleading. The Rallybio Board was aware that neither Rallybio's nor Candid's management provided Citizens with, and Citizens did not otherwise have access to, financial forecasts regarding Rallybio's or Candid's business. Accordingly, Citizens did not perform a discounted cash flow analysis with respect to Rallybio or Candid. In addition, with Rallybio's consent, Citizens did not make any independent evaluation or appraisal of any of the assets or liabilities (contingent, derivative, off-balance-sheet or otherwise) of Rallybio or Candid, nor was Citizens furnished with any such evaluation or appraisal, and Citizens was not asked to conduct, and did not conduct, a physical inspection of the properties or assets of Rallybio or Candid.

Citizens was advised that, given that Rallybio's assets and liabilities are comprised of cash (net of liabilities) and the Legacy Assets (which currently are contemplated to be disposed) and that Rallybio is not expected to have any continuing business operations on a standalone basis other than those incidental to Rallybio's status as a publicly traded company, the management of Rallybio has not prepared financial forecasts relating to Rallybio. Accordingly, Citizens did not perform a financial analysis of Rallybio, the Legacy Assets or the Rallybio CVRs, and did not ascribe any value to the Legacy Assets or the Rallybio CVRs. Citizens assumed the equity value of Rallybio to be $10.0 million, and Rallybio Net Cash at Closing to be $37.5 million, in each case as directed by the Rallybio Board.

Citizens assumed that the representations and warranties of each party contained in the Merger Agreement are true and correct, that each party will perform all of the covenants and agreements required to be performed by it under the Merger Agreement and that all conditions to the consummation of the Merger will be satisfied without waiver thereof. Citizens assumed that the final form of the Merger Agreement will not vary materially from the last draft Merger Agreement reviewed by it and that the Merger will be consummated substantially on the terms described therein, without any amendment or waiver of material terms or conditions. Citizens also assumed that all necessary governmental, regulatory and other consents and approvals contemplated by the Merger Agreement will be obtained and that in the course of obtaining those consents and approvals no costs or restrictions will be imposed or waivers made that would have an adverse effect on the contemplated benefits of the Merger. Citizens relied on the assessments of Candid's management as to, among other things, Candid's product pipeline, future products, technology and intellectual property, including the viability of and risks associated therewith.

Citizens is not a legal, tax or regulatory advisor and relied upon, without independent verification, the assessment of Rallybio and Candid and their legal, tax or regulatory advisors with respect to legal, tax or regulatory matters. Citizens is not in the business of appraising tangible assets and did not make any independent valuation or appraisal of any or all of the assets or liabilities (including any contingent, derivative or off-balance-sheet assets or liabilities) of Rallybio or Candid, nor was it furnished with any such valuations or appraisals. In addition, Citizens did not evaluate the solvency of any party to the Merger Agreement under any state or federal laws relating to bankruptcy, insolvency or similar matters. Citizens' opinion is necessarily based on financial, economic, market and other conditions as in effect on, and the information made available to Citizens as of, the date thereof. Events occurring after such date may affect such opinion and the assumptions used in preparing it, and Citizens did not and does not assume any obligation to update, revise or reaffirm such opinion.

Citizens was not requested to consider, and Citizens' opinion did not address, Rallybio's underlying business decision to enter into the Merger Agreement and pursue the Merger, or the relative merits of the Merger as compared to any alternative business strategies that might exist for Rallybio or the effect of any other transaction in which Rallybio might engage. Citizens was not requested to consider, and its opinion did not and does not address, the non-financial terms of the Merger Agreement or the Merger, including, without limitation, the structure or form of the Merger, nor was Citizens asked to address the terms of any related transactions to be entered into by the parties, including, without limitation, the Rallybio CVRs and the Concurrent Financing, or the fairness of the Merger or any other term or aspect of the Merger to, or any consideration to be received in connection therewith by, or the impact of the Merger on, the holders of any class of securities, creditors or other constituencies of Rallybio or any other party. Citizens' opinion was limited to and addressed only the fairness, from a financial point of view, as of the date thereof, to Rallybio of the Exchange Ratio to be paid by Rallybio pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement. Furthermore, Citizens expressed no opinion with respect to the amount or nature of any compensation to be paid to any officers, directors or employees of any party to the Merger, or any class of such persons, relative to the Merger Consideration or otherwise, or with respect to the fairness of any such compensation.

Citizens' opinion was given at the request of, and is intended for the benefit and use of, the Rallybio Board in connection with its consideration of the Merger, and it is not intended to be and does not constitute a recommendation to any equityholder of Rallybio as to how such equityholder should vote or act on any matter relating to the Merger. Citizens' opinion was authorized by its fairness opinion review committee.

Summary of Financial Analysis

The following is a summary of the material financial analyses prepared by Citizens and reviewed with the Rallybio Board in connection with its opinion, which was delivered to the Rallybio Board on March 1, 2026. The summary set forth below does not purport to be a complete description of the financial analyses performed or factors considered by, and underlying the opinion of, Citizens, nor does the order of the analyses described below represent the relative importance or weight given to those analyses by Citizens. The preparation of a fairness opinion is a complex analytical process involving various determinations as to the most appropriate and relevant methods of financial analysis and the application of those methods to the particular circumstances and, therefore, a fairness opinion is not readily susceptible to summary description. In arriving at its opinion, Citizens did not draw, in isolation, conclusions from or with regard to any factor or analysis that it considered. Accordingly, Citizens believes that its analyses must be considered as a whole and that selecting portions of such analyses and factors without considering all analyses and factors, could create a misleading or incomplete view of the processes underlying Citizens' financial analyses and its opinion.

Analyses relating to the value of Candid do not purport to be appraisals or reflect the prices at which Candid may actually be sold. Accordingly, the assumptions and estimates used in, and the results derived from, the financial analyses are inherently subject to substantial uncertainty. Except as otherwise noted, the following quantitative information, to the extent that it is based on market data, is based on market data as it existed on or before February 27, 2026, and is not necessarily indicative of current market conditions.

Citizens' financial analyses and opinion were only one of many factors taken into consideration by the Rallybio Board in its evaluation of the Merger, as described under "The Merger—Rallybio's Reasons for the Merger." Consequently, the analyses described below should not be viewed as determinative of the views of the Rallybio Board or management of Rallybio with respect to the Exchange Ratio or as to whether the Rallybio Board would have been willing to determine that a different Exchange Ratio was fair. The Exchange Ratio, as well as the type of consideration payable in the Merger, was determined through arm's-length negotiations between Rallybio and Candid and was approved by the Rallybio Board. Citizens did not recommend any specific Exchange Ratio or other financial terms to Rallybio or the Rallybio Board or that any specific Exchange Ratio or other financial terms constituted the only appropriate consideration for the Merger.

In preparing its analysis, Citizens took into account that the Exchange Ratio is calculated in part by attributing equity value to Rallybio, which it assumed to be $10.0 million, and by Rallybio Net Cash at Closing, which it assumed to be $37.5 million, in each case as directed by Rallybio's board of directors. Further, Citizens was advised that the Legacy Assets are contemplated to be disposed for the benefit of holders of Rallybio Common Stock prior to the consummation of the Merger, who will receive contingent value rights relating to the net proceeds received from any disposition or commercialization thereof occurring within a specified disposition period, and that Rallybio is not expected to have any continuing business operations on a standalone basis other than those incidental to Rallybio's status as a publicly traded company. Therefore, Citizens did not ascribe any value to the Legacy Assets or the Rallybio CVRs.

As the Rallybio Board was aware, neither Rallybio's nor Candid's management provided Citizens with, and Citizens did not otherwise have access to, financial forecasts regarding Rallybio's or Candid's businesses. Accordingly, Citizens did not perform discounted cash flow analyses with respect to Rallybio or Candid.

Candid Valuation Analysis—Selected Biopharma Public Companies

Citizens reviewed publicly available information relating to the market capitalization of U.S.-listed, publicly-traded biopharmaceutical companies whose lead product was in Phase 1b/2 through Phase 3 of clinical development, focused on immunology & inflammation indications. The companies meeting these criteria were:

COMPANY	EQUITY VALUE	ENTERPRISE VALUE	LEAD ASSET
			NAME	INDICATION	STAGE
Immunovant	$5,816	$ 4,822	IMVT-1402	Graves' Disease	Phase 2b
Apogee Therapeutics	$4,980	$ 4,077	ZUMILOKIBART	Atopic Dermatitis	Phase 2
Spyre Therapeutics	$3,732	$ 2,975	SPY001	Ulcerative Colitis	Phase 2
Dianthus Therapeutics	$2,611	$ 2,087	Claseprubart	Generalized Myasthenia Gravis	Phase 2
Nektar Therapeutics	$1,866	$ 1,372	Rezpegaldesleukin	Atopic Dermatitis	Phase 2b

Avalo Therapeutics	$ 691	$ 594	AVTX-009	Hidradenitis Suppurativa	Phase 2

Citizens noted that although such companies had certain financial and operating characteristics that could be considered similar to those of Candid, none of the companies had the same management, make-up, technology, size or mix of businesses as Candid and, accordingly, there were inherent limitations on the applicability of such companies to the valuation analysis of Candid.

Citizens calculated the aggregate enterprise value of each of these companies based upon the closing price of the common stock of each such company on February 26, 2026 and the fully-diluted number of shares outstanding, using the treasury stock method. Citizens then added Candid's estimated net cash of $216 million and applied a 25% illiquidity discount to reach an adjusted equity value for Candid of between $1,198 million and $2,553 million at the 25th and 75th percentiles, respectively, of the valuation of comparable publicly traded companies, which implied an exchange ratio of between 0.2845x and 0.6032x at such respective percentiles, as compared to the assumed exchange ratio of 0.1791x (which does not give effect to the reverse stock split).

The results of this analysis are summarized as follows:

	ENTERPRISE VALUE (In millions)	ADJ. EQUITY VALUE (In millions)	ADJUSTED EQUITY VALUE W/25% ILLIQUIDITY DISCOUNT (In millions)
25th Percentile	$ 1,282	$ 1,498	$ 1,198

Prometheus Biosciences	03/11/21	PRA023	Ulcerative Colitis	Phase 1a	$ 592	$ 545

Citizens noted that although such companies had certain financial and operating characteristics that could be considered similar to those of Candid, none of the companies had the same management make-up, technology, size or mix of businesses as Candid and, accordingly, there were inherent limitations on the applicability of such companies to the valuation analysis of Candid. Citizens also noted that market conditions have varied over the precedent time periods.

Citizens calculated a pre-money enterprise valuation for these companies and added Candid's estimated net cash of $216 million to reach an adjusted pre-money equity value for Candid of between $658 million and $801 million at the 25th and 75th percentiles, respectively, of the valuation of comparable IPO transactions, which implied an exchange ratio of between 0.1575x and 0.1912x at such respective percentiles, as compared to the assumed exchange ratio of 0.1791x (which does not give effect to the reverse stock split).

The results of this analysis are summarized as follows:

The step-up multiple was derived by dividing the IPO price per share by the price per share of the last financing round prior to IPO. These initial public offerings are listed below:

COMPANY	IPO DATE	LEAD ASSET (AT IPO)			PRE-MONEY EQUITY VALUE (In millions)	STEP-UP MULTIPLE TO IPO

Prometheus Biosciences	03/11/21	PRA023	Ulcerative Colitis	Phase 1a	$ 592	2.2x

Citizens noted that, although such companies had certain financial and operating characteristics that could be considered similar to those of Candid, none of the companies had the same management make-up, technology, size or mix of businesses as Candid and, accordingly, there were inherent limitations on the applicability of such companies to the valuation analysis of Candid. Citizens also noted that market conditions have varied over the precedent time periods.

Citizens calculated the step-up multiple of each of these companies and applied these multiples to Candid's Series B valuation of $650 million to arrive at an adjusted pre-money valuation range for Candid of between $683 million and $1,203 million at the 25th and 75th percentiles, respectively, of the valuation of comparable step-up transactions, which implied an exchange ratio of between 0.1632x and 0.2855x at such respective percentiles, as compared to the assumed exchange ratio of 0.1791x (which does not give effect to the reverse stock split).

The results of this analysis are summarized as follows:

	STEP-UP MULTIPLE TO IPO	IMPLIED CANDID PRE-MONEY VALUATION (In millions)
25th Percentile	1.1x	$ 683
75th Percentile	1.9x	$ 1,203

Interests of Rallybio's Directors and Executive Officers in the Merger

In considering the recommendation of the Rallybio Board with respect to issuing shares of Rallybio Common Stock in the Merger and other matters to be acted upon by the Rallybio stockholders at the Rallybio annual meeting, the Rallybio stockholders should be aware that Rallybio's directors and executive officers have interests in the Merger that are different from, or in addition to, the interests of Rallybio stockholders generally. The Rallybio Board was aware of these potential conflicts of interest and considered them, among other matters, in reaching its decision to approve the Merger Agreement and the Merger, and to recommend that the Rallybio stockholders approve the proposals to be presented to the Rallybio stockholders for consideration at the Rallybio annual meeting as contemplated by this proxy statement/prospectus. These interests include the following:

- Under the Merger Agreement, Rallybio's directors and executive officers are entitled to continued indemnification, expense advancements and insurance coverage;

- In connection with the Merger, each option to purchase Rallybio Common Stock, restricted stock unit with respect to Rallybio Common Stock and performance-based stock unit with respect to Rallybio Common Stock held by Rallybio's directors and executive officers as of the Effective Time will vest in full upon the Closing; and
- Each Rallybio executive officer may be eligible to receive enhanced severance benefits pursuant to their respective employment agreements with Rallybio in the event of a qualifying termination of employment following the Merger.

These interests are discussed in more detail below.

Treatment of Shares of Rallybio Common Stock

Each share of Rallybio Common Stock issued and outstanding at the time of the Merger will remain issued and outstanding, and, subject to the proposed reverse stock split, will be unaffected by the Merger. Rallybio's directors and executive officers will continue to hold their existing shares of Rallybio Common Stock following the consummation of the Merger. In addition, holders of Rallybio Common Stock as of the close of business on the last business day prior to the day on which the Effective Time occurs will receive one Rallybio CVR for each outstanding share of Rallybio Common Stock held by such holder on such date (as described in more detail in the section titled "Agreements Related to the Merger—Rallybio Contingent Value Rights Agreement"). For more information regarding the beneficial ownership of Rallybio Common Stock by Rallybio's directors and executive officers, see the section titled "Principal Stockholders of Rallybio" of this proxy statement/prospectus. As of March 6, 2026, the directors and executive officers of Rallybio and their affiliates beneficially owned, in the aggregate, approximately 31.1% of the outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock (including shares issuable upon exercise of stock options exercisable within 60 days of such date).

The following table sets forth, for each Rallybio director and executive officer, the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock beneficially owned as of March 6, 2026, as well as the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock held directly (excluding shares issuable upon exercise of stock options exercisable within 60 days of such date and shares held through affiliated investment funds):

See "Principal Stockholders of Rallybio" for additional information regarding beneficial ownership.

Treatment of Rallybio Equity Awards

Pursuant to the Merger Agreement, before the Effective Time, Rallybio is required to take all actions necessary to provide that all Rallybio Stock Awards (as defined in the Merger Agreement, which includes all outstanding options to purchase Rallybio Common Stock, restricted stock units and performance-based restricted stock units granted under the Rallybio Corporation 2021 Equity Incentive Plan (the “2021 Plan”)) shall be fully vested as of the Effective Time and that no option to purchase Rallybio Common Stock shall be exercised later than 90 days following the termination of service of the holder of such option. As a result, all unvested stock options, restricted stock units and performance-based restricted stock units held by Rallybio’s directors and executive officers will become fully vested as of the Effective Time.

The following table sets forth, for each Rallybio director and executive officer, the number of unvested stock options, restricted stock units and performance-based restricted stock units outstanding as of March 6, 2026, and the estimated intrinsic value of accelerated vesting upon the Closing, calculated based on a per share price of $10.91 (the closing price of Rallybio Common Stock on the Nasdaq Capital Market on March 6, 2026). As of March 6, 2026, the unvested stock options held by Rallybio’s executive officers had exercise prices ranging from $6.08 to $54.48 per share. Of these, only the unvested stock options with an exercise price of $6.08 per share (granted February 14, 2025) had an exercise price that was less than the closing price of Rallybio Common Stock on such date. All other unvested stock options held by the executive officers had exercise prices in excess of the $10.91 per share closing price and accordingly had no intrinsic value. The actual amounts payable in respect of Rallybio Stock Awards held by directors and executive officers of Rallybio will depend on the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock subject to Rallybio Stock Awards held by such persons as of the Effective Time, which may differ from the amounts set forth in the table below.

⁽¹⁾ Estimated value of accelerated vesting represents the aggregate intrinsic value of unvested stock options (i.e., the excess, if any, of $10.91 per share over the per share exercise price, multiplied by the number of unvested shares underlying such option) and the aggregate value of unvested restricted stock units (“RSUs”) or performance-based restricted stock units (“PSUs”) (i.e., $10.91 per share multiplied by the number of unvested RSUs or PSUs). As of March 6, 2026, the unvested stock options held by the named executive officers (Drs. Uden and Ryder and Mr. Lieber) had exercise prices ranging from $6.08 to $54.48 per share. Of these, only the stock options granted on February 14, 2025 with an exercise price of $6.08 per share were in the money, with an intrinsic value of $4.83 per share ($10.91 minus $6.08). All other unvested stock options held by the named executive officers had exercise prices in excess of the $10.91 per share closing price and accordingly had no intrinsic value. Mr. Lieber’s January 2025 PSU grant of 15,000 shares was cancelled during fiscal year 2025 and accordingly is not reflected in this table. The May 2025 director options, the February 2026 in-lieu-of-cash options, and the options held by the named executive officers with a $6.08 exercise price were the only in-the-money unvested options as of March 6, 2026.

- (2) Represents 2,500 unvested PSUs granted to Mr. Lieber on February 18, 2026. See "Mr. Lieber's PSU Awards" below for additional information.
- (3) Includes 18,055 shares underlying an option granted on February 18, 2026 in lieu of Dr. Mackay's 2026 annual cash retainer of $65,000. These options vest in 11 equal monthly installments on the last day of each remaining month of calendar year 2026 and have an exercise price of $4.45 per share, which was below the $10.91 per share closing price on March 6, 2026. As of March 6, 2026, one of the 11 installments had vested (approximately 1,641 shares), and the remaining approximately 16,414 shares were unvested with an aggregate intrinsic value of approximately $106,034 (16,414 shares × $6.46 per share).
- (4) Includes 14,305 shares underlying an option granted on February 18, 2026 in lieu of Mr. Hunt's 2026 annual cash retainer of $51,500. These options vest in 11 equal monthly installments on the last day of each remaining month of calendar year 2026 and have an exercise price of $4.45 per share, which was below the $10.91 per share closing price on March 6, 2026. As of March 6, 2026, one of the 11 installments had vested (approximately 1,300 shares), and the remaining approximately 13,005 shares were unvested with an aggregate intrinsic value of approximately $84,012 (13,005 shares × $6.46 per share).

Amendments to Employment Agreements

In connection with the Merger, on March 1, 2026, Rallybio and each of Dr. Uden, Mr. Lieber, and Dr. Ryder entered into amendments to their respective employment agreements to clarify that the Merger will constitute a "change in control" for purposes of each executive's employment agreement. As a result, if any of these executive officers experiences a qualifying termination of employment (i.e., termination without cause or resignation for good reason) within the 12-month period following the Closing, the executive will be entitled to receive enhanced change-in-control severance benefits, including: (i) an amount equal to 1.5 times the sum of the executive's annual base salary and target annual bonus, payable over 18 months; (ii) any earned but unpaid annual bonus with respect to the calendar year ending on or preceding the date of termination; (iii) payment of COBRA premiums for up to 18 months; and (iv) in the case of Mr. Lieber and Dr. Ryder, full vesting of any outstanding and unvested equity awards that are subject solely to time-based vesting.

With respect to Dr. Uden, his second amended and restated employment agreement provides that any outstanding and unvested time-based equity awards held by him as of a change in control will vest in full upon the consummation of the change in control, subject to his continued employment through the date of such change in control.

For a full description of the terms of the employment agreement with Dr. Ryder (the "Ryder Employment Agreement"), including Dr. Ryder's non-change-in-control severance benefits and restrictive covenants, see "Rallybio Executive Officer and Director Compensation—Narrative Disclosure to Summary Compensation Table—Severance upon termination of employment; change in control; restrictive covenants" of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Dr. Mackay's Consulting Agreement

Under Dr. Mackay's consulting agreement with Rallybio and Rallybio, LLC, effective January 1, 2025, Dr. Mackay provides consulting services to the Rallybio for a fee of $18,750 per month ($225,000 on an annualized basis). In the event of a Change in Control (as defined in the consulting agreement), Dr. Mackay's outstanding time-based equity awards that were outstanding as of December 31, 2024 will vest in full upon the consummation of the Change in Control, subject to Dr. Mackay's continued service relationship with Rallybio through the date of such Change in Control. Because the Merger Agreement requires Rallybio to take all actions necessary to provide that all Rallybio Stock Awards shall be fully vested as of the Effective Time, all of Dr. Mackay's outstanding equity awards will become fully vested as of the Effective Time.

Mr. Lieber's PSU Award

On January 29, 2025, Mr. Lieber was granted 15,000 PSUs under the 2021 Plan. The January 2025 PSUs were subsequently cancelled during fiscal year 2025 and were not outstanding as of December 31, 2025. On February 18, 2026, Mr. Lieber was granted 5,000 PSUs, of which 2,500 vested on the date of grant (with 789 shares sold on February 23, 2026 at $5.06 per share to cover applicable withholding taxes, resulting in a net issuance of 1,711 shares) and the remaining 2,500 PSUs will vest on the six-month anniversary of a Change in Control, provided that a Change in Control is consummated on or before December 31, 2026. The Merger will constitute a Change in Control for purposes of the PSUs. Because the Merger Agreement requires Rallybio to take all actions necessary to provide that all Rallybio Stock Awards shall be fully vested as of the Effective Time, the PSUs will vest as of the Effective Time.

Interests of Candid's Directors and Executive Officers in the Merger

In considering the recommendation of the Candid Board with respect to approving the Merger, Rallybio stockholders should be aware that Candid's directors and executive officers have interests in the Merger that are different from, or in addition to, the interests of Candid's stockholders generally. These interests may present them with actual or potential conflicts of interest, and these interests, to the extent material, are described below.

The Candid Board was aware of these potential conflicts of interest and considered them, among other matters, in reaching its decision to approve the Merger Agreement and the Merger, and to recommend that the Candid stockholders approve the Merger.

Ownership Interests

As of February 28, 2026, the directors and executive officers of Candid as a group beneficially owned in the aggregate approximately 7.1% of the outstanding shares of Candid Capital Stock. In addition, Dr. Song, his spouse and children are beneficiaries of the Song Beneficiary Trust, which is managed by an independent third-party trustee and which holds approximately 6.5% of the outstanding shares of Candid Capital Stock. In addition, each of Candid's director and executive officers or their respective affiliates who beneficially own any shares of Candid Capital Stock also entered into a support agreement in connection with the Merger. For a more detailed discussion of the support agreements, please see the section titled "Agreements Related to the Merger—Support Agreements."

Treatment of Candid Stock Options

Under the terms of the Merger Agreement, each Candid stock option that is outstanding and unexercised immediately prior to the Effective Time under the Candid 2024 Plan, whether or not vested, will be converted into and become an option to purchase shares of Rallybio Common Stock at the Effective Time. Rallybio will assume the Candid 2024 Plan and all such Candid stock options in accordance with the terms of the Candid 2024 Plan and the terms of the stock option agreement by which such option is evidenced. See the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Treatment of Candid Stock Options."

As of February 28, 2026, each of Dr. Song, Dr. Lu, Mr. Kush, Dr. Huyghe, Dr. You and Mr. Puckett beneficially own Candid stock options to purchase 10,000,000, 1,200,000, 1,000,000, 500,000, 200,000 and 200,000 shares of Candid Common Stock, respectively, that will vest or begin vesting, if at all, upon or following a Liquidity Event (as defined below), which will be satisfied in connection with the Contemplated Transactions. In addition, Mr. Puckett holds a Candid stock option to purchase 1,638,750 shares of Candid Common Stock that is subject to time-based vesting conditions. All of these Candid stock options will be assumed by Rallybio and converted into options to purchase Rallybio Common Stock in accordance with the Merger Agreement. See the sections titled "Candid Executive Officer and Director Compensation—Equity-Based Incentive Awards" and "Candid Executive Officer and Director Compensation—Director Compensation."

Management Following the Merger

As described in the section captioned "Management Following the Merger", Candid's executive officers and directors are currently expected to become the executive officers and directors of the combined company.

Indemnification and Insurance

For a discussion of the indemnification and insurance provisions related to Candid's executive officers and directors under the Merger Agreement, please see the sections titled "The Merger Agreement—Other Agreements—Director Indemnification and Insurance" and "Certain Relationships and Related Party Transactions of the Combined Company—Candid Related Party Transactions—Indemnification Agreements."

Executive Officers of the Combined Company Following the Merger

Effective as of the Closing, the combined company's executive officers are expected to be the individuals designated by Candid. Candid currently expects that the following individuals will serve as the executive officers of the combined company following the Merger:

NAME	TITLE
Ken Song, M.D.	President and Chief Executive Officer
Tim Lu, M.D., Ph.D.	Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Officer
Arvind Kush	Chief Financial Officer and Chief Business Officer
Bernie Huyghe, Ph.D.	Chief Technology Officer

Merger Consideration

At the Effective Time, each share of Candid Capital Stock outstanding immediately prior thereto (excluding shares held by stockholders who have exercised and perfected appraisal rights, shares held as treasury stock by Candid or held or owned by Rallybio, Merger Sub or any subsidiary of Rallybio or Candid and shares issued in the Concurrent Financing), will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Exchange Ratio. Additionally, the Candid Common Stock issued in the Concurrent Financing will be converted solely into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio, which is calculated by multiplying the total amount of Concurrent Financing Merger Shares by the percentage of the Concurrent Financing Proceeds represented by the applicable stockholder's investment in the Concurrent Financing, in each case as set forth on the Allocation Certificate.

No fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock will be issued in connection with the Merger, and no certificates or scrip for any such fractional shares will be issued. Any holder of Candid Capital Stock who would otherwise be entitled to receive a fraction of a share of Rallybio Common Stock (after aggregating all fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock issuable to such holder) will receive from Rallybio, in lieu of such fraction of a share: (i) one share of Rallybio Common Stock if the aggregate amount of fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock such holder of Candid Capital Stock would otherwise be entitled to is equal to or exceeds 0.50; or (ii) no shares of Rallybio Common Stock if the aggregate amount of fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock such holder of Candid Capital Stock would otherwise be entitled to is less than 0.50, with no cash being paid for any fractional share eliminated by such rounding.

Treatment of Candid Stock Options

Under the terms of the Merger Agreement, each Candid stock option that is outstanding and unexercised immediately prior to the Effective Time under the Candid 2024 Plan, whether or not vested, will be converted into and become an option to purchase shares of Rallybio Common Stock at the Effective Time. Rallybio will assume the Candid 2024 Plan and all such Candid stock options in accordance with the terms of the Candid 2024 Plan and the terms of the stock option agreement by which such option is evidenced.

Accordingly, from and after the Effective Time: (i) each outstanding Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio may be exercised solely for shares of Rallybio Common Stock; (ii) the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock subject to each outstanding Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio will be determined by multiplying (A) the number of shares of Candid Common Stock that were subject to such Candid stock option, by (B) the Exchange Ratio, and rounding the resulting number down to the nearest whole number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock; (iii) the per share exercise price for the Rallybio Common Stock issuable upon exercise of each Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio will be determined by dividing (A) the per share exercise price of such Candid stock option, by (B) the Exchange Ratio and rounding the resulting exercise price up to the nearest whole cent; and (iv) any restriction on the exercise of any Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio will continue in full force and effect and the term, exercisability, vesting schedule and any other provisions of such Candid stock option will otherwise remain unchanged; provided, however, that the Rallybio Board or a committee thereof will succeed to the authority and responsibility of the Candid Board or any committee thereof with respect to each Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio.

Effective Time of the Merger

The Merger will be completed on the second business day after all of the conditions to the Closing are satisfied or waived, including the approval of the stockholders of Rallybio, unless earlier terminated in accordance with the terms of the Merger Agreement. For more information on termination rights, see the section titled “The Merger Agreement—Termination and Termination Fees.” The Merger is anticipated to occur after the Rallybio annual meeting. Neither Rallybio nor Candid can predict the exact timing of the consummation of the Merger.

Regulatory Approvals

In the United States, Rallybio must comply with applicable federal and state securities laws and the rules and regulations of Nasdaq in connection with (i) the issuance of shares of Rallybio Common Stock to Candid stockholders in connection with the transactions contemplated by the Merger Agreement and the change of control resulting from the Merger and (ii) the filing of this proxy statement/prospectus with the SEC.

The Merger is subject to the requirements of the HSR Act and the related rules and regulations, which provide that certain transactions may not be completed until notification and report forms have been furnished to the DOJ and the FTC and until certain waiting periods have been terminated or have expired. The HSR Act requires Rallybio and Candid to observe a 30-calendar-day waiting period after the submission of their respective HSR notification and report forms before consummating the Merger. The waiting period may be shortened if the reviewing agency grants “early termination” of the waiting period or lengthened if the acquiring person (here Rallybio) voluntarily withdraws and refiles to allow a second 30-calendar-day waiting period, or if the reviewing agency issues a request for additional information or documentary material (a “Second Request”) prior to the expiration of the initial waiting period, the parties must observe a second 30-calendar-day waiting period, which begins to run only after each of the parties has substantially complied with the Second Request.

On March 13, 2026, Rallybio and Candid each filed a notification and report form under the HSR Act with the DOJ and the FTC. The applicable waiting period required under the HSR Act will expire at 11:59 p.m., Eastern Time, on April 13, 2026, unless early termination is granted, Rallybio withdraws and refiles its notification and report form, or a Second Request is issued.

Material U.S. Federal Income Tax Consequences of the Merger

Rallybio stockholders will not sell, exchange or dispose of any shares of Rallybio Common Stock as a result of the Merger. Thus, there will be no material U.S. federal income tax consequences to Rallybio stockholders as a result of the Merger.

Nasdaq Stock Market Listing

Rallybio Common Stock is currently listed on Nasdaq under the symbol “RLYB.” Pursuant to the Merger Agreement, Rallybio has agreed to (a) use commercially reasonable efforts to maintain its existing listing on Nasdaq until the Closing, (b)(i) to the extent required by the rules and regulations of Nasdaq, prepare and submit to Nasdaq a notification form for the listing of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock being issued in the Merger, and (ii) use commercially reasonable efforts to cause such shares to be approved for listing (subject to official notice of issuance) on the Nasdaq market at or prior to the Effective Time, and (c) to the extent required by Nasdaq Marketplace Rule 5110, to file an initial Nasdaq Listing Application for the Rallybio Common Stock on Nasdaq and to use commercially reasonable efforts to cause such listing application to be conditionally approved prior to the Effective Time.

Each party will reasonably promptly inform the other party of all verbal or written communications between Nasdaq and such party or its representatives. Each party will cooperate with the other party as reasonably requested with respect to the Nasdaq listing application and promptly furnish to such party all information concerning itself, its members and its stockholders that may be reasonably requested in connection with any action contemplated by the foregoing paragraph.

If the Nasdaq listing application is accepted, Rallybio anticipates that the common stock of the combined company will be listed on Nasdaq following the Closing under the trading symbol “CDRX.” In order for the Nasdaq listing application to be accepted, among other requirements, the combined company must maintain a bid price of $4.00 or higher for a certain period of time following the proposed reverse stock split. As of , 2026, the bid price of Rallybio Common Stock was $

Anticipated Accounting Treatment

The Merger is expected to be accounted for under GAAP as an in-substance reverse recapitalization. For accounting purposes, Candid is expected to be considered the accounting acquirer. The treatment as an in-substance reverse recapitalization is based on the assessment that as a result of Rallybio's discontinuation of its research and development activities and settlement of its other remaining operating assets and liabilities, immediately prior to the Closing, Rallybio is expected to have nominal assets, apart from cash and cash equivalents and marketable securities. Under a reverse recapitalization, Candid is considered to effect a financing transaction in exchange for issuing equity.

Appraisal Rights

Rallybio

Under the DGCL, Rallybio stockholders are not entitled to appraisal rights in connection with the Merger.

Candid

Candid stockholders are entitled to appraisal rights in connection with the Merger under Section 262 of the DGCL.

The discussion below is not a complete summary regarding Candid stockholders' appraisal rights under Delaware law and is qualified in its entirety by reference to the text of the relevant provisions of Delaware law, which are attached as Annex O. Stockholders intending to exercise appraisal rights should carefully review Annex O. Failure to follow precisely any of the statutory procedures set forth in Annex O may result in a termination or waiver of these rights. This summary does not constitute legal or other advice, nor does it constitute a recommendation that Candid stockholders exercise their appraisal rights under Delaware law.

Under Section 262, where a merger is adopted by stockholders by written consent in lieu of a meeting of stockholders pursuant to Section 228 of the DGCL, either the constituent corporation before the effective date of such merger or the surviving corporation, within 10 days after the effective date of such merger, must notify each stockholder of the constituent corporation entitled to appraisal rights of the approval of such merger, the effective date of such merger and that appraisal rights are available.

If the Merger is completed, within 10 days after the effective date of the Merger, Candid will notify its stockholders that the Merger has been approved, the effective date of the Merger and that appraisal rights are available to any stockholder who has not approved the Merger. Holders of shares of Candid Capital Stock who desire to exercise their appraisal rights must deliver a written demand for appraisal to Candid within 20 days after the date of the giving of that notice, and that stockholder must not have delivered a written consent approving the Merger. A demand for appraisal must reasonably inform Candid of the identity of the stockholder and that such stockholder intends thereby to demand appraisal of the shares of Candid Capital Stock held by such stockholder. Failure to deliver a written consent approving the Merger will not in and of itself constitute a written demand for appraisal satisfying the requirements of Section 262. All demands for appraisal should be addressed to Candid, 11622 El Camino Real, Suite 150, San Diego, CA 92130, Attention: Jeff Woodley, Email: legal@candidrx.com, and should be executed by, or on behalf of, the record holder of shares of Candid Capital Stock. ALL DEMANDS MUST BE RECEIVED BY CANDID WITHIN 20 DAYS AFTER THE DATE CANDID GIVES A NOTICE TO ITS STOCKHOLDERS NOTIFYING THEM THAT THE MERGER HAS BEEN APPROVED, THE EFFECTIVE DATE OF THE MERGER AND THAT APPRAISAL RIGHTS ARE AVAILABLE TO ANY STOCKHOLDER WHO HAS NOT APPROVED THE MERGER.

If a Candid stockholder fails to deliver a written demand for appraisal within the time period specified above, such stockholder will be entitled to receive the merger consideration for his, her or its shares of Candid Capital Stock as provided for in the Merger Agreement, but such stockholder will have no appraisal rights with respect to his, her or its shares of Candid Capital Stock. To be effective, a demand for appraisal by a holder of shares of Candid Capital Stock must be made by, or in the name of, the registered stockholder, fully and correctly, as the stockholder's name appears on the stockholder's stock certificate(s). Beneficial owners who do not also hold the shares of record may not directly make appraisal demands to Candid. The beneficial owner must, in these cases, have the registered owner, such as a broker, bank or other custodian, submit the required demand in respect of those shares. If shares are owned of record in a fiduciary capacity, such as by a trustee, guardian or custodian, execution of a demand for appraisal should be made by or for the fiduciary; and if the shares are owned of record by more than one person, as in a joint tenancy or tenancy in common, the demand should be executed by or for all joint owners. An authorized agent, including an authorized agent for two or more joint owners, may execute the demand for appraisal for a stockholder of record; however, the agent must identify the record owner or owners and expressly disclose the fact that, in executing the demand, he or she is acting as agent for the record owner. A record owner, such as a broker, who holds shares as a custodian for others, may exercise the record owner's right of appraisal with respect to the shares held for one or more beneficial owners, while not exercising this right for other beneficial owners. In that case, the written demand should state the number of shares as to which appraisal is sought. Where no number of shares is expressly mentioned, the demand will be presumed to cover all shares held in the name of the record owner. In addition, the stockholder must continuously hold the shares of record from the date of making the demand through the Effective Time.

If a stockholder holds its shares of Candid Capital Stock in a brokerage account or in other custodian form and such stockholder wishes to exercise appraisal rights, such stockholder should consult with his, her or its bank, broker or other custodian to determine the appropriate procedures for the making of a demand for appraisal by the custodian.

At any time within 60 days after the Effective Time, any stockholder who has demanded an appraisal, but has neither commenced an appraisal proceeding or joined an appraisal proceeding as a named party, has the right to withdraw such stockholder's demand and accept the terms of the Merger by delivering a written withdrawal to Candid. If, following a demand for appraisal, such stockholder withdraws his, her or its demand for appraisal in accordance with Section 262, such stockholder will have the right to receive the merger consideration for his, her or its shares of Candid Capital Stock.

Within 120 days after the effective date of the Merger, any stockholder who has delivered a demand for appraisal in accordance with Section 262 will, upon written request to the combined company, be entitled to receive a written statement setting forth the aggregate number of shares not voted in favor of the Merger Agreement and with respect to which demands for appraisal rights have been received and the aggregate number of holders of these shares. This written statement will be given to the requesting stockholder within 10 days after the stockholder's written request is received by the combined company or within 10 days after expiration of the period for delivery of demands for appraisal, whichever is later. Within 120 days after the effective date of the Merger, either the combined company or any stockholder who has delivered a demand for appraisal in accordance with Section 262 may file a petition in the Delaware Court of Chancery demanding a determination of the fair value of the shares held by all such stockholders. Upon the filing of the petition by a stockholder, service of a copy of the petition must be made upon the combined company. The combined company has no obligation to file a petition in the Delaware Court of Chancery in the event there are dissenting stockholders, and Candid, which is expected to be the combined company, has no present intent to file a petition in the Delaware Court of Chancery. Accordingly, the failure of a stockholder to file a petition within the period specified could nullify the stockholder's previously written demand for appraisal.

If a petition for appraisal is duly filed by a stockholder and a copy of the petition is delivered to the combined company, the surviving corporation will then be obligated, within 20 days after receiving service of a copy of the petition, to provide the Delaware Court of Chancery with a duly verified list containing the names and addresses of all stockholders who have demanded an appraisal of their shares and with whom agreements as to the value of their shares have not been reached by the combined company. After notice to dissenting stockholders who demanded appraisal of their shares, the Delaware Court of Chancery is empowered to conduct a hearing upon the petition, and to determine those stockholders who have complied with Section 262 and who have become entitled to the appraisal rights provided thereby. The Delaware Court of Chancery may require the stockholders who have demanded appraisal for their shares to submit their stock certificates to the Register in Chancery for notation thereon of the pendency of the appraisal proceedings; and if any stockholder fails to comply with that direction, the Delaware Court of Chancery may dismiss the proceedings as to that stockholder.

After determination of the stockholders entitled to appraisal of their shares, the Delaware Court of Chancery will appraise the "fair value" of the shares owned by those stockholders. This value will be exclusive of any element of value arising from the accomplishment or expectation of the Merger, but may include a fair rate of interest, if any, upon the amount determined to be the fair value. When the value is determined, the Delaware Court of Chancery will direct the payment of the value, with interest thereon accrued during the pendency of the proceeding, if the Delaware Court of Chancery so determines, to the stockholders entitled to receive the same, upon surrender by the holders of the certificates representing those shares. At any time before the entry of judgment in the proceedings, the combined company may pay to each stockholder entitled to appraisal an amount in cash, in which case interest shall accrue thereafter only upon the sum of (i) the difference, if any, between the amount so paid and the fair value of the shares subject to appraisal as determined by the Delaware Court of Chancery and (ii) interest theretofore accrued, unless paid at that time.

In determining fair value, and, if applicable, a fair rate of interest, the Delaware Court of Chancery is required to take into account all relevant factors. In Weinberger v. UOP, Inc., the Delaware Supreme Court discussed the factors that could be considered in determining fair value in an appraisal proceeding, stating that “proof of value by any techniques or methods which are generally considered acceptable in the financial community and otherwise admissible in court” should be considered, and that “fair price obviously requires consideration of all relevant factors involving the value of a company.”

Section 262 provides that fair value is to be “exclusive of any element of value arising from the accomplishment or expectation of the merger.” In Cede & Co. v. Technicolor, Inc., the Delaware Supreme Court stated that this exclusion is a “narrow exclusion [that] does not encompass known elements of value,” but which rather applies only to the speculative elements of value arising from such accomplishment or expectation. In Weinberger, the Delaware Supreme Court construed Section 262 to mean that “elements of future value, including the nature of the enterprise, which are known or susceptible of proof as of the date of the merger and not the product of speculation, may be considered.”

Candid stockholders should be aware that the fair value of their shares as determined under Section 262 could be more than, the same as, or less than the value that such stockholders are entitled to receive under the terms of the Merger Agreement.

Costs of the appraisal proceeding may be imposed upon the combined company and the stockholders participating in the appraisal proceeding by the Delaware Court of Chancery as the Court deems equitable in the circumstances. Upon the application of a stockholder, the Delaware Court of Chancery may order all or a portion of the expenses incurred by any stockholder in connection with the appraisal proceeding, including, without limitation, reasonable attorneys’ fees and the fees and expenses of experts, to be charged pro rata against the value of all shares entitled to appraisal. In the absence of such a determination of assessment, each party bears its own expenses. Any stockholder who had demanded appraisal rights will not, after the Effective Time, be entitled to vote shares subject to that demand for any purpose or to receive payments of dividends or any other distribution with respect to those shares, other than with respect to payment as of a record date prior to the Effective Time; however, if no petition for appraisal is filed within 120 days after the Effective Time, or if the stockholder delivers a written withdrawal of his or her demand for appraisal and an acceptance of the terms of the Merger within 60 days after the Effective Time, then the right of that stockholder to appraisal will cease and that stockholder will be entitled to receive the merger consideration for shares of his, her or its Candid Capital Stock pursuant to the Merger Agreement. Any withdrawal of a demand for appraisal made more than 60 days after the Effective Time may only be made with the written approval of the combined company. No appraisal proceeding in the Delaware Court of Chancery will be dismissed as to any stockholder without the approval of the court.

Failure to follow the steps required by Section 262 for perfecting appraisal rights may result in the loss of appraisal rights. In view of the complexity of Section 262, stockholders who may wish to dissent from the Merger and pursue appraisal rights should consult their legal advisors.

THE MERGER AGREEMENT

The following is a summary of the material terms of the Merger Agreement. A copy of the Merger Agreement is attached as Annex A to this proxy statement/prospectus and is incorporated by reference. The Merger Agreement has been attached to this proxy statement/prospectus to provide you with information regarding its terms. It is not intended to provide any other factual information about Rallybio, Candid or Merger Sub. The following description does not purport to be complete and is qualified in its entirety by reference to the Merger Agreement. You should refer to the full text of the Merger Agreement for details of the Merger and the terms and conditions of the Merger Agreement. Capitalized terms used but not otherwise defined herein shall have the meaning ascribed to such terms in the Merger Agreement, except that references to Candid herein shall refer to “the Company” in the Merger Agreement and references to Rallybio herein shall refer to “Parent” in the Merger Agreement.

The Merger Agreement contains representations and warranties that Rallybio and Merger Sub, on the one hand, and Candid, on the other hand, have made to one another as of specific dates. These representations and warranties have been made for the benefit of the other parties to the Merger Agreement and may be intended not as statements of fact but rather as a way of allocating the risk to one of the parties if such statements made in the representations and warranties prove to be incorrect. In addition, the assertions made in the representations and warranties are qualified by the information in confidential disclosure schedules exchanged by the parties in connection with the signing of the Merger Agreement. While Rallybio and Candid do not believe that these disclosure schedules contain information required to be publicly disclosed under applicable securities laws, other than information that has already been so disclosed, the disclosure schedules contain information that modifies, qualifies and creates exceptions to the representations and warranties set forth in the Merger Agreement. Accordingly, you should not rely on the representations and warranties as current characterizations of factual information about Rallybio, Candid or Merger Sub, because they were made as of specific dates, may be intended merely as a risk allocation mechanism between Rallybio and Merger Sub on the one hand, and Candid on the other hand, and may be modified by the additional information in the disclosure schedules.

Structure

Under the Merger Agreement, Merger Sub, a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio formed in connection with the Merger, will merge with and into Candid, with Candid surviving as a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio. Substantially concurrently with the completion of the Merger, Rallybio will be renamed “Candid Therapeutics, Inc.” and it is expected that the common stock of the combined company will trade on Nasdaq under the symbol “CDRX.”

Completion and Effectiveness of the Merger

The Merger will be completed on the second business day after all of the conditions to the Closing are satisfied or waived, including the approval of the stockholders of Rallybio, unless earlier terminated in accordance with the terms of the Merger Agreement. For more information on termination rights, see the section titled “The Merger Agreement—Termination and Termination Fees.” The Merger is anticipated to occur after the Rallybio annual meeting. Rallybio and Candid cannot predict the exact timing of the Closing because it is subject to various conditions.

Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio

Merger Consideration

At the Effective Time, each share of Candid Capital Stock outstanding immediately prior to the Effective Time (excluding shares held by stockholders who have exercised and perfected appraisal rights, shares held as treasury stock by Candid or held or owned by Rallybio, Merger Sub or any subsidiary of Rallybio or Candid and shares issued in the Concurrent Financing), will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Exchange Ratio. Additionally, the Candid Capital Stock issued in the Concurrent Financing shall be converted solely into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the total amount of Concurrent Financing Merger Shares multiplied by the percentage of the Concurrent Financing Proceeds represented by the applicable stockholder’s investment in the Concurrent Financing, in each case as set forth on the Allocation Certificate.

No fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock will be issued in connection with the Merger, and no certificates or scrip for any such fractional shares will be issued. Any holder of Candid Capital Stock who would otherwise be entitled to receive a fraction of a share of Rallybio Common Stock (after aggregating all fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock issuable to such holder) shall receive from Rallybio, in lieu of such fraction of a share: (i) one share of Rallybio Common Stock if the aggregate amount of fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock such holder of Candid Capital Stock would otherwise be entitled to is equal to or exceeds 0.50; or (ii) no shares of Rallybio Common Stock if the aggregate amount of fractional shares of Rallybio Common Stock such holder of Candid Capital Stock would otherwise be entitled to is less than 0.50, with no cash being paid for any fractional share eliminated by such rounding.

Exchange Ratio

The Exchange Ratio formula pursuant to which shares of Candid Capital Stock will be converted into shares of Rallybio Common Stock is derived based on (i) a Candid fixed valuation of $750.0 million and (ii) an initial Rallybio valuation of $47.5 million, subject to certain adjustments based on Rallybio Net Cash at Closing.

The Rallybio valuation used to determine the Exchange Ratio will be increased or decreased on a dollar-for-dollar basis to reflect the amount by which Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing is greater than or less than $37.5 million, or the Rallybio Target Net Cash (as defined below). Accordingly, if Rallybio Net Cash at Closing is greater than $37.5 million, the Rallybio valuation used to calculate the Exchange Ratio will be increased by the amount of such excess, and if Rallybio Net Cash at Closing is less than $37.5 million, the Rallybio valuation used to calculate the Exchange Ratio will be decreased by the amount of such shortfall.

Immediately after the Closing, under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, the pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than holders of shares issued in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, the pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company, and the holders of shares issued in connection with the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions further described below.

The expected post-Merger equity ownership split percentages are based on the assumed Exchange Ratio and assumed Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio of 0.0716 for the Candid Capital Stock held by pre-Merger equityholders of Candid and are subject to adjustments based on the final Exchange Ratio, final Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio and final amount of converted shares. The assumed Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio were calculated assuming, among other things, (i) a reverse stock split of Rallybio Common Stock at a ratio of 1-for-2.5, to be implemented immediately prior to the Closing, as may be further adjusted, (ii) valuation of Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash at Closing of $37.5 million), (iii) a fixed valuation of Candid of $750.0 million, (iv) proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million, and (v) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. Such assumed Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio are subject to certain adjustments, including based on the amount of Rallybio Net Cash at Closing and the final ratio for the reverse stock split of Rallybio Common Stock. The Exchange Ratio and assumed Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas assumes an implied value of the combined company of approximately $1.303 billion, subject to certain adjustments. There can be no assurance that these assumptions will be accurate at the Closing when the final Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio are determined. For more information on the Concurrent Financing, please see the section titled “Agreements Related to the Merger—Subscription Agreement” of this proxy statement/prospectus.

The “Exchange Ratio” for pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (excluding shares issued in connection with the Concurrent Financing) means the following ratio (rounded to four decimal places): the quotient obtained by dividing (a) the Candid Merger Shares by (b) the Candid Outstanding Shares, and the “Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio” for holders of shares issued in connection with the Concurrent Financing is calculated by multiplying the total amount of Concurrent Financing Merger Shares by the percentage of the Concurrent Financing Proceeds represented by the applicable stockholder's investment in the Concurrent Financing, in each case, as set forth in the Allocation Certificate, for each of the foregoing, in which:

- "Aggregate Valuation" means the sum of (i) the Candid Valuation, plus (ii) the Rallybio Valuation plus (iii) the Concurrent Financing Proceeds.
- "Candid Allocation Percentage" means the Candid Valuation divided by the Aggregate Valuation.
- "Candid Merger Shares" the product determined by multiplying (a) the Post-Closing Rallybio Shares by (b) the Candid Allocation Percentage.
- "Candid Valuation" means $750,000,000.
- "Candid Outstanding Shares" means the total number of shares of Candid Capital Stock outstanding immediately prior to the Effective Time (excluding any shares of Candid Common Stock issued in the Concurrent Financing), expressed on a fully-diluted and as-converted to Candid Common Stock basis and using the treasury stock method, but assuming, without limitation or duplication, (i) the exercise of all Candid stock options outstanding as of immediately prior to the Effective Time, and (ii) the issuance of shares of Candid Capital Stock in respect of all other outstanding options, restricted stock awards, restricted stock units, warrants or rights to receive such shares, whether conditional or unconditional and including any outstanding options, warrants, restricted stock awards, restricted stock units or rights triggered by or associated with the consummation of the Merger (but excluding any shares of Candid Capital Stock reserved for issuance other than with respect to outstanding Candid stock options as of immediately prior to the Effective Time).
- "Concurrent Financing Allocation Percentage" means the quotient (rounded to four decimal places) determined by dividing (A) the Concurrent Financing Proceeds by (B) the Aggregate Valuation.
- "Concurrent Financing Merger Shares" means, subject to Section 1.5(f) of the Merger Agreement, the product determined by multiplying (i) the Post-Closing Rallybio Shares by (ii) the Concurrent Financing Allocation Percentage.
- "Rallybio Allocation Percentage" means the Rallybio Valuation divided by the Aggregate Valuation.
- "Rallybio Equity Value" means $10,000,000.
- "Rallybio Outstanding Shares" means, subject to Section 1.5(f) of the Merger Agreement (which addresses, among other things, the possibility to effect the reverse stock split) and the immediately following sentence, the total number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding immediately prior to the Effective Time, expressed on a fully-diluted basis and using the treasury stock method (and shall include, for the avoidance of doubt, all In the Money Rallybio Options), but assuming, without limitation or duplication, the issuance of shares of Rallybio Common Stock in respect of all Rallybio Stock Awards, Pre-Funded Warrants, and other outstanding options, warrants or rights to receive such shares, in each case, outstanding as of immediately prior to the Effective Time (assuming cashless exercise), whether conditional or unconditional and including any outstanding options, warrants or rights triggered by or associated with the consummation of the Merger (but excluding any shares of Rallybio Common Stock reserved for issuance other than with respect to outstanding Rallybio Stock Awards as of immediately prior to the Effective Time and as set forth above). For the avoidance of doubt, no Out of the Money Rallybio Options shall be included in the total number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding for purposes of determining the Rallybio Outstanding Shares.
- "Rallybio Target Net Cash" means $37,500,000.
- "Rallybio Valuation" means (i) if Rallybio Net Cash is greater than Rallybio Target Net Cash, the sum of (w) Rallybio Equity Value plus (x) Rallybio Target Net Cash plus (y) the amount by which Rallybio Net Cash exceeds Rallybio Target Net Cash, (ii) if Rallybio Net Cash is equal to Rallybio Target Net Cash, the sum of (x) Rallybio Equity Value plus (y) Rallybio Target Net Cash, or (iii) if Rallybio Net Cash is less than Rallybio Target Net Cash, the sum of (w) Rallybio Equity Value plus (x) Rallybio Target Net Cash minus (y) the amount by which Rallybio Target Net Cash exceeds Rallybio Net Cash.
- "Post-Closing Rallybio Shares" means the quotient obtained by dividing the Rallybio Outstanding Shares by the Rallybio Allocation Percentage.

Calculation of Rallybio Net Cash

Under the Merger Agreement, "Rallybio Net Cash" means, without duplication, (a) Rallybio's cash, currency, and cash equivalents as determined in accordance with GAAP, minus (b) Rallybio's accounts payable, accrued expenses (including Rallybio's unpaid transaction expenses, the costs of any tail policy associated with any directors' and officers' insurance policy to be bound at the Closing, lease termination costs, notice payments, fines or other payments to be made by Rallybio in order to terminate any existing agreements to which Rallybio is a party, and any other estimated expenses associated with the wind-down of Rallybio's prior research and development activities at or after the Closing, actual and estimated costs and expenses incurred in connection with the disposition of the Legacy Assets and other bona fide current and long-term liabilities (with any such liabilities, to the extent not required to be set forth in a balance sheet prepared in accordance with GAAP, to be resolved by Rallybio and Candid in good faith), and 40% of all fees and expenses incurred in relation to (i) the printing and filing of this registration statement and proxy statement/prospectus and any amendments and supplements hereto, and (ii) the proxy solicitation firm engaged in connection with Rallybio's stockholders' meeting), minus (c) any severance or change-in-control or payments (including associated payroll taxes) that become payable by Rallybio to any director, officer, employee or consultant of Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries or other person in connection with the consummation of the Merger and related transactions.

The final determination of Rallybio Net Cash at Closing is subject to numerous factors, many of which are outside of Rallybio's control. If Rallybio and Candid cannot agree on the amount of Rallybio Net Cash, the amount of Rallybio Net Cash will be determined by an independent auditor of recognized national standing jointly selected by Rallybio and Candid as set forth in the Merger Agreement.

Treatment of Candid Stock Options

Under the terms of the Merger Agreement, each Candid stock option that is outstanding and unexercised immediately prior to the Effective Time under the Candid 2024 Plan, whether or not vested, will be converted into and become an option to purchase shares of Rallybio Common Stock at the Effective Time. Rallybio will assume the Candid 2024 Plan and all such Candid stock options in accordance with the terms of the Candid 2024 Plan and the terms of the stock option agreement by which such option is evidenced.

Accordingly, from and after the Effective Time: (i) each outstanding Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio may be exercised solely for shares of Rallybio Common Stock; (ii) the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock subject to each outstanding Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio will be determined by multiplying (A) the number of shares of Candid Common Stock that were subject to such Candid stock option, as in effect immediately prior to the Effective Time, by (B) the Exchange Ratio, and rounding the resulting number down to the nearest whole number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock; (iii) the per share exercise price for the Rallybio Common Stock issuable upon exercise of each Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio will be determined by dividing (A) the per share exercise price of such Candid stock option, as in effect immediately prior to the Effective Time, by (B) the Exchange Ratio and rounding the resulting exercise price up to the nearest whole cent; and (iv) any restriction on the exercise of any Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio will continue in full force and effect and the term, exercisability, vesting schedule and any other provisions of such Candid stock option will otherwise remain unchanged; provided, however, that the Rallybio Board or a committee thereof will succeed to the authority and responsibility of the Candid Board or any committee thereof with respect to each Candid stock option assumed by Rallybio.

Directors and Executive Officers of the Combined Company Following the Merger

The Merger Agreement provides that the parties will take all necessary action so that immediately after the Effective Time, the board of directors of the combined company comprises seven members, with each member designated by Candid; provided, that the total number of directors to comprise the board of directors of the combined company immediately after the Effective Time may be changed by Candid at any time prior to the Effective Time by written notice to Rallybio. The parties currently anticipate that Ken Song, M.D., President and Chief Executive Officer of Candid, will serve as the President and Chief Executive Officer of the combined company; Tim Lu, M.D., Ph.D., Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Officer of Candid, will serve as Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Officer of the combined company; Arvind Kush, Chief Financial Officer and Chief Business Officer of Candid, will serve as Chief Financial Officer and Chief Business Officer of the combined company; and Bernie Huyghe, Ph.D., Chief Technology Officer of Candid, will serve as Chief Technology Officer of the combined company. For more information about the directors and executive officers of the combined company following the Merger, please see the section titled "Management Following the Merger."

- Rallybio must have received (i) an original signed statement from Candid that Candid is not, and has not been at any time during the applicable period specified in Section 897(c)(1)(A)(ii) of the Code, a "United States real property holding corporation," as defined in Section 897(c)(2) of the Code, conforming to the requirements of Treasury Regulations Section 1.1445-2(c)(3) and 1.897-2(h), and (ii) an original signed notice from Candid to be delivered to the IRS in accordance with the provisions of Treasury Regulations Section 1.897-2(h)(2), together with written authorization for Rallybio to deliver such notice to the IRS on behalf of Candid following the Closing, each dated as of the Closing Date, duly executed by an authorized officer of Candid, and in form and substance reasonably acceptable to Rallybio;
- since the date of the Merger Agreement, there must not have occurred and be continuing any Effect that, considered together with all other Effects, has or would reasonably be expected to have a material adverse effect on the business, condition (financial or otherwise), assets, liabilities or results of operations of Candid, taken as a whole (a "Candid Material Adverse Effect"); provided, however, that any effects arising or resulting from the following will not be taken into account in determining whether there has been a Candid Material Adverse Effect: (a) general business, political, or economic conditions generally affecting the industry in which Candid operates, including with respect to the imposition of, or adjustments to, tariffs or other trade restrictions; (b) acts of war, the outbreak or escalation of armed hostilities, acts of terrorism, earthquakes, wildfires, hurricanes or other natural disasters, health emergencies, including pandemics and related or associated epidemics, disease outbreaks or quarantine restrictions; (c) changes in financial, banking or securities markets; (d) any change in, or any compliance with or action taken for the purpose of complying with, any law or GAAP (or interpretations of any law or GAAP); (e) the announcement of the Merger Agreement or the pendency of the Contemplated Transactions; (f) resulting from the taking of any action expressly required to be taken by the Merger Agreement; or (g) continued losses from operations or decreases in cash balances of Candid; except, with respect to clauses (a) through (d), to the extent such Effect disproportionately affects Candid, taken as a whole, relative to other similarly situated companies in the industries in which Candid operates, in which case, such Effect shall be taken into account to the extent of such disproportionate effect on Candid;

- certain of Candid's investor agreements must have been terminated (or will be terminated as of the Closing); and
- Rallybio must have received duly executed copies of the required Lock-Up Agreements from certain stockholders of Candid and each executive officer and director of Candid who is elected or appointed, as applicable, as an executive officer or director of Rallybio as of immediately following the Closing, each of which must be in full force and effect as of the Closing.

In addition, the obligation of Candid to consummate the Merger is further subject to the satisfaction or waiver of the following conditions:

- the representations and warranties of Rallybio set forth in the Merger Agreement under clause (y) of Section 3.8 (i.e., the absence of any Rallybio Material Adverse Effect between September 30, 2025 and the date of the Merger Agreement) must have been true and correct in all respects as of the date of the Merger Agreement and must be true and correct as of the Closing Date with the same force and effect as if made on and as of such date; and
- the representations and warranties of Rallybio set forth in the Merger Agreement under Sections 3.1(a) (Organization, Standing and Power), 3.2(a) and (b) (Capital Stock), 3.4 (Authority) and 3.22 (Brokers) must have been true and correct in all material respects as of the date of the Merger Agreement and must be true and correct in all material respects on and as of the Closing with the same force and effect as if made on and as of such date (except to the extent such representations and warranties are specifically made as of a particular date, in which case such representations and warranties must have been true and correct in all material respects as of such date).
- All other representations and warranties of Rallybio set forth in the Merger Agreement must have been true and correct as of the date of the Merger Agreement and must be true and correct on and as of the Closing with the same force and effect as if made on and as of the Closing Date, except (a) in each case, or in the aggregate, where the failure to be so true and correct would not reasonably be expected to have an Rallybio Material Adverse Effect (as defined below) (without giving effect to any references therein to any Rallybio Material Adverse Effect or other materiality qualifications) or (b) for those representations and warranties which address matters only as of a particular date (which representations must have been true and correct, subject to the qualifications set forth in the preceding clause (a), as of such particular date);
- Rallybio and Merger Sub must have performed or complied with in all material respects all of their agreements and covenants required to be performed or complied with by each of them under the Merger Agreement at or prior to the Effective Time;
- Candid must have received from Rallybio (i) an officer's certificate confirming that certain conditions of the Merger Agreement have been duly satisfied; (ii) a certificate containing information regarding Rallybio's capitalization; (iii) the Rallybio closing financial certificate certifying Rallybio Net Cash as of the Anticipated Closing Date (as defined in the Merger Agreement), a draft of which must have been provided at least five business days prior to Closing, which certificate will be accompanied by such supporting documentation, information and calculations as are reasonably requested by Candid to verify and determine the information contained therein; (iv) a written resignation executed by the directors of Rallybio who will not continue as directors of Rallybio after the Closing; and (v) the executed CVR Agreement;
- since the date of the Merger Agreement, there must not have occurred and be continuing any effect that, considered together with all other effects, has or would reasonably be expected to have a material adverse effect on the business, condition (financial or otherwise), assets, liabilities or results of operations of Rallybio or its subsidiaries, taken as a whole (a "Rallybio Material Adverse Effect"); provided, however, that any effects arising or resulting from the following will not be taken into account in determining whether there has been a Rallybio Material Adverse Effect: (a) general business, political or economic conditions generally affecting the industry in which Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries operate, including with respect to the imposition of, or adjustments to, tariffs or other trade restrictions; (b) acts of war, the outbreak or escalation of armed hostilities, acts of terrorism, earthquakes, wildfires, hurricanes or other natural disasters, health emergencies, including pandemics and related or associated epidemics, disease outbreaks or quarantine restrictions; (c) changes in financial, banking or securities markets; (d) any change in, or any compliance with or action taken for the purpose of complying with, any law or GAAP (or interpretations of any law or GAAP); (e) any change in the stock price or trading volume of Rallybio Common Stock (it being understood, however, that any Effect causing or contributing to any change in stock price or trading volume of Rallybio Common Stock may be taken into account in determining whether a Rallybio Material Adverse Effect has occurred, unless such Effects are otherwise excepted from this definition); (f) the failure of Rallybio to meet internal or analysts' expectations or projections or the results of operations of Rallybio (it being understood, however, that any Effect causing or contributing to the failure of Rallybio to meet internal or analysts' expectations or projections or the results of operations of Rallybio may be taken into account in determining whether a Rallybio Material Adverse Effect has occurred, unless such Effects are otherwise excepted from this definition); (g) any changes in or affecting clinical trial programs or studies conducted by or on behalf of Rallybio or its subsidiaries, including any adverse data, event or outcome arising out of or related to any such programs or studies; (h) the announcement of the Merger Agreement or the pendency of the Contemplated Transactions; (i) the Asset Dispositions; (j) any reduction in the amount of Rallybio's cash and cash equivalents as a result of expenditures made by Rallybio related to wind down activities of Rallybio associated with the termination of its research and development activities (including the termination of ongoing contractual obligations relating to Rallybio current products or product candidates); or (k) the taking of any action expressly required to be taken by the Merger Agreement; except, with respect to clauses (a) through (d), to the extent disproportionately affecting Rallybio and its subsidiaries, taken as a whole, relative to other similarly situated companies in the industries in which Rallybio and its subsidiaries operate, in which case, such Effect will be taken into account to the extent of such disproportionate effect on Rallybio and its subsidiaries; and

- Rallybio Net Cash at Closing (as determined in accordance with the Merger Agreement) must have been greater than or equal to $0, and Rallybio's cash and cash equivalents as of the Closing Date (as determined in accordance with the Merger Agreement) must be greater than or equal to $1.0 million.

Asset Dispositions

Prior to Closing, Rallybio will use reasonable best efforts to sell, transfer, license, assign or otherwise divest its intellectual property and other assets and technology in existence on the date of the Merger Agreement (the "Potentially Transferable Assets") to one or more third parties in one or a series of transactions immediately following the Closing (the "Asset Dispositions"). Rallybio may, in contemplation of the Asset Dispositions, (a) establish one or more subsidiaries to hold the Potentially Transferable Assets, (b) transfer to any such subsidiary any or all of the Potentially Transferable Assets and the liabilities and obligations related thereto and (c) take such other steps that are reasonably necessary to prepare for the Asset Dispositions. If Rallybio transfers the Potentially Transferable Assets to one or more subsidiaries, the subsidiaries shall be subject to the same terms as Rallybio. Notwithstanding the foregoing, any such Asset Disposition shall require, to the extent consistent with applicable laws, the prior written consent of Candid (not to be unreasonably withheld, conditioned or delayed) if such Asset Disposition would create any post-disposition liabilities or indemnity obligations for Rallybio following the Closing; provided, however, that the prior written consent of Candid shall not be required in connection with any Asset Disposition if Rallybio agrees that the maximum aggregate dollar value of any post-disposition liabilities or indemnity obligation shall be considered as a reduction to Rallybio Net Cash as set forth in the Merger Agreement.

Non-Solicitation

Capitalized terms in this section are as defined in the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Non-Solicitation."

Rallybio Non-Solicitation

Rallybio and its subsidiaries and their respective representatives are prohibited by the terms of the Merger Agreement, other than with respect to any Asset Disposition, from, directly or indirectly, (i) soliciting, initiating or knowingly encouraging, inducing or facilitating the communication, making, submission or announcement of any Acquisition Proposal (as defined below) or Acquisition Inquiry (as defined below) or taking any action that could reasonably be expected to lead to an Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry; (ii) furnishing any non-public information regarding Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries to any person in connection with or in response to an Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry; (iii) engaging in discussions (other than to inform any person of the existence of these prohibitions) or negotiations with any person with respect to any Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry; (iv) approving, endorsing or recommending any Acquisition Proposal; (v) executing or entering into any letter of intent or any contract contemplating or otherwise relating to any Acquisition Transaction (as defined below) (other than a confidentiality agreement permitted as described below); or (vi) publicly proposing to do any of the foregoing; provided, however, that, notwithstanding the foregoing, subject to compliance with the non-solicitation obligations set forth in Section 4.4 of the Merger Agreement, and prior to obtaining the Required Rallybio Stockholder Vote, Rallybio and its subsidiaries may furnish non-public information regarding Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries to, and enter into discussions or negotiations with, any person in response to a bona fide Acquisition Proposal by such person, which the Rallybio Board has determined in good faith, after consultation with the Rallybio's outside financial advisors and outside legal counsel, constitutes, or is reasonably likely to result in, a Superior Offer (and is not withdrawn) if: (A) none of Rallybio, any of its subsidiaries or any of their respective representatives shall have breached Section 4.4 of the Merger Agreement in any material respect, (B) the Rallybio Board concludes in good faith based on the advice of outside legal counsel, that the failure to take such action would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of the Rallybio Board under applicable law; (C) Rallybio receives from such person an executed confidentiality agreement containing provisions, in the aggregate, at least as favorable to Rallybio as those contained in the Confidentiality Agreement; and (D) substantially contemporaneously with furnishing any such non-public information to such person, Rallybio gives Candid notice of Rallybio's intention to furnish nonpublic information to, or enter into discussions with, such person and furnishes such non-public information to Rallybio (to the extent such information has not been previously furnished by Rallybio to Candid).

If Rallybio, any of its subsidiaries or any of their respective representatives, receives an Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry during the period following the date of the Merger Agreement through the Closing, then Rallybio will promptly (and in no event later than one business day after Rallybio becomes aware of such Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry) (i) advise Candid orally and in writing of such Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry (including the identity of the person making or submitting such Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry), (ii) in the case of a written Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry, furnish any written documentation and correspondence to or from Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries or any of their respective representatives, including any subsequent modifications or amendments, and (iii) in the case of an oral Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry, provide a written summary of the terms thereof. Rallybio will keep Candid reasonably and promptly informed with respect to the status and material terms of any such Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry and any material modification, amendment or proposed material modification thereto (including any revision in the amount, form or mix of consideration) and of all verbal or written communications related thereto, together with copies of new written documentation and correspondence to or from Rallybio, any of its subsidiaries or any of their respective representatives as well as written summaries of any material oral communications.

Pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement, Rallybio agreed to immediately cease and cause to be terminated any existing discussions, negotiations and communications with any person relating to any Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry (other than any Asset Dispositions) as of the date of the Merger Agreement, immediately terminate access to any non-public information provided to such person via an electronic or physical data room and within three business days after the date of the Merger Agreement, request the destruction or return of any of such party's nonpublic information provided to such person as soon as practicable after the date of the Merger Agreement.

Candid Non-Solicitation

Candid and its subsidiaries and their respective representatives are prohibited by the terms of the Merger Agreement from, directly or indirectly, (i) soliciting, initiating or knowingly encouraging, inducing or facilitating the communication, making, submission or announcement of any Acquisition Proposal (as defined below) or Acquisition Inquiry (as defined below) or taking any action that could reasonably be expected to lead to an Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry; (ii) furnishing any non-public information regarding Candid or any of its subsidiaries to any person in connection with or in response to an Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry; (iii) engaging in discussions (other than to inform any person of the existence of these prohibitions) or negotiations with any person with respect to any Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry; (iv) approving, endorsing or recommending any Acquisition Proposal; (v) executing or entering into any letter of intent or any contract contemplating or otherwise relating to any Acquisition Transaction; or (vi) publicly proposing to do any of the foregoing; provided, however, that, notwithstanding the foregoing, subject to compliance with the non-solicitation obligations set forth in Section 4.5 of the Merger Agreement, and prior to obtaining the Required Candid Stockholder Vote, Candid and its subsidiaries may solicit any Acquisition Proposal and furnish non-public information regarding Candid or any of its subsidiaries to, and enter into discussions or negotiations with, any person, including any person not making such Acquisition Proposal, following receipt of a bona fide Acquisition Proposal by any person, which the Candid Board has determined in good faith, after consultation with the Candid's outside financial advisors and outside legal counsel, constitutes, or is reasonably likely to result in, a Superior Offer if: (A) none of Candid, any of its subsidiaries or any of their respective Representatives shall have breached Section 4.5 of the Merger Agreement in any material respect, (B) the Candid Board concludes in good faith based on the advice of outside legal counsel, that the failure to take such action would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of the Candid Board under applicable law; and (C) Candid receives from such person an executed confidentiality agreement containing provisions, in the aggregate, at least as favorable to Candid as those contained in the Confidentiality Agreement.

If Candid, any of its subsidiaries or any of their respective representatives, receives an Acquisition Proposal during the period following the date of the Merger Agreement through the Closing, then Candid will promptly (and in no event later than one business day after Candid becomes aware of such Acquisition Proposal) (i) advise Rallybio orally and in writing of such Acquisition Proposal (including the identity of the person making or submitting such Acquisition Proposal), (ii) in the case of a written Acquisition Proposal, furnish any written documentation and correspondence to or from Candid, any of its subsidiaries or any of their respective representatives, including any subsequent modifications or amendments, and (iii) in the case of an oral Acquisition Proposal, provide a written summary of the terms thereof. Candid will keep Rallybio reasonably and promptly informed with respect to the status and material terms of any such Acquisition Proposal and any material modification, amendment or proposed material modification thereto (including any revision in the amount, form or mix of consideration) and of all verbal or written communications related thereto, together with copies of new written documentation and correspondence to or from Candid or any of its subsidiaries or any of their respective representatives as well as written summaries of any material oral communications).

Pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement, Candid agreed to immediately cease any existing discussions, negotiations and communications with any person that relate to any Acquisition Proposal or Acquisition Inquiry that has not already been terminated as of the date of the Merger Agreement, immediately terminate access to any non-public information of Candid provided to such person via an electronic or physical data room.

"Acquisition Inquiry" means, with respect to a party, an inquiry, indication of interest or request for information (other than an inquiry, indication of interest or request for information made or submitted by Candid or any of its affiliates, on the one hand, or Rallybio or any of its affiliates, on the other hand, to the other party) that could reasonably be expected to lead to an Acquisition Proposal; provided, however, that the term “Acquisition Inquiry” shall not include the Merger or the other Contemplated Transactions or any transactions related to the Asset Dispositions or Concurrent Financing.

“Acquisition Proposal” means, with respect to a party, any offer or proposal, whether written or oral (other than an offer or proposal made or submitted by or on behalf of Candid or any of its affiliates, on the one hand, or by or on behalf of Rallybio or any of its affiliates, on the other hand, to the other party) contemplating or otherwise relating to any Acquisition Transaction with such party, other than the Asset Dispositions and the Concurrent Financing.

“Acquisition Transaction” means any transaction or series of related transactions (other than the Asset Dispositions and the Concurrent Financing) involving: any merger, consolidation, amalgamation, share exchange, business combination, issuance of securities, acquisition of securities, reorganization, recapitalization, tender offer, exchange offer or other similar transaction: (i) in which a party is a constituent entity; (ii) in which a person or “group” (as defined in the Exchange Act) of persons directly or indirectly acquires beneficial or record ownership of securities representing more than 20% of the outstanding securities of any class of voting securities of a party or any of its subsidiaries; or (iii) in which a party or any of its subsidiaries issues securities representing more than 20% of the outstanding securities of any class of voting securities of such party or any of its subsidiaries; or (y) any sale, lease, exchange, transfer, license, acquisition or disposition of any business or businesses or assets that constitute or account for 20% or more of the consolidated book value or the fair market value of the assets of a party and its subsidiaries, taken as a whole.

“Superior Offer” means an unsolicited bona fide written Acquisition Proposal (with all references to 20% in the definition of Acquisition Transaction being treated as references to greater than 50% for these purposes) that: (a) was not obtained or made as a result of a breach of (or in violation of) the Merger Agreement; and (b) is on terms and conditions that the Rallybio Board or Candid Board, as applicable, determines in good faith, based on such matters that it deems relevant (including the likelihood of consummation thereof and the financing terms thereof), as well as any written offer by Candid or Rallybio, as applicable, to amend the terms of the Merger Agreement, and following consultation with its outside legal counsel and outside financial advisors, are more favorable, from a financial point of view, to Rallybio’s stockholders or Candid’s stockholders, as applicable, than the terms of the Contemplated Transactions and is not subject to any financing condition (and if financing is required, such financing is then fully committed to the third party).

Rallybio Stockholder Meeting

Promptly after the registration statement has been declared effective by the SEC under the Securities Act, Rallybio will take all action necessary under applicable law to call, give notice of and hold a meeting of the holders of Rallybio Common Stock for the purpose of seeking approval of: (i) the issuance of Rallybio Common Stock or other securities of Rallybio that represent (or are convertible into) more than 20% of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding immediately prior to the Merger to the holders of Candid Capital Stock and Candid stock options in connection with the Contemplated Transactions and the change of control of Rallybio resulting from the Contemplated Transactions, in each case pursuant to the Nasdaq rules, (ii) the approval of the Rallybio charter amendment to (A) change the name of Rallybio to “Candid Therapeutics, Inc.,” (B) effect the reverse stock split (the matters contemplated by foregoing clauses (i) and (ii)), (the “Rallybio Stockholder Matters”) and (iii) effect an increase of the number of authorized shares of Rallybio Common Stock to a number determined by Candid (the “Authorized Share Increase Proposal”), (iv) the combined company’s 2026 Equity Incentive Plan, (v) the combined company’s 2026 Employee Stock Purchase Plan and (vi) any other proposals the parties deem necessary to consummate the Contemplated Transactions.

The Rallybio stockholders’ meeting will be held as promptly as practicable after the registration statement is declared effective under the Securities Act and, in any event, no later than forty-five calendar days after the effective date of the registration statement. Rallybio will take reasonable measures to ensure that all proxies solicited in connection with the Rallybio stockholders’ meeting are solicited in compliance with all applicable laws. If, on or before the date of the Rallybio stockholders’ meeting, Rallybio reasonably believes that it (i) will not receive proxies sufficient to obtain the required approvals of the Required Rallybio Closing Stockholder Matters (the “Required Rallybio Stockholder Vote”) or the approval of the Authorized Share Increase Proposal, whether or not a quorum would be present or (ii) will not have sufficient shares of Rallybio Common Stock represented (whether in person or by proxy) to constitute a quorum necessary to conduct the business of the Rallybio stockholders’ meeting, Rallybio may postpone or adjourn, or make one or more successive postponements or adjournments of, the Rallybio stockholders’ meeting as long as the date of the Rallybio stockholders’ meeting is not postponed or adjourned more than an aggregate of thirty calendar days in connection with any postponements or adjournments.

Rallybio agreed that, subject to certain exceptions in the Merger Agreement: (i) the Rallybio Board will recommend that the holders of Rallybio Common Stock vote to approve the Rallybio Stockholder Matters, the Authorized Share Increase Proposal, and the Equity Plan Proposals will use commercially reasonable efforts to solicit such approval within the timeframe set forth above, (ii) this proxy statement/prospectus will include a statement to the effect that the Rallybio Board recommends that Rallybio’s stockholders vote to approve the Rallybio Stockholder Matters, the Authorized Share Increase Proposal, and the Equity Plan Proposals (the recommendation of the Rallybio Board with respect to the Rallybio Stockholder Matters being referred to as the “Rallybio Board Recommendation”); (iii) the Rallybio Board Recommendation will not be withheld, amended, withdrawn or modified (and the Rallybio Board will not publicly propose to withhold, amend, withdraw or modify the Rallybio Board Recommendation), and no resolution by the Rallybio Board or any committee thereof to withdraw or modify the Rallybio Board Recommendation or to adopt, approve or recommend (or publicly propose to adopt, approve or recommend) any Acquisition Proposal shall be adopted or proposed; and (iv) the Rallybio Board will not publicly announce an intention or resolution to effect any of the foregoing (the actions set forth in the foregoing clause (iii), collectively, a “Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change”).

The terms of the Merger Agreement provide that, subject to the limitations set forth in the Merger Agreement, if at any time prior to the approval of the Rallybio Stockholder Matters at the Rallybio stockholder meeting by the Required Rallybio Stockholder Vote, Rallybio receives a bona fide Acquisition Proposal (which did not arise out of a material breach of the non-solicitation provisions of the Merger Agreement) from any person that has not been withdrawn and after consultation with outside legal counsel, the Rallybio Board determines, in good faith, that such Acquisition Proposal is a Superior Offer, the Rallybio Board may make a Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change if and only if: (A) the Rallybio Board determines in good faith, after consultation with Rallybio’s outside legal counsel and financial advisor, that the failure to do so would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of the Rallybio Board to Rallybio’s stockholders under applicable law; (B) Rallybio has given Candid prior written notice of its intention to consider making a Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change at least four business days prior to making any such Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change (a “Rallybio Determination Notice,” and such period, the “Rallybio Notice Period”) (which notice will not constitute a Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change); and (C)(1) Rallybio provided to Candid a description in reasonable detail of the reasons for such Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change (as defined in the Merger Agreement), the identity of the party making the Acquisition Proposal, a summary of the material terms and conditions of the Acquisition Proposal and written copies of any relevant proposed transaction documents (including with respect to financing arrangements) in accordance with the Merger Agreement, (2) Rallybio has given Candid the three business days after a Rallybio Determination Notice to propose revisions to the terms of the Merger Agreement or make another proposal and has made its representatives reasonably available to negotiate in good faith with Candid (to the extent Candid desires to negotiate) with respect to such proposed revisions or other proposal, if any, and (3) after considering the results of any such negotiations and giving effect to the proposals made by Candid, if any, after consultation with outside legal counsel, the Rallybio Board determines, in good faith, that such Acquisition Proposal is a Superior Offer and that the failure to make the Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of the Rallybio Board to Rallybio’s stockholders under applicable law; provided that during any Rallybio Notice Period, Candid shall be entitled to deliver to Rallybio one or more counterproposals to such Acquisition Proposal and Rallybio will, and will cause its representatives to, negotiate with Candid in good faith (to the extent Candid desires to negotiate) to enable Candid to propose in writing an offer binding on Candid to effect such adjustments to the terms and conditions of the Merger Agreement so that the applicable Acquisition Proposal ceases to constitute a Superior Offer. The provisions of the Merger Agreement described in this paragraph also apply to any material change to the facts and circumstances relating to such Acquisition Proposal or any amendment to such Acquisition Proposal (including any revision in the amount, form or mix of consideration), and require a new Rallybio Determination Notice and Rallybio will be required to provide Candid with notice of such material change or amendment, except that the references to four business days will be deemed to be two business days.

The terms of the Merger Agreement also provide that, other than in connection with an Acquisition Proposal, the Rallybio Board may make a Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change in response to a Rallybio Change in Circumstance (as defined below), if and only if: (A) the Rallybio Board determines in good faith, after consultation with the Rallybio's outside legal counsel, that the failure to do so would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of the Rallybio Board to Rallybio's stockholders under applicable law; (B) Rallybio has given Candid a Rallybio Determination Notice at least four business days prior to making any such Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change; and (C) (1) Rallybio has specified the Rallybio Change in Circumstance in reasonable detail, including the material facts and circumstances related to the applicable Rallybio Change in Circumstance, (2) Rallybio has given Candid three business days after the Rallybio Determination Notice to propose revisions to the terms of the Merger Agreement or make another proposal, and has made its representatives reasonably available to negotiate in good faith with Candid (to the extent Candid desires to do so) with respect to such proposed revisions or other proposal, if any, and (3) after considering the results of any such negotiations and giving effect to the proposals made by Candid, if any, after consultation with outside legal counsel, the Rallybio Board determines, in good faith, that the failure to make the Rallybio Board Adverse Recommendation Change in response to such Rallybio Change in Circumstance would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of the Rallybio Board to Rallybio's stockholders under applicable law. The provisions of the Merger Agreement described in this paragraph also apply to any material change to the facts and circumstances relating to such Rallybio Change in Circumstance and require a new Rallybio Determination Notice and Rallybio will be required to provide Candid with notice of such material change, except that the references to four business days will be deemed to be two business days.

"Rallybio Change in Circumstance" means a change in circumstances (other than any such event, development or change to the extent related to (A) any Acquisition Proposal, Acquisition Inquiry or the consequences thereof, or (B) the fact, in and of itself, that Rallybio meets or exceeds internal budgets, plans or forecasts of its revenues, earnings or other financial performance or results of operations) that affects the business, assets or operations of Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries that occurs or arises after the date of the Merger Agreement.

Candid Stockholder Action by Written Consent

The Merger Agreement contemplates that promptly after this registration statement is declared effective under the Securities Act, and in any event no later than three business days thereafter, Candid will prepare, with the cooperation of Rallybio, and cause to be delivered to its stockholders an information statement to solicit the approval by written consent from the Candid Signatories, including Candid's stockholders sufficient for the Required Candid Stockholder Vote in lieu of a meeting pursuant to Section 228 of the DGCL, for purposes of approving the Candid Stockholder Matters.

Candid agreed that: (i) the Candid Board will recommend that the Candid stockholders vote to approve the Candid Stockholder Matters and will use reasonable best efforts to solicit such approval from Candid's stockholders within the timeframe set forth above (the recommendation of the Candid Board that Candid's stockholders vote to adopt and approve the Candid Stockholder Matters being referred to as the "Candid Board Recommendation"); and (ii) the Candid Board Recommendation will not be withdrawn or modified (and the Candid Board will not publicly propose to withdraw or modify the Candid Board Recommendation), and no resolution by the Candid Board or any committee thereof to withdraw or modify the Candid Board Recommendation or to adopt, approve or recommend (or publicly propose to adopt, approve or recommend) any Acquisition Proposal will be adopted or proposed (the actions set forth in the foregoing clause (ii), if taken, constituting, in each case, a "Candid Board Adverse Recommendation Change").

Notwithstanding the foregoing, if at any time prior to the approval of Candid Stockholder Matters:

- If Candid has received a bona fide Acquisition Proposal (which Acquisition Proposal did not arise out of a material breach of Section 4.5 of the Merger Agreement) from any person that has not been withdrawn and after consultation with outside legal counsel, Candid Board shall have determined, in good faith, that such Acquisition Proposal is a Superior Offer, Candid Board may make a Candid Board Adverse Recommendation Change if and only if: (A) Candid Board determines in good faith, after consultation with Candid's outside legal counsel and financial advisor, that the failure to do so would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of Candid Board to Candid's stockholders under applicable law; (B) Candid shall have given Rallybio prior written notice of its intention to consider making a Candid Board Adverse Recommendation Change at least four Business Days prior to making any such Candid Board Adverse Recommendation Change (a "Candid Determination Notice"; and such period the "Candid Notice Period") (which notice shall not constitute a Candid Board Adverse Recommendation Change); and (C) (1) Candid shall have provided to Rallybio a description in reasonable detail of the reasons for such Candid Board Adverse Recommendation Change the identity of the party making the Acquisition Proposal, a summary of the material terms and conditions of the Acquisition Proposal and written copies of any relevant proposed transaction documents (including with respect to financing arrangements), in accordance with Section 4.5(b), (2) Candid shall have given Rallybio the three business days after Candid Determination Notice to propose revisions to the terms of the Merger Agreement or make another proposal and shall have made its representatives reasonably available to negotiate in good faith with Rallybio (to the extent Rallybio desires to negotiate) with respect to such proposed revisions or other proposal, if any, and (3) after considering the results of any such negotiations and giving effect to the proposals made by Rallybio, if any, after consultation with outside legal counsel, Candid Board shall have determined, in good faith, that such Acquisition Proposal is a Superior Offer and that the failure to make Candid Board Adverse Recommendation Change would be inconsistent with the fiduciary duties of Candid Board to Candid's stockholders under applicable law; provided during any Candid Notice Period, Rallybio shall be entitled to deliver to Candid one or more counterproposals to such Acquisition Proposal and Candid will, and cause its representatives to, negotiate with Rallybio in good faith (to the extent Rallybio desires to negotiate) to enable Rallybio to propose in writing an offer binding on Rallybio to effect such adjustments to the terms and conditions of the Merger Agreement so that the applicable Acquisition Proposal ceases to constitute a Superior Offer. For the avoidance of doubt, the provisions of this Section 5.2(e)(i) shall also apply to any material change to the facts and circumstances relating to such Acquisition Proposal or any amendment to such Acquisition Proposal (including any revision in the amount, form or mix of consideration), and require a new Candid Determination Notice and Candid shall be required to provide Rallybio with notice of such material change or amendment, except that the references to four business days shall be deemed to be two business days.

If the Merger Agreement is terminated pursuant to clauses (e), (f) or (i) above or in the event of the failure of Candid to consummate the transactions to be contemplated at the Closing solely as a result of a Rallybio Material Adverse Effect (provided, that at such time all other conditions precedent to Rallybio's obligation to close set forth in the Merger Agreement have been satisfied by Candid, are capable of being satisfied by Candid or have been waived by Rallybio), then Rallybio will also reimburse Candid for all reasonable out-of-pocket fees and expenses incurred by Candid in connection with the Merger Agreement and the Contemplated Transactions, up to a maximum of $500,000, by wire transfer of same-day funds within ten business days following the date on which Candid submits to Rallybio true and correct copies of reasonable documentation supporting such expenses; provided, however, that such expenses shall not include any amounts for financial advisors to Candid except for reasonably documented out-of-pocket expenses otherwise reimbursable by Candid to such financial advisors pursuant to the terms of Candid's engagement letter or similar arrangement with such financial advisors. Other Agreements

Director Indemnification and Insurance

The Merger Agreement provides that, subject to certain limitations as set forth in the Merger Agreement, from the Effective Time through the sixth anniversary of the date on which the Effective Time occurs, Rallybio and the surviving company will indemnify each person who is, has been at any time prior to the date of the Merger Agreement, or who becomes prior to the Effective Time, a director, officer, fiduciary or agent of Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries or Candid, in each case, to the fullest extent permitted by such party's organizational documents or pursuant to indemnification agreements made available to Candid. Each such person will be entitled to advancement of expenses incurred in the defense of any such claim, action, suit, proceeding or investigation; provided that any such person to whom expenses are advanced provides an undertaking to Rallybio, to the extent then required by the DGCL, to repay such advances if it is ultimately determined that such person is not entitled to indemnification.

The Merger Agreement also provides that the provisions relating to the indemnification, advancement of expenses and exculpation of present and former directors and officers of Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries set forth in the organizational documents of Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries will not be amended, modified or repealed for a period of six years from the Effective Time in any manner that would adversely affect the rights of individuals who, at or prior to the Effective Time, were officers or directors of Rallybio or any of its subsidiaries, unless required by applicable law. After the Closing, the organizational documents of the surviving corporation will contain provisions no less favorable with respect to the provisions relating to the indemnification, advancement of expenses and exculpation of present and former directors and officers presently set forth in Candid's organizational documents as of the date of the Merger Agreement. Rallybio has agreed to purchase a six year "tail policy" for the non-cancellable extension of Rallybio's existing directors' and officers' liability insurance policies and Rallybio's and any of its subsidiaries' existing directors' and officers' insurance policies and Rallybio's existing fiduciary liability insurance policies (if any), in each case, for a claims reporting or discovery period of at least six years from and after the Effective Time with respect to any claim related to any period of time at or prior to the Effective Time.

- (e) cause its subsidiaries and affiliates not to, acquire or agree to acquire any rights, interests, assets, business, person or division thereof (whether through acquisition, license, joint venture, collaboration or otherwise), or take any other actions, if such acquisition or action would reasonably be expected to (i) prevent, materially delay, or adversely affect in any material respect the ability of the parties to consummate the any of the Contemplated Transactions, or (ii) result in any party being required to obtain any clearance, consent, approval, waiver, waiting period expiration or termination, non-action or other authorization under any Laws with respect to any of the Contemplated Transactions.

"Transaction Expenses" means, with respect to each party, all fees and expenses incurred by such party at or prior to the Effective Time in connection with the Contemplated Transactions and the Merger Agreement, including (a) any fees and expenses of legal counsel and accountants and the maximum amount of fees and expenses payable to financial advisors, investment bankers, brokers, consultants, and other advisors of such party; (b) fees paid to the SEC in connection with filing the registration statement, the Proxy Statement, and any amendments and supplements thereto, with the SEC; (c) any fees and expenses in connection with the printing, mailing and distribution of the Proxy Statement and registration statement and any amendments and supplements thereto; (d) any fees and expenses payable to Nasdaq; and (e) any fees and expenses of the Rights Agent and the Exchange Agent.

Amendment of Merger Agreement

The Merger Agreement may be amended by the parties at any time with the written approval of Candid, Merger Sub and Rallybio, except that after the Merger Agreement has been adopted and approved by a party's stockholders, no amendment which by law requires further approval by the stockholders of that party will be made without such further stockholder approval.

AGREEMENTS RELATED TO THE MERGER

Support Agreements

Concurrently with the execution of the Merger Agreement, the executive officers and directors and certain other stockholders of Rallybio holding approximately 24.8% of the outstanding Rallybio capital stock as of March 1, 2026 entered into the Rallybio support agreements in favor of Candid, providing among other things, that such officers, directors and stockholders (x) will vote all of their shares of Rallybio capital stock, among other things: (i) in favor of approving the Contemplated Transactions, including the Rallybio Stockholder Matters, the Authorized Share Increase Proposal and the other actions contemplated by the Merger Agreement, (ii) against any proposal made in opposition to, or in competition with, the Merger Agreement or the Merger and (iii) against any acquisition proposal involving a third party and (y) will not solicit or negotiate alternative acquisition proposal or inquiries in their capacities as stockholders of Rallybio.

Concurrently with the execution of the Merger Agreement, certain officers, directors and stockholders of Candid holding approximately 66.14% of the outstanding Candid Capital Stock as of March 1, 2026 entered into the Candid support agreements in favor of Rallybio, providing among other things, that such executive officers, directors and stockholders (x) will vote all of their shares of Candid Capital Stock, among other things: (i) in favor of adopting the Merger Agreement and approving the Merger, the other Contemplated Transactions, the Candid Stockholder Matters (as defined in the Merger Agreement) and the other actions contemplated by the Merger Agreement, (ii) against any proposal made in opposition to, or in competition with, the Merger Agreement or the Merger and (iii) against any acquisition proposal involving a third party and (y) will not solicit or negotiate alternative acquisition proposal or inquiries in their capacities as stockholders of Candid.

Lock-Up Agreements

Concurrently with the execution of the Merger Agreement, certain executive officers, directors and stockholders of Candid holding approximately 66.21% of the outstanding shares of Candid Capital Stock as of March 1, 2026 entered into the Lock-Up Agreements, pursuant to which, subject to specified exceptions, such persons accepted certain restrictions on transfers of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock beneficially held by such persons or such persons' family members (other than shares received as a result of the conversion of shares received in the Concurrent Financing) for the 180-day period following the Effective Time.

Subscription Agreement

Concurrently with the execution and delivery of the Merger Agreement, certain new and existing investors of Candid entered into the Subscription Agreement with Candid, pursuant to which such investors have agreed to purchase, immediately prior to the Merger, shares of Candid Common Stock representing an aggregate commitment of approximately $505.5 million in the Concurrent Financing. Under the Subscription Agreement, the number of shares of Candid Common Stock shall be determined at a purchase price per share equal to (i) a fixed valuation for Candid equal to approximately $750.0 million, (ii) divided by the number of shares of Candid Common Stock outstanding immediately prior to the Effective Time (excluding the securities being issued under the Subscription Agreement).

The shares of Candid Common Stock that are issued in the Concurrent Financing will be or will have the right to be, respectively, converted into shares of Rallybio Common Stock in the Merger. Accordingly, by approving Proposal No. 1 relating to the Merger, Rallybio stockholders will also be approving the issuance of shares of Rallybio Common Stock to be issued in exchange for all shares of Candid Common Stock that are sold in the Concurrent Financing.

The Subscription Agreement contains customary representations and warranties of Candid and also contains customary representations and warranties of the purchaser parties thereto.

Each purchaser's obligation to purchase shares of Candid Common Stock from Candid pursuant to the Subscription Agreement is subject to the satisfaction or waiver of certain conditions, including:

- Candid's representations and warranties in the Subscription Agreement being true and correct in all respects as of the effective date of the Subscription Agreement and true and correct in all material respects as of the closing date for the Concurrent Financing, subject to certain exceptions;

- Candid having performed and complied in all material respects with the obligations and conditions required to be performed or complied with by it;
- the issuance of a compliance certificate by an authorized officer of Candid;
- all consents, permits, approvals, qualifications, registrations and waivers necessary for the consummation of the purchase and sale of the securities under the Subscription Agreement having been obtained and in full force and effect;
- the issuance of a secretary's certificate by the secretary of Candid;
- the satisfaction or waiver of all conditions to the Closing set forth in the Merger Agreement (other than the condition regarding the Concurrent Financing and other than those conditions which, by their nature, are to be satisfied at the Closing of the transactions contemplated by the Merger), the Closing being set to occur substantially concurrently with the closing of the Concurrent Financing, and the Merger Agreement not having been amended, modified or waived in a manner that would reasonably be expected to materially and adversely affect the benefits that the purchasers would reasonably expect to receive pursuant to the Subscription Agreement;
- no injunction having been issued prohibiting the consummation of the Concurrent Financing;
- Candid having delivered the Registration Rights Agreement required by the Subscription Agreement;
- the registration statement of which this proxy statement/prospectus forms a part shall have become effective under the Securities Act, no stop order shall be suspending the effectiveness of the registration statement of which this proxy statement/prospectus forms a part and no proceeding for that purpose shall have been initiated or threatened in writing by the SEC;
- the Nasdaq Listing Application shall have been approved by Nasdaq;
- no material adverse effect shall have occurred that is continuing, since the date of the Subscription Agreement;
- Candid having received at Closing aggregate proceeds from the purchase of securities pursuant to the Subscription Agreement of not less than $450.0 million; and
- an opinion from Candid counsel, dated as of the Closing.

Candid's obligation to sell shares of Candid Common Stock to each purchaser pursuant to the Subscription Agreement is subject to the satisfaction or waiver of certain conditions, including:

- the representations and warranties made by the purchasers being true and correct as of the effective date of the Subscription Agreement and true and correct in all material respects as of the closing date of the Concurrent Financing, subject to certain exceptions;
- each purchaser having performed and complied with all obligations and conditions required to be performed or complied with by each purchaser;
- each purchaser having obtained all registrations, qualifications, permits and approvals, if any, required under applicable securities laws;
- the satisfaction or waiver of all conditions to the Closing set forth in the Merger Agreement (other than the condition regarding the Concurrent Financing and other than those conditions which, by their nature, are to be satisfied at the Closing of the transactions contemplated by the Merger) and the Closing being set to occur substantially concurrently with the closing of the Concurrent Financing;
- Candid having received payment in full from each purchaser as required by the Subscription Agreement, subject to certain exceptions; and
- no injunction having been issued prohibiting the consummation of the Concurrent Financing.

The Subscription Agreement may be changed, waived, amended or modified only by a written instrument executed by Candid and the purchasers holding, or having the right to purchase at the closing of the Concurrent Financing, a majority of the shares purchased or to be purchased in the Concurrent Financing, which must include each purchaser who has purchased or committed to purchase at least $25.0 million of shares of Candid Common Stock (the "Purchaser Majority"), subject to certain exceptions. The Subscription Agreement may be terminated upon the earlier to occur of (i) such date and time that the Merger Agreement is terminated in accordance with its terms,

(ii) upon the mutual written agreement of Candid and an applicable purchaser (provided such termination will not otherwise apply to other purchasers), (iii) by Candid, if on the closing date of the Concurrent Financing, any of the closing conditions of the purchasers have not been satisfied or waived, and, as a result thereof, the transactions contemplated by the Subscription Agreement are not consummated, (iv) by a purchaser, if on the closing date of the Concurrent Financing, any of the closing conditions of Candid have not been satisfied or waived, and, as a result thereof, the transactions contemplated by the Subscription Agreement are not consummated and (v) if the closing of the Concurrent Financing has not occurred by September 1, 2026 (or November 1, 2026 if the End Date is automatically extended pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement).

The foregoing description of the Subscription Agreement does not purport to be complete and is qualified in its entirety by the full text of the form of Subscription Agreement, which is attached hereto as Annex G.

Registration Rights Agreement

The Subscription Agreement contemplates Rallybio, Candid and the purchasers participating in the Concurrent Financing entering into the Registration Rights Agreement at the closing of the Concurrent Financing, pursuant to which, among other things, the combined company will agree to provide for the registration and resale of certain shares of Candid Common Stock that are held by the purchasers participating in the Concurrent Financing from time to time, including certain shares of Rallybio Common Stock issued in exchange for shares of Candid Common Stock sold in the Concurrent Financing.

Pursuant to the Registration Rights Agreement, the combined company will agree to prepare and file a resale registration statement covering the resale of certain shares of Rallybio Common Stock within 30 calendar days of the Closing pursuant to Rule 415 and to use its commercially reasonable efforts to keep such registration statement continuously effective under the Securities Act until the earlier of (a) the date that all registrable securities covered by such registration statement (i) have been sold thereunder or pursuant to Rule 144, or (ii) may be sold without volume or manner-of-sale restrictions pursuant to Rule 144 and without the requirement for the combined company to be in compliance with the current public information requirement under Rule 144, and (b) five years after the date of the Registration Rights Agreement.

The Registration Rights Agreement also provides that the combined company will pay certain expenses relating to such registrations and indemnify the applicable securityholders against certain liabilities. The form of Registration Rights Agreement is filed as Annex H to the registration statement of which this proxy statement/prospectus is a part, and the foregoing description of the Registration Rights Agreement is qualified in its entirety by reference thereto.

Rallybio Contingent Value Rights Agreement

Prior to the Effective Time, Rallybio and the designated rights agent are expected to enter into the Rallybio CVR Agreement, pursuant to which holders of Rallybio Common Stock, pre-funded warrants, restricted stock units and in the money stock options as of the close of business on the last business day prior to the day on which the Effective Time occurs will receive one Rallybio CVR for each outstanding share, or share underlying such pre-funded warrants or equity award, held by such holder. Each Rallybio CVR holder will be entitled to receive on a pro rata basis all of the proceeds received, if any, by Rallybio as a result of payment of (i) any upfront, milestone, or royalty payments received under any disposition agreement related to the Legacy Assets (as defined below), and (ii) any cash proceeds received from Recursion related to the earlier sale of Rallybio's REV102 in July 2025, in each case, net of certain permitted deductions as set forth in the Rallybio CVR Agreement (collectively, the "Net Proceeds"). For a period of one year after the Closing, the combined company will use commercially reasonable efforts to effect the disposition of the Legacy Assets.

"Legacy Assets" means Rallybio's rights, assets, technology and intellectual property that were in existence immediately prior to the execution of the Merger Agreement and were used or generated prior to such execution in one or more of Rallybio's research and development programs. For clarity, the Legacy Assets shall not include any asset, technology or intellectual property owned or controlled by Candid or its subsidiaries prior to the Closing.

Pursuant to the Rallybio CVR Agreement, each Rallybio CVR holder will be entitled to certain rights to receive a cash payment equal to such holder's pro rata share of 100% of the Net Proceeds actually received by Rallybio during an annual period (or portion thereof) beginning on the effective date of the Rallybio CVR Agreement and ending on December 31 of any given calendar year (a "Rallybio CVR Payment") during the period beginning on the Closing and ending on December 31, 2030 (each such annual period, a "CVR Payment Period"). Such proceeds are subject to certain permitted deductions, including for applicable tax payments, certain expenses incurred by Rallybio or its affiliates, losses incurred or reasonably expected to be incurred by Rallybio or its affiliates due to third-party claims, demands, actions, or other proceedings relating to or in connection with any disposition, any liabilities borne by Rallybio or any of its affiliates pursuant to contracts related to Legacy Assets and any amounts payable to the designated rights agent.

The Rallybio CVR Payments, if any, will become payable to the designated rights agent for subsequent distribution to the Rallybio CVR holders. In the event that no such proceeds are received during a CVR Payment Period, holders of the Rallybio CVRs will not receive any payment pursuant to the Rallybio CVR Agreement for such CVR Payment Period. There can be no assurance that any Rallybio CVR holders will receive any Rallybio CVR Payments.

The right to the contingent payments contemplated by the Rallybio CVR Agreement is a contractual right only and is not transferable, except in the limited circumstances specified in the Rallybio CVR Agreement. The Rallybio CVRs are not evidenced by a certificate or any other instrument and are not registered with SEC. The Rallybio CVRs do not have any voting or dividend rights and do not represent any equity or ownership interest in Rallybio or any of its respective affiliates. No interest will accrue on any amounts payable in respect of the Rallybio CVRs.

Material U.S. Federal Income Tax Consequences of the Rallybio CVRs to holders of Rallybio Common Stock.

The following is a discussion of the material U.S. federal income tax consequences of the issuance of the Rallybio CVRs and payments (if any) thereon to U.S. holders of Rallybio Common Stock. This discussion does not purport to be a complete analysis of all potential tax consequences and is based upon current provisions of the Code, existing Treasury regulations, judicial decisions and published rulings and administrative pronouncements of the IRS, all in effect as of the date hereof and all of which are subject to differing interpretations or change. Any such change or differing interpretation, which may be retroactive, could alter the tax consequences to holders of Rallybio Common Stock as described in this summary.

This discussion does not address all U.S. federal income tax consequences relevant to U.S. holders of Rallybio Common Stock. In addition, it does not address consequences relevant to holders of Rallybio Common Stock that are subject to particular U.S. or non-U.S. tax rules, including, without limitation, to holders of Rallybio Common Stock that are:

- persons who do not hold their Rallybio Common Stock as a "capital asset" within the meaning of Section 1221 of the Code;
- brokers, dealers or traders in securities, banks, insurance companies, other financial institutions or mutual funds;
- real estate investment trusts; regulated investment companies; tax-exempt organizations or governmental organizations;
- pass-through entities such as partnerships, S corporations, disregarded entities for federal income tax purposes and limited liability companies (and investors therein);
- subject to the alternative minimum tax provisions of the Code;
- persons who hold their shares as part of a hedge, wash sale, synthetic security, conversion transaction or other integrated transaction;
- persons that have a functional currency other than the U.S. dollar;
- traders in securities who elect to apply a mark-to-market method of accounting;
- persons who hold shares of Rallybio Common Stock that may constitute "qualified small business stock" under Section 1202 of the Code or as "Section 1244 stock" for purposes of Section 1244 of the Code;
- persons who acquired their shares of Rallybio stock in a transaction subject to the gain rollover provisions of Section 1045 of the Code;

- persons subject to special tax accounting rules as a result of any item of gross income with respect to Rallybio stock being taken into account in an “applicable financial statement” (as defined in the Code);
- persons deemed to sell Rallybio Common Stock under the constructive sale provisions of the Code;
- persons who acquired their shares of Rallybio Common Stock pursuant to the exercise of options or otherwise as compensation or through a tax-qualified retirement plan or through the exercise of a warrant or conversion rights under convertible instruments; and
- expatriates or former citizens or long-term residents of the United States.

U.S. Holders of Rallybio Common Stock subject to particular U.S. or non-U.S. tax rules, including those that are described in the preceding paragraph, are urged to consult their own tax advisors regarding the consequences to them of Rallybio CVRs.

If an entity that is treated as a partnership for U.S. federal income tax purposes (or any other pass-through entity) holds Rallybio Common Stock, the U.S. federal income tax treatment of a partner in the partnership or other pass-through entity will generally depend upon the status of the partner, the activities of the partnership or other pass-through entity and certain determinations made at the partner level. If you are a partner of a partnership or other pass-through entity holding Rallybio Common Stock, you should consult your tax advisors regarding the tax consequences of the Merger.

STOCKHOLDERS SHOULD CONSULT THEIR TAX ADVISORS WITH RESPECT TO THE APPLICATION OF THE U.S. FEDERAL INCOME TAX LAWS TO THEIR PARTICULAR SITUATIONS AS WELL AS ANY TAX CONSEQUENCES OF THE CVRS ARISING UNDER THE U.S. FEDERAL ESTATE OR GIFT TAX LAWS OR UNDER THE LAWS OF ANY STATE, LOCAL OR NON-U.S. TAXING JURISDICTION OR UNDER ANY APPLICABLE INCOME TAX TREATY.

Definition of “U.S. Holder”

For purposes of this discussion, a “U.S. holder” is a beneficial owner of Rallybio Common Stock that is, for U.S. federal income tax purposes:

- an individual who is a citizen or resident of the United States;
- a corporation or any other entity taxable as a corporation created or organized in or under the laws of the United States, any state thereof, or the District of Columbia;
- a trust if either (i) a court within the United States is able to exercise primary supervision over the administration of such trust, and one or more United States persons (within the meaning of Section 7701(a)(30) of the Code) is authorized or has the authority to control all substantial decisions of such trust, or (ii) the trust was in existence on August 20, 1996 and has a valid election in effect under applicable Treasury Regulations to be treated as a United States person for U.S. federal income tax purposes; or
- an estate, the income of which is subject to U.S. federal income tax regardless of its source.

Tax Treatment of the Rallybio CVRs and the Proposed Reverse Stock Split

Although the matter is not free from doubt, Rallybio intends to treat the issuance of the CVRs (together with any payments on the CVRs) and the proposed Reverse Stock Split as separate transactions for U.S. federal income tax purposes, and the following discussion (except as discussed below under “Alternative Treatment of the CVRs and the Reverse Stock Split as a Single Recapitalization”) assumes this treatment will be respected. The IRS could challenge this position, however. Rallybio urges you to consult your tax advisor with respect to whether the issuance of the CVRs (and any payments on the CVRs), on the one hand, and the proposed Reverse Stock Split, on the other, constitute separate transactions.

Tax Treatment of the CVRs to U.S. holders of Rallybio Common Stock

There is no authority directly on point addressing whether contingent value rights with characteristics similar to the CVRs should be treated for federal income tax purposes as a distribution of property with respect to Rallybio Common Stock, an “open transaction,” or in some other manner, and such questions are inherently factual in nature. Accordingly, holders are urged to consult with their tax advisors regarding this issue.

Rallybio intends to report the issuance of the CVRs as a distribution of property with respect to its stock consistent with “closed transaction” treatment. Rallybio’s views and actions (and the fair market value figure ascribed to the CVRs) are not dispositive with respect to the tax treatment or fair market value of the CVRs and are not binding on the IRS as to a U.S. holder's tax treatment of the receipt of CVRs or the fair market value of the CVRs. The IRS and Treasury Department have expressly stated in Treasury Regulations that only in "rare and extraordinary cases" is the value of property so uncertain that "open transaction" treatment is available. Here, Rallybio has determined that the value of the CVRs on the Closing Date can be reasonably ascertained and, as a result, Rallybio intends to report the issuance of the CVRs as a distribution of property with respect to its stock consistent with "closed transaction" treatment.

The following sections discuss the U.S. federal income tax consequences of the CVRs if treated as a closed transaction or, alternatively, as an open transaction. It is also possible that the issuance of the CVRs could be treated as one or more "debt instruments" or as a distribution of equity. Rallybio U.S. holders are urged to consult their tax advisors regarding the tax consequences to them of the receipt of CVRs and payments on the CVRs.

Closed Transaction Treatment.

If treated as a closed transaction, each Rallybio U.S. holder will be treated as receiving a distribution in an amount equal to the fair market value of the CVR issued to such Rallybio U.S. holder on the date of the issuance. This distribution generally should be treated first as a taxable dividend to the extent of the Rallybio U.S. holder's pro rata share of Rallybio's current or accumulated earnings and profits (as determined for U.S. federal income tax purposes), then as a non-taxable return of capital to the extent of the Rallybio U.S. holder's basis in its Rallybio Common Stock, and finally as capital gain from the sale or exchange of Rallybio Common Stock with respect to any remaining value. Rallybio U.S. holders will receive a Form 1099-DIV notifying them of the portion of the CVR value that is reported by Rallybio as a dividend for U.S. federal income tax purposes. Although Rallybio will estimate the value of the CVRs for purposes of reporting on Form 1099-DIV to Rallybio U.S. holders, the value of the CVRs is uncertain and the IRS or a court could determine that the value of the CVRs at the time of issuance was higher. In such case, the Rallybio U.S. holders could be treated as having additional income or gain upon receipt of the CVRs as described above. A Rallybio U.S. holder's initial tax basis in such holder's CVR should equal the fair market value of such CVR on the date of their issuance. The holding period of such CVR should begin on the date of issuance.

The treatment of future payments received by a Rallybio U.S. holder on a CVR is uncertain. It is possible that payments received with respect to a CVR up to the amount of the Rallybio U.S. holder's adjusted tax basis in the CVR, may be treated as a non-taxable return of a Rallybio U.S. holder's adjusted tax basis in the CVR, with any amount received in excess of such basis treated as gain from the disposition of the CVR. Rallybio intends to treat any payment made in respect of a CVR in a manner consistent with the foregoing, but Rallybio's position is not dispositive with respect to the tax treatment of such payments and is not binding on the IRS. Assuming that this method of reporting is correct, the gain will be long-term capital gain if the Rallybio U.S. holder has held the CVR for more than one year at the time of such payment. Payments with respect to a CVR could alternatively be treated as ordinary income. Rallybio U.S. holders are urged to consult their tax advisors regarding the characterization of payments received with respect to the CVRs.

Open Transaction Treatment.

If the issuance of the CVRs is treated as an open transaction, (because, for example, the value of the CVRs on the closing date cannot be "reasonably ascertained"), a Rallybio U.S. holder should not immediately take the CVRs into account in determining whether such holder must recognize income, if any, on the receipt of the CVRs and such holder would take no tax basis in the CVRs. Rather, the Rallybio U.S. holder's U.S. federal income tax consequences would be determined at the time future payments, if any, with respect to the CVRs are received or deemed received, based on whether the CVRs are treated as a distribution of property or of equity, in accordance with the Rallybio U.S. holder's regular method of accounting. As discussed above, Rallybio does not intend to report the issuance of the CVRs as an open transaction and the IRS may disagree with any Rallybio U.S. holder reporting the CVR issuance as an open transaction.

Alternative Treatment of the CVRs and the Proposed Reverse Stock Split as a Single Recapitalization

Notwithstanding Rallybio's position that the CVRs and the proposed Reverse Stock Split are appropriately treated as separate transactions, it is possible that the IRS or a court could determine that the issuance of the CVRs (and/or any payments thereon) and the proposed Reverse Stock Split constitute a single "recapitalization" for U.S. federal income tax purposes with the CVRs constituting taxable "boot" received in such recapitalization exchange. In such case, the tax consequences of the CVRs and the proposed Reverse Stock Split would differ from those described above, including the timing and character of income, which would depend in part on many of the same considerations described above.

Director Independence

Under the rules of the Nasdaq Stock Market, independent directors must comprise a majority of a listed company’s board of directors. In addition, the rules of the Nasdaq Stock Market require that, subject to specified exceptions, each member of a listed company’s audit and compensation committees be independent and that director nominees be selected or recommended for the board’s selection by independent directors constituting a majority of the independent directors or by a nominating and corporate governance committee comprised solely of independent directors. Under the rules of the Nasdaq Stock Market, a director will only qualify as “independent” if, in the opinion of that company’s board of directors, that person does not have a relationship that would interfere with the exercise of independent judgment in carrying out the responsibilities of a director and that such person is “independent” as defined under Nasdaq Stock Market and the rules under the Exchange Act.

Audit committee members must also satisfy the independence criteria set forth in Rule 10A-3 under the Exchange Act. In order to be considered independent for purposes of Rule 10A-3, a member of an audit committee of a listed company may not, other than in his or her capacity as a member of the audit committee, the board of directors or any other board committee: (1) accept, directly or indirectly, any consulting, advisory or other compensatory fee from the listed company or any of its subsidiaries or (2) be an affiliated person of the listed company or any of its subsidiaries.

Based upon information requested from and provided by each director concerning his or her background, employment and affiliations, including family relationships, our Board has determined that each of our directors, with the exception of Drs. Mackay and Uden, is an “independent director” as defined under applicable rules of the Nasdaq Stock Market. In addition, all members of our audit committee satisfy the independence criteria set forth in Rule 10A-3 under the Exchange Act, and all members of our Compensation Committee satisfy the independence criteria set forth in Rule 10C-1 under the Exchange Act and are “non-employee directors” as defined in Section 16b-3 of the Exchange Act, and all members of the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee are “independent” as defined under the applicable listing standards of Nasdaq. In making such determination, our Board considered the relationships that each such non-employee director has with our Company and all other facts and circumstances that our Board deemed relevant in determining his or her independence, including the beneficial ownership of our capital stock by each non-employee director. Dr. Mackay is not independent under these rules because he is a former employee of the Company and is party to a consulting agreement with the Company. Dr. Uden is not an independent director under these rules because he is an employee of Rallybio.

Board Meetings and Attendance

The Rallybio Board held 22 meetings during the year ended December 31, 2025. Each of the directors attended at least seventy-five percent (75%) of the meetings of the Rallybio Board and the committees of the Rallybio Board on which he or she served during the year ended December 31, 2025 (in each case, which were held during the period for which he or she was a director and/or a member of the applicable committee and excluding any meetings in which a director was an interested party).

While we do not have a formal policy regarding director attendance at the annual meeting of stockholders, we expect our Rallybio Board members to prepare for, attend and participate in all Rallybio Board and applicable committee meetings, including by means of remote communication. All members of the Rallybio Board attended the 2025 Annual Meeting.

Board of Directors Leadership Structure

Dr. Mackay serves as Chairman of the Rallybio Board. From August 1, 2023 until December 31, 2024, Dr. Mackay served as Executive Chairman, and prior to August 1, 2023 served as Chief Executive Officer and Chairman.

In December 2023, the independent directors designated a Lead Director, which is a role that is similar to the role of an independent Chairman. Ms. Soteropoulos has served as Lead Director since December 2023. As set forth in Rallybio's Corporate Governance Guidelines, the Lead Director presides at meetings of the Board at which the Chairman, who is not currently independent, is not present, including executive sessions of our independent directors, serves as an independent point of contact for stockholders, and has other duties described in Rallybio's Corporate Governance Guidelines, which are available on our website.

The independent members of the Rallybio Board have periodically reviewed the Rallybio Board's leadership structure and have determined that Rallybio and its stockholders are well served with this structure. Dr. Mackay's former service as chief executive officer provides him with valuable insights into the Company's programs, operations, strategy and culture. In addition, Dr. Mackay serves on the board of directors of three public companies, and his corporate governance experience is incorporated into his leadership of the Rallybio Board. The Rallybio Board believes that it is in the best interests of Rallybio for the Rallybio Board to make a determination regarding whether or not to separate the roles of any chairperson and the Chief Executive Officer based on the then-current circumstances. Dr. Mackay has not served as Chief Executive Officer since August 2023.

Board Committees

The Rallybio Board has a standing Audit, Compensation and Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee. Each of our audit committee, Compensation Committee and Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee is comprised solely of independent directors, and is described more fully below. Each committee operates pursuant to a written charter and each reviews and assesses the adequacy of its charter periodically. The charters for each committee are all available on our website (www.rallybio.com) under the "Investors" section.

Audit Committee

Our audit committee is composed of Helen M. Boudreau, M.B.A., Robert Hopfner, R.Ph., Ph.D., M.B.A., Ronald Hunt, M.B.A., and Hui Liu, Ph.D., M.B.A., with Ms. Boudreau serving as Chair of the committee. The Rallybio Board has determined that each member of the audit committee meets the independence requirements of Rule 10A-3 under the Exchange Act and the applicable listing standards of Nasdaq. Pearl Meyer reports to the Compensation Committee and not to management, although Pearl Meyer meets with management for purposes of gathering information for its analyses and recommendations.

In determining to engage Pearl Meyer, the Compensation Committee considered the independence of Pearl Meyer, taking into consideration relevant factors, including the absence of other services provided to the Company by Pearl Meyer, the amount of fees the Company paid to Pearl Meyer as a percentage of Pearl Meyer's total revenue, the policies and procedures of Pearl Meyer that are designed to prevent conflicts of interest, any business or personal relationship of the individual compensation advisors employed by Pearl Meyer with any executive officer of the Company, any business or personal relationship the individual compensation advisors employed by Pearl Meyer have with any member of the Compensation Committee, and any stock of the Company owned by Pearl Meyer or the individual compensation advisors employed by Pearl Meyer. The Compensation Committee has determined, based on its analysis and in light of all relevant factors, including the factors listed above, that the work of Pearl Meyer and the individual compensation advisors employed by Pearl Meyer as compensation consultants to the Compensation Committee has not created any conflicts of interest, and that Pearl Meyer is independent pursuant to the independence standards set forth in the Nasdaq listing standards promulgated pursuant to Section 10C of the Exchange Act.

Overview

The Compensation Committee of our Board of Directors is responsible for determining the compensation of named executive officers.

The Compensation Committee has engaged Pearl Meyer, an independent compensation consulting firm, to assist it in evaluating the Company’s executive and director compensation practices, including program design, identification of an appropriate peer group for compensation comparison purposes and providing pay benchmarking data. The Compensation Committee has assessed the independence of Pearl Meyer from management and, on the basis of that assessment and taking into consideration the independence factors that are required to be considered under applicable stock exchange rules, determined that no relationships exist that would create a conflict of interest or that would compromise Pearl Meyer’s independence.

Agreements with our named executive officers

In August 2023, Dr. Uden entered into a second amended and restated employment agreement with the Company and our operating company subsidiary, Rallybio, LLC, which sets forth the terms and conditions of Dr. Uden's continued employment with us.

At the time of his commencement of employment, Mr. Lieber entered into an employment agreement with the Company and Rallybio, LLC, which sets forth the terms and conditions of Mr. Lieber's employment with us.

On June 25, 2025, we entered into an employment agreement with Dr. Ryder.

The material terms of the agreements are described below. The terms "cause," "good reason" and "change in control" referred to below are defined in the respective named executive officer's agreement.

The employment agreements for Dr. Uden, Mr. Lieber and Dr. Ryder provide for an initial annual base salary, subject to review for increase by our Board of Directors or the Compensation Committee. Each employment agreement also provides for a target annual bonus as a percentage of annual base salary, with the actual amount of the bonus payable based upon the achievement of performance goals as determined by our Board of Directors or the Compensation Committee.

Base Salaries

Effective January 1, 2025, the annual base salary of Dr. Uden was increased from $551,200 to $590,000. The Compensation Committee reviewed pay benchmarking data for the Company's peer group and for the position of Chief Executive Officer and President held by Dr. Uden, and recommended, and the Board of Directors approved, Dr. Uden's 2025 base salary of $590,000. The annual base salaries of Mr. Lieber and Dr. Ryder remained unchanged at $478,400 and $531,227, respectively, for fiscal year 2025.

Annual incentive bonuses

With respect to fiscal year 2025, each of our named executive officers was eligible to receive an annual bonus. For fiscal year 2025, the target bonus amount for Dr. Uden was 55% of his annual base salary. For fiscal year 2025, the target bonus amount for each of Mr. Lieber and Dr. Ryder was 40% of the named executive officer's annual base salary. Annual bonuses for fiscal year 2025 for our named executive officers were based on the attainment of pre-established corporate objectives as determined by the Compensation Committee and the Board of Directors. Following the end of fiscal year 2025, the Compensation Committee and the Board of Directors reviewed the Company's performance against these goals and determined that the performance goals for the named executive officers were achieved at 80% of target for Dr. Uden and Mr. Lieber and 95% of target for Dr. Ryder. Dr. Uden earned a bonus of $259,600, Mr. Lieber earned a bonus of $153,088 and Dr. Ryder earned a bonus of $201,866.

Severance upon termination of employment; change in control; restrictive covenants

Employment Agreements for Dr. Uden and Mr. Lieber. Each of Dr. Uden and Mr. Lieber is entitled to severance payments and benefits in connection with certain qualifying terminations of employment under his respective employment agreement. In connection with the Merger, on March 1, 2026, each of Dr. Uden and Mr. Lieber entered into an amendment to his respective employment agreement to clarify that the Merger will constitute a "change in control" for purposes of each executive's employment agreement. As a result, the enhanced change-in-control severance benefits described below will become payable in the event of a qualifying termination following the Closing. If the executive officer's employment is terminated by us without cause, or by him for good reason, or as a result of our non-extension of the employment term, he will be entitled to receive (i) any earned and payable, but unpaid, prior year annual bonus (or current year bonus if the termination occurs on the last day of the calendar year), (ii) continued payment of his annual base salary for a period of 12 months following termination and (iii) subject to his timely election of COBRA coverage, payment of a monthly amount equal to the monthly health premiums paid by us on behalf of the executive officer and his eligible dependents immediately prior to termination for 12 months following termination (or, if earlier, until such time as the executive officer ceases to be eligible for COBRA coverage or obtains health coverage from another employer). If the executive officer's employment is terminated by reason of his death or disability, he will be entitled to receive (i) any earned and payable, but unpaid, prior year annual bonus (or current year bonus if the termination occurs on the last day of the calendar year) and (ii) continued payment of his annual base salary for a period of six months following termination.

If the executive officer's employment is terminated by us without cause or by him for good reason, or as a result of our non-extension of the employment term, in each case within the 12-month period following a change in control, which includes the Merger, in lieu of the severance payments and benefits described above, he will be entitled to receive (i) any earned and payable, but unpaid, prior year annual bonus (or current year bonus if the termination occurs on the last day of the calendar year), (ii) an amount equal to 1.5 times the sum of the executive officer's annual base salary and target annual bonus, payable over 18 months following termination, (iii) subject to his timely election of COBRA coverage, payment of a monthly amount equal to the monthly health premiums paid by us on behalf of the executive officer and his eligible dependents immediately prior to termination for 18 months following termination (or, if earlier, until such time as the executive officer ceases to be eligible for COBRA coverage or obtains health coverage from another employer), and (iv) in the case of Mr. Lieber, full vesting of any outstanding and unvested equity awards, the vesting of which is based only on the passage of time, held by Mr. Lieber as of the date of termination. With respect to Dr. Uden, under his second amended and restated employment agreement, any outstanding and unvested equity awards, the vesting of which is based only on the passage of time, held by him as of a change in control will vest in full upon the consummation of the change in control, subject to Dr. Uden's continued employment with us through the date of such change in control.

On March 1, 2026, we and Dr. Uden and Mr. Lieber entered into amendments to their respective employment agreements to clarify that the Merger will constitute a "change in control" for purposes of the agreement. As a result, the enhanced change-in-control severance benefits described above will be triggered in the event of a qualifying termination following the closing of the Merger.

Employment Agreement for Dr. Ryder. On June 25, 2025, we entered into an employment agreement with Dr. Ryder, pursuant to which Dr. Ryder serves as our Chief Medical Officer at an initial annual base salary of $531,227 and is eligible to receive an annual target bonus of up to 40% of his base salary. Dr. Ryder serves for an initial one-year term, which automatically extends for successive one-year terms unless either we or Dr. Ryder elects not to extend the term by giving the other party at least 60 days' notice prior to the end of the current term.

If Dr. Ryder's employment is terminated by us without cause, by him for good reason, or as a result of our non-extension of the employment term, he will be entitled to receive (i) any earned but unpaid annual bonus for a calendar year ending on or preceding the date of termination, (ii) continued payment of his annual base salary for a period of 12 months following termination, and (iii) subject to his timely election of COBRA coverage, payment of a monthly amount equal to the monthly health premiums paid by us on behalf of Dr. Ryder and his eligible dependents for 12 months following termination (or, if earlier, until such time as Dr. Ryder ceases to be eligible for COBRA coverage or obtains health coverage from another employer). If Dr. Ryder's employment is terminated by reason of his death or disability, he will be entitled to receive (i) any earned but unpaid prior year annual bonus and (ii) continued payment of his annual base salary for a period of six months following termination.

If Dr. Ryder's employment is terminated by us without cause, by him for good reason, or as a result of our non-extension of the employment term, in each case within the 12-month period following a change in control, which includes the Merger, in lieu of the severance payments and benefits described above, he will be entitled to receive (i) any earned but unpaid prior year annual bonus, (ii) an amount equal to 1.5 times the sum of his annual base salary and target annual bonus, payable over 18 months following termination, (iii) subject to his timely election of COBRA coverage, payment of a monthly amount equal to the monthly health premiums paid by us on behalf of Dr. Ryder and his eligible dependents for 18 months following termination (or, if earlier, until such time as Dr. Ryder ceases to be eligible for COBRA coverage or obtains health coverage from another employer), and (iv) full vesting of any outstanding and unvested equity awards, the vesting of which is based only on the passage of time, held by Dr. Ryder as of the date of termination.

On March 1, 2026, we and Dr. Ryder entered into an amendment to his employment agreement to clarify that the Merger will constitute a "change in control" for purposes of the agreement. As a result, the enhanced change-in-control severance benefits described above will be triggered in the event of a qualifying termination following the Closing.

Severance Subject to Release of Claims. Our obligation to provide a named executive officer with severance payments and other benefits under his respective employment agreement is conditioned on the executive officer signing a release of claims in favor of us.

Restrictive Covenants. Under their respective employment agreements, each of the named executive officers has agreed not to compete with us during his employment and for one year following his termination of employment or solicit our customers, employees, representatives, agents, vendors, joint venturers or licensors during his employment and for one year following his termination of employment. In addition, each named executive officer has agreed to a perpetual non-disparagement covenant. Each of the named executive officers is also party to a Confidential Information and Invention Assignment Agreement under which each named executive officer has agreed to a perpetual confidentiality covenant and an assignment of intellectual property covenant.

Better-of Provision. The employment agreements with each of the named executive officers also contain a Section 280G “better of” cutback provision, pursuant to which any payments or benefits that would constitute “parachute payments” within the meaning of Section 280G of the Code will be reduced to the extent necessary to avoid the imposition of the excise tax under Section 4999 of the Code, but only if such reduction would result in a greater after-tax benefit to the named executive officer.

Employee and retirement benefits

We currently provide broad-based health and welfare benefits that are available to all of our employees, including our named executive officers, including health, life and AD&D, disability, vision and dental insurance. We maintain a tax-qualified retirement plan (“401(k) Plan”), for our full-time employees, including our named executive officers. The 401(k) Plan provides eligible U.S. employees with an opportunity to save for retirement on a tax advantaged basis. Eligible employees are able to defer eligible compensation subject to applicable annual limits provided for in the Internal Revenue Code (the “Code”). We make matching contributions into the 401(k) Plan on behalf of participants, equal to up to 3% of eligible compensation. Employees’ pre-tax contributions are allocated to each participant’s individual account and are then invested in selected investment alternatives according to the participants’ directions. Employees are immediately and fully vested in their contributions. Our 401(k) Plan is intended to be qualified under Section 401(a) of the Code with our 401(k) Plan’s related trust intended to be tax exempt under Section 501(a) of the Code. As a tax-qualified retirement plan, contributions to our 401(k) Plan and earnings on those contributions are not taxable to the employees until distributed from our 401(k) Plan.

Insider Trading Policy

The Company adopted an insider trading policy in connection with the Company’s initial public offering in August 2021. The insider trading policy prohibits our officers, directors, and employees from purchasing or selling the Company’s securities while in possession of material, nonpublic information, prohibits any hedging, short sales or pledging transactions with respect to the Company’s securities by directors, officers and all employees, and includes requirements regarding Rule 10b5-1 plans. In addition, it is the Company’s policy to comply with all applicable securities laws when transacting in its own securities.

Clawback

In accordance with the requirements of the Dodd-Frank Act, SEC rules and Nasdaq listing standards, we maintain a clawback policy that requires recoupment of erroneously-awarded incentive compensation received by current or former executive officers in the event we are required to prepare an accounting restatement due to material noncompliance with any financial reporting requirement under applicable securities laws.

Equity compensation

In fiscal year 2025, Dr. Uden was granted an option to purchase 56,711 shares of our common stock under the 2021 Plan, which vests in 48 equal monthly installments over four years, with a grant date fair value of $298,988. Mr. Lieber and Dr. Ryder were each granted an option to purchase 22,499 shares of our common stock under the 2021 Plan, which vests in 48 equal monthly installments over four years, with a grant date fair value of $118,620 each. Each of these options was granted on February 14, 2025 with a per share exercise price of $6.08, the closing price of a share of our common stock on the date of grant (as adjusted for the 1-for-8 reverse stock split effective February 6, 2026). In each case, vesting is generally subject to the named executive officer’s continued employment with us through the applicable vesting date.

On January 29, 2025, Mr. Lieber was granted 15,000 performance-based restricted stock units (“PSUs”) under the 2021 Plan. The January 2025 PSUs were subsequently cancelled during fiscal year 2025 and were not outstanding as of December 31, 2025.

On February 18, 2026, Mr. Lieber was granted 5,000 PSUs under the 2021 Plan. Of the 5,000 PSUs, 2,500 vested on the date of grant. The remaining 2,500 PSUs (the "CIC PSUs") will vest on the six-month anniversary of a Change in Control, which includes the Merger, but only if a Change in Control is consummated on or before December 31, 2026, subject to Mr. Lieber's continued employment with the Company from the date of grant through the vesting date. If a Change in Control has not occurred on or before December 31, 2026, the CIC PSUs will be automatically forfeited for no consideration.

The Compensation Committee generally grants options annually to executives and seeks to make such grants on or around the same date each year. Throughout the year, equity awards may be made to new hires or in connection with promotions or other changes in employment, or, as in the case of the February 2026 PSU grant, in connection with a pending transaction. The Compensation Committee does not grant equity-based awards in anticipation of the release of material nonpublic information and does not time the disclosure of material nonpublic information for purposes of affecting the value of executive compensation. In addition, during 2025, we did not grant options to any named executive officer during the four business days prior to or the one business day following the filing of a periodic report on Form 10-Q or Form 10-K, or the filing or furnishing of a Form 8-K that discloses material nonpublic information.

- (1) The amounts reported in this column represent cash fees earned in fiscal year 2025, including amounts that certain non-employee directors elected to receive in the form of an option to purchase shares of our common stock as noted by footnote 4. Non-employee directors may elect to receive their annual cash retainer in the form of an option to purchase shares of our common stock, which vests in 12 equal monthly installments on the last day of each month during such calendar year, subject to the director's continued service on our Board of Directors. The grant date of these in-lieu-of-cash options was January 2, 2025 and the number of options granted to each non-employee director was based on their annual fees to be earned and the grant date fair value of the option to purchase shares of common stock computed in accordance with FASB ASC Topic 718, excluding the effect of estimated forfeitures. The assumptions used to value the options for this purpose are set forth in Note 7 to our consolidated financial statements included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.
- (2) The amounts reported in this column represent the grant date fair value of options to purchase shares of our common stock granted to our non-employee directors in May 2025, computed in accordance with FASB ASC Topic 718, excluding the effect of estimated forfeitures. The assumptions used to value the options for this purpose are set forth in Note 7 to our consolidated financial statements included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus. As of December 31, 2025, the following non-employee directors held the following number of option awards: Ms. Boudreau—10,920; Dr. Chung—11,713; Dr. Hopfner—20,896; Mr. Hunt—25,920; Dr. Liu—20,961; Ms. Nash—11,200; Dr. Mackay—96,668; and Ms. Soteropoulos—11,591. - (3) The non-employee director elected to receive his or her annual cash retainer in the form of an option to purchase shares of our common stock. The terms of the option to purchase shares of our common stock are described below under "Director compensation policy".
- (4) Represents the grant date fair value of the annual stock option grant to purchase 3,562 shares of our common stock under the 2021 Plan, granted on May 13, 2025 at a per share exercise price of $2.38. The annual option vests in full on the earlier of the first anniversary of the date of grant or the next annual meeting of our stockholders, subject to the director's continued service on the Board of Directors through the vesting date.

(5) Dr. Iancovici declined to accept a stock option grant or a cash retainer in respect of his service as a director in 2025.

(6) Represents consulting fees paid to Dr. Mackay pursuant to his consulting agreement with the Company and Rallybio, LLC, effective January 1, 2025, at a rate of $18,750 per month ($225,000 for the full year).

Director compensation policy

The Board of Directors adopted a non-employee director compensation policy for members of our Board of Directors. In December 2024, the Board of Directors updated the non-employee director compensation policy for compensation payable in 2025. Under the non-employee director compensation policy applicable to 2025 director compensation to the extent not updated as described below, our non-employee directors were and are compensated as follows:

- each non-employee director receives an annual cash fee of $40,000 ($65,000 for the chair of our Board of Directors and $63,500 for the lead director, if applicable);
- each non-employee director who is a member of the Audit Committee receives an additional annual cash fee of $7,500 ($15,000 for the Audit Committee chair);
- each non-employee director who is a member of the Compensation Committee receives an additional annual cash fee of $6,000 ($12,000 for the Compensation Committee chair);
- each non-employee director who is a member of the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee receives an additional annual cash fee of $4,000 ($8,000 for the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee chair);
- each non-employee director will annually be granted an option to purchase 3,562 shares (as adjusted for the 1-for-8 reverse stock split effective February 6, 2026) of our common stock under the 2021 Plan on the date of the first meeting of our Board of Directors held after the annual meeting of our stockholders, prorated for non-employee directors initially elected or appointed to our Board of Directors during the 12 months preceding the grant date to reflect the number of months of service during such 12-month period.

Prior to January 1st of any year, a non-employee director may elect to receive his or her annual cash retainer in the form of an option to purchase shares of our common stock, which is expected to vest in 12 equal monthly installments, on the last day of each month during such calendar year, subject to the director's continued service on our Board of Directors through each applicable vesting date. Four of our non-employee directors made such an election with respect to their 2025 cash retainers.

The stock options granted to our non-employee directors will have a per share exercise price equal to the closing price of a share of our common stock on the date of grant (or the immediately preceding date on which a closing price was reported if there is no closing price on the date of grant) and will expire not later than ten years after the date of grant. The stock option granted to a non-employee director upon the non-employee director's initial election or appointment to our Board of Directors will vest in three equal annual installments, subject to the director's continued service on our Board of Directors through each applicable vesting date. The annual stock options granted to our non-employee directors will vest in full on the earlier of the first anniversary of the date of grant or the next annual meeting of our stockholders, subject to the director's continued service on our Board of Directors through the vesting date. Upon a change in control (as defined in the 2021 Plan (or as such term or similar term is defined in any successor plan)), each initial stock option and each annual stock option that is then outstanding will vest in full, subject to the director's continued service on our Board of Directors through such change in control.

All cash fees will be paid quarterly, in arrears, or upon the earlier resignation or removal of the non-employee director. The amount of each payment will be prorated for any portion of a calendar quarter that a non-employee director is not serving on our Board of Directors, based on the number of calendar days served by such non-employee director.

Each non-employee director is entitled to reimbursement for reasonable travel and other expenses incurred in connection with attending meetings of our Board of Directors and any committee on which he or she serves.

The Compensation Committee reviews and makes recommendations to our Board of Directors regarding the non-employee director compensation arrangements, and the Board of Directors reviews and approves non-employee director compensation. The Compensation Committee considers information regarding director compensation paid at peer companies, including an evaluation of such compensation practices by the Compensation Committee's compensation consultant. In December 2025 following a recommendation from the Compensation Committee, the Board of Directors did not make any changes to the non-employee director compensation policy, applicable to 2026 director compensation, except the annual option to purchase shares of our common stock was increased from an option to purchase 3,562 shares of our common stock to an option to purchase 3,750 shares of our common stock (in each case, as adjusted for the 1-for-8 reverse stock split effective February 6, 2026).

(1) Amounts reflect the aggregate grant date fair value of the stock awards and option awards granted during the applicable year computed in accordance with Financial Accounting Standards Board, Accounting Standards Codification Topic 718, Compensation—Stock Compensation ("FASB ASC 718"). Assumptions used in the calculation of the grant date fair value of each stock award and option award granted are described in Note 8 to Candid's audited consolidated financial statements and notes appearing elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus. These amounts do not reflect the actual economic value that may be realized by Candid's named executive officers upon the vesting of the stock awards or option awards, the exercise of the option awards, or any subsequent sale of common stock underlying such stock awards or option awards.

(2) Represents a grant of a restricted stock award in the applicable year.

(3) Amounts for 2025 reflect the grant date fair value of the Replacement Options (as defined below) and the amounts for 2024 reflect the grant date fair value of the Cancelled Options (as defined below). The Cancelled Options were performance-based options that were not probable of vesting at the date the Replacement Options were issued, and, as a result, the grant date fair value of the Replacement Options replaced the grant date fair value of the Cancelled Options. See "Equity-Based Incentive Awards" below for more information.

(4) Amounts represent the annual cash performance bonus earned in the applicable year. Please see the description of bonus compensation under "Bonus Opportunity" below.

Narrative to the Summary Compensation Table

Annual Base Salary

The base salary of Candid's named executive officers is generally determined and approved by the Candid Board in connection with the commencement of employment of the named executive officer and may be adjusted from time to time thereafter as the Candid Board determines appropriate. The 2025 annual base salaries for Dr. Song, Dr. Lu and Mr. Kush were $550,000, $500,000 and $425,000, respectively.

Bonus Opportunity

In addition to base salaries, each of Candid's named executive officers is eligible to earn annual cash bonuses, which are designed to provide appropriate incentives to Candid's named executive officers to achieve defined annual corporate goals and to reward Candid's named executive officers for individual achievements towards these goals. The annual bonus awarded to each named executive officer may be based in part on the extent to which Candid achieves corporate goals. At the end of the year, the Candid Board reviews Candid's performance against each corporate goal and considers the extent to which Candid achieved each of its corporate goals. The Candid board of directors also generally considers each named executive officer's individual contributions toward reaching these goals. The bonus amounts vary from year to year based on corporate performance.

For 2025, each of Dr. Song, Dr. Lu and Mr. Kush was eligible for a target bonus equal to 50%, 50% and 40% of their base salary, respectively. In December 2025, the Candid Board determined that Candid achieved 110% of its 2025 corporate goals and approved payment of an aggregate amount equivalent to 110% of each named executive officer's 2025 target bonus which was allocated among employees at a range of 100% to 120% of their target bonus at management's discretion. As a result, Dr. Song received a cash bonus of $302,500, Dr. Lu received a cash bonus of $287,500, and Mr. Kush received a cash bonus of $170,000, representing bonus achievement of 110%, 115% and 100%, respectively.

Equity-Based Incentive Awards

Candid's equity-based incentive awards are designed to align Candid's named executive officers' interests with those of its stockholders and to retain and incentivize Candid's named executive officers over the long-term. To date, Candid has used stock option grants, restricted stock awards and sales of restricted stock for this purpose because it believes they are an effective means by which to align the long-term interests of its executive officers with those of its stockholders. Each stock option award and restricted stock award was granted under the Candid 2024 and, prior to the adoption of the Candid 2024 Plan, restricted stock was sold pursuant to common stock purchase agreements, as described below in the Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year End table below. The terms of the Candid 2024 Plan are described below under the subsection titled "Equity Incentive Plan."

the Candid Board or an authorized committee thereof is responsible for approving equity grants. Vesting of equity awards is generally tied to continuous service with Candid and serves as an additional retention measure. Candid's named executive officers generally are awarded an initial new hire grant upon commencement of employment. Additional grants may occur periodically in order to specifically incentivize Candid's named executive officers with respect to achieving certain corporate goals or to reward Candid's named executive officers for exceptional performance.

In May 2025, the Candid board of directors cancelled option awards to purchase (i) 10,000,000 shares of Candid Common Stock held by Dr. Song's trust, The Song Family Trust Dated October 14, 2016 (the "Song Family Trust"), (ii) 1,200,000 shares of Candid Common Stock granted to Dr. Lu and (iii) 1,000,000 shares of Candid Common Stock granted to Mr. Kush (collectively, the "Cancelled Options"). The Cancelled Options were originally granted in November 2024 with an exercise price of $0.70 per share and vested, if at all, upon an IPO liquidity-event based performance condition, subject to the grantee's Continuous Service (as defined in the Candid 2024 Plan) with Candid as of such date. In May 2025, the Candid Board approved replacement option awards to purchase (i) 10,000,000 shares of Candid Common Stock to Dr. Song's trust, the Song Family Trust, (ii) 1,200,000 shares of Candid Common Stock to Dr. Lu and (iii) 1,000,000 shares of Candid Common Stock to Mr. Kush (collectively, the "Replacement Options"). The Replacement Options have an exercise price of $0.35 per share and vest as follows: (a) in the event there is a liquidity event that is a change of control that meets certain requirements (the "CIC Liquidity Event"), then 100% of the total shares will vest immediately prior to and contingent upon the closing of such transaction and (b) in the event there is a liquidity event that meets certain public listing requirements (the "Public Listing Liquidity Event" and, together with the CIC Liquidity Event, a "Liquidity Event"), then 12/48th of the total shares will vest on the one year anniversary of the date of the Public Listing Liquidity Event, and 1/48th of the total shares will vest each month thereafter on the same day of the month as the vesting commencement date (or if there is no corresponding day, on the last day of the month), subject to the grantee's Continuous Service with Candid as of each such date and subject to the occurrence of such Public Listing Liquidity Event on or before December 31, 2026. Upon the Closing Date, the Replacement Options will begin vesting in accordance with subsection (b). For more information see the Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year End table below.

Potential Payments Upon Termination or Change in Control

Regardless of the manner in which a named executive officer's service terminates, each named executive officer is entitled to receive amounts earned during his term of service, including unpaid salary and unused vacation.

In addition, each of Candid's named executive officers' equity awards is subject to the terms of (i) the Candid 2024 Plan and award agreement thereunder or (ii) the relevant common stock purchase agreement, as applicable. A description of the termination and change in control provisions in the Candid 2024 Plan and awards granted thereunder is provided in the subsection titled "Equity Incentive Plan" below, and a description of the vesting provisions of each equity award held by Candid's named executive officers which is outstanding and unvested as of December 31, 2025 is provided the Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year End table below.

Under the common stock purchase agreements with the Song Family Trust and Dr. Song and Mr. Kush, if within one month before or 12 months following a change in control, such named executive officer's employment or service to Candid is involuntarily terminated by Candid without cause, or such named executive officer resigns for good reason, and in either case other than as a result of death or disability, and provided such termination constitutes a "separation from service" within the meaning of Treasury Regulation Section 1.409A-1(h), the repurchase option with respect to such restricted shares of Candid Common Stock will lapse as to 100% of any unvested shares and such unvested shares will immediately become fully vested.

For purposes of the common stock purchase agreements:

- "change in control" generally has the same meaning given to such term in the Candid 2024 Plan, as described below;
- "cause" means any of the following: (i) commission of any felony or any crime involving moral turpitude or dishonesty, (ii) participation in a fraud or act of dishonesty against Candid, (iii) willful and material breach of duties that has not been cured within 30 days after written notice from the Candid board of directors of such breach, (iv) intentional and material damage to Candid's property, or (v) material breach of such named executive officer's employee confidential information and inventions assignment agreement; and
- "good reason" means any of the following actions taken by Candid or a successor corporation or entity without the named executive officer's consent (unless such action is taken in response to conduct by such named executive officer that constitutes cause): (i) material reduction of such named executive officer's base compensation, other than a reduction that applies generally to all executives and does not exceed

10%; (ii) material reduction in such named executive officer's authority, duties or responsibilities, provided that a change in job position (including a change in title) will not be deemed a "material reduction" unless such named executive officer's new authority, duties or responsibilities are materially reduced from the prior authority, duties or responsibilities; (iii) failure or refusal of a successor to Candid to materially assume Candid's obligations under the agreement; or (iv) relocation of such named executive officer's principal place of employment that results in an increase in such named executive officer's one-way driving distance by more than 50 miles from such named executive officer's then current principal residence; provided that if such named executive officer works remotely during any period in which such named executive officer's regular principal place of employment at a Candid office is closed, then neither such named executive officer's relocation to remote work or back to the office from remote work will be considered a relocation of such named executive officer's principal place of employment with Candid for purposes of this definition.

Following the Merger, Candid anticipates that the combined company board of directors will adopt a Severance and Change in Control Plan (the "Severance Plan"), which each of Candid's named executive officers will become eligible to receive certain benefits under the terms of the Severance Plan. Following its effectiveness, the terms of the Severance Plan will supersede the change in control benefits set forth in the common stock purchase agreements with the Song Family Trust and Dr. Song and Mr. Kush.

Outstanding Equity Awards at Fiscal Year End

The following table sets forth certain information regarding equity awards granted to Candid's named executive officers that remain outstanding as of December 31, 2025. In addition, awards may vest on an accelerated basis under certain circumstances, as described above under "— Potential Payments upon Termination or Change in Control."

⁽²⁾ All of the equity awards were granted under the Candid 2024 Plan. All of the option awards were granted with a per share exercise price equal to the fair value of one share of Candid Common Stock on the date of grant, as determined in good faith by the Candid Board. Dr. Lu paid $0.0000018 per share for the shares of Candid Common Stock underlying his restricted stock award.

Nonqualified Deferred Compensation

Candid does not maintain nonqualified defined contribution plans or other nonqualified deferred compensation plans. The Candid Board may elect to provide its officers and other employees with nonqualified defined contribution or other nonqualified deferred compensation benefits in the future if it determines that doing so is in its best interests.

Perquisites, Health, Welfare and Retirement Benefits

Each of Candid's named executive officers are eligible to participate in Candid's employee benefit plans, including its medical, dental, vision, life, long term disability and accidental death and dismemberment insurance plans, in each case on the same basis as all of Candid's other employees. In addition, Candid provides the opportunity to participate in a 401(k) plan to its employees, including each of Candid's named executive officers, as discussed in the subsection below titled "401(k) plan." Candid generally does not provide perquisites or personal benefits to its executive officers, except in limited circumstances.

401(k) plan

Candid's named executive officers are eligible to participate in a defined contribution retirement plan that provides eligible U.S. employees with an opportunity to save for retirement on a tax-advantaged basis. Eligible employees may defer eligible compensation on a pre-tax or after-tax ("Roth") basis, up to the statutorily prescribed annual limits on contributions under the Code. Individual's contributions are allocated to each participant's individual account and are then invested in selected investment alternatives according to the participants' directions. The 401(k) plan is intended to be qualified under Section 401(a) of the Code with the 401(k) plan's related trust intended to be tax exempt under Section 501(a) of the Code. As a tax-qualified retirement plan, contributions to the 401(k) plan (except for Roth contributions) and earnings on those contributions are not taxable to the employees until distributed from the 401(k) plan. Candid may elect, at its discretion, to make matching employee contributions.

Clawback Policy

Following the Merger, Candid expects the combined company to adopt a new compensation recovery policy that is compliant with the Nasdaq Listing Rules, as required by the U.S. Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act ("Dodd-Frank Act").

Equity Incentive Plan

Candid believes that its ability to grant equity-based awards is a valuable and necessary compensation tool that aligns the long-term financial interests of its employees, consultants and directors with the financial interests of its stockholders. In addition, Candid believes that its ability to grant equity-based awards helps Candid to attract, retain and motivate employees, consultants and directors, and encourages them to devote their best efforts to Candid's business and financial success. The principal features of the Candid 2024 Plan are summarized below. This summary is qualified in its entirety by reference to the actual text of the Candid 2024 Plan, which is filed as an exhibit to this proxy statement/prospectus.

Candid 2024 Equity Incentive Plan

The Candid Board adopted and Candid stockholders approved the Candid Therapeutics, Inc. 2024 Equity Incentive Plan (the "Candid 2024 Plan") in May 2024. Candid most recently amended the Candid 2024 Plan in August 2024. The Candid 2024 Plan and each option thereunder was assumed by Rallybio in connection with the Merger.

Share reserve. Subject to certain capitalization adjustments, the aggregate number of shares of Candid Common Stock that may be issued pursuant to awards under the Candid 2024 Plan is 60,711,153 shares.

Awards. The Candid 2024 Plan permits the grant of ISOs, NSOs, stock appreciation rights, restricted stock awards, restricted stock unit awards and other stock-based awards. ISOs may be granted only to Candid employees and to any of Candid's parent or subsidiary corporations' employees. All other awards may be granted to employees, directors and consultants of Candid and to any of Candid's parent or subsidiary corporations' employees or consultants.

Administration. The Candid Board or, if delegated by the Candid Board, a committee or one or more persons or bodies administers Candid 2024 Plan. Subject to the terms of the Candid 2024 Plan, the administrator has the power to, among other things, select the persons to whom awards may be granted, determine the type of award to be granted to any person, determine the number and type of shares to be covered by each award, establish the terms and conditions of each award agreement, determine whether and under what circumstances an option may be exercised without a payment of cash, and determine whether and to what extent and under what circumstances shares and other amounts payable with respect to an award may be deferred either automatically or at the election of the participant.

Stock options. ISOs and NSOs are granted pursuant to stock option agreements adopted by the administrator. The administrator determines the exercise price for a stock option, provided that the exercise price of a stock option generally cannot be less than 100% of the fair market value of Candid Common Stock on the date of grant. Options granted under the Candid 2024 Plan vest at the rate specified by the administrator. The administrator determines the term of stock options granted under the Candid 2024 Plan, up to a maximum of 10 years. Unless the terms of an optionholder's stock option agreement provide otherwise, if an optionholder's service relationship with Candid, or any of Candid's affiliates, ceases for any reason other than disability, death or cause, the optionholder may generally exercise any vested options for a period of three months following the cessation of service. The option term may be extended in the event that the exercise of the option following such a termination of service is prohibited by applicable securities laws or Candid's insider trading policy. If an optionholder's service relationship with Candid or any of Candid's affiliates ceases due to disability or death, or an optionholder dies within a certain period following cessation of service, the optionholder or a beneficiary may generally exercise any vested options for a period of 12 months in the event of disability and 18 months in the event of death. In the event of a termination for cause, options generally terminate immediately upon the termination of the individual for cause. In no event may an option be exercised beyond the expiration of its term. Acceptable consideration for the purchase of Candid Common Stock issued upon the exercise of a stock option will be determined by the administrator and may include (1) cash, check, bank draft, electronic funds transfer or money order, (2) a broker-assisted cashless exercise, (3) the tender of shares of Candid Common Stock previously owned by the optionholder, (4) a net exercise of the option if it is an NSO, (5) deferred payment or a similar arrangement with the optionholder and (6) other legal consideration approved by the administrator.

Tax limitations on incentive stock options. The aggregate fair market value, determined at the time of grant, of Candid Common Stock with respect to ISOs that are exercisable for the first time by an optionholder during any calendar year under all of Candid's stock plans may not exceed $100,000. Options or portions thereof that exceed such limit will generally be treated as NSOs. No ISO may be granted to any person who, at the time of the grant, owns or is deemed to own stock possessing more than 10% of Candid's total combined voting power or that of any of Candid's affiliates unless (1) the option exercise price is at least 110% of the fair market value of the stock subject to the option on the date of grant and (2) the term of the ISO does not exceed five years from the date of grant.

Restricted stock awards. Restricted stock awards are granted pursuant to restricted stock award agreements adopted by the administrator. Restricted stock awards may be granted in consideration for (1) cash, check, bank draft or money order, (2) services rendered to Candid or Candid's affiliates or (3) any other form of legal consideration approved by the administrator. Candid Common Stock acquired under a restricted stock award may, but need not, be subject to a share repurchase option in Candid's favor in accordance with a vesting schedule to be determined by the administrator. A restricted stock award may be transferred only upon such terms and conditions as set by the administrator. Except as otherwise provided in the applicable award agreement, restricted stock awards that have not vested may be forfeited or repurchased by Candid upon the participant's cessation of continuous service for any reason.

Changes to capital structure. In the event there is a specified type of change in Candid's capital structure, such as a stock dividend, stock split or reverse stock split, appropriate adjustments will be made to (1) the number of shares available for issuance under the Candid 2024 Plan, (2) the number of shares covered by and, as applicable, the exercise price of each outstanding award granted under the Candid 2024 Plan and (3) the number of shares that may be issued as ISOs under the Candid 2024 Plan.

Corporate transactions. In the event of a "corporate transaction" (as defined in the Candid 2024 Plan), the Candid Board generally may take one or more of the following actions with respect to outstanding awards:

- arrange for the surviving or acquiring corporation (or such corporation's parent) to assume or continue such awards, or to substitute a similar stock award for such outstanding awards;
- cancel any or all vested and/or unvested awards in exchange for cash or other consideration, at the discretion of the Candid Board;
- accelerate the vesting of stock awards in whole or in part;
- cancel any or all unvested awards without payment of any consideration;
- arrange for the lapse of any reacquisition or repurchase rights in Candid's favor with respect to a stock award,
- arrange for the assignment of any such rights to the surviving or acquiring corporation (or such corporation's parent); or
- make a payment equal to the excess, if any, of (A) the value of the property the participant would have received upon exercise of the award immediately prior to the effective time of a corporate transaction, over (B) any exercise price payable in connection with such exercise.

The Candid Board need not take the same action or actions with respect to all stock awards or portions thereof or with respect to all participants or with respect to the vested or unvested portion of such stock awards.

In addition, a stock award may provide for additional acceleration of vesting and exercisability upon or following a "change in control" (as defined in the Candid 2024 Plan) as may be provided in the award agreement evidencing such stock award or in any other written agreement with the holder thereof.

Plan amendment or termination. The Candid Board may amend, modify or terminate the Candid 2024 Plan at any time. Unless terminated sooner by the Candid Board, the Candid 2024 Plan will automatically terminate on the day before the tenth anniversary of the earlier of (1) the date the Candid 2024 Plan was approved by the Candid Board or (2) the date the Candid 2024 Plan was approved by Candid's stockholders.

Non-Employee Director Compensation

Historically, Candid has not paid cash compensation to any of its non-employee directors for service on the Candid Board.

The following table sets forth in summary form information concerning the compensation that Candid paid or awarded during the year ended December 31, 2025 to each of Candid's non-employee directors.

NAME	FEES EARNED OR PAID IN CASH ($)	STOCK AWARDS ($)	OPTION AWARDS $(1)(2)	ALL OTHER COMPENSATION ($)	TOTAL ($)

Jeffrey Tong, Ph.D.	—	—	—	—	—

(1) Amounts reflect the aggregate grant date fair value of the option awards granted during the year ended December 31, 2025 computed in accordance with FASB ASC 718. Assumptions used in the calculation of the grant date fair value of each option award granted are described in Note 8 to Candid's audited consolidated financial statements and notes appearing elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus. These amounts do not reflect the actual economic value that may be realized by Candid's non-employee directors upon the vesting of the option awards, the exercise of the option awards, or any subsequent sale of common stock underlying such option awards.

(2) As of December 31, 2025, the aggregate number of shares of Candid Common Stock and shares of Candid Common Stock underlying outstanding options to purchase shares of Candid Common Stock held by non-employee directors was as follows: (i) Candid stock options to purchase 1,838,750 shares of Candid Common Stock held by Mr. Puckett and (ii) 1,638,750 shares of Candid Common Stock and Candid stock options to purchase 200,000 shares of Candid Common Stock held by Dr. You. None of Candid's other non-employee directors held shares of Candid Common Stock or options to purchase shares of Candid Common Stock as of December 31, 2025.

Outstanding equity awards held by Candid's non-employee directors are subject to the terms of the Candid 2024 Plan, as described above under "Equity Incentive Plan—Candid 2024 Equity Incentive Plan."

In May 2025, the Candid board of directors cancelled option awards to purchase 200,000 shares of Candid Common Stock granted to each of Mr. Puckett and Dr. You (collectively, the "Director Cancelled Options"). The Director Cancelled Options were originally granted in November 2024 with an exercise price of $0.70 per share and vested, if at all, upon an IPO liquidity-event based performance condition, subject to the grantee's Continuous Service with Candid as of such date. In May 2025, the Candid Board approved replacement option awards to purchase 200,000 shares of Candid Common Stock to each of Mr. Puckett and Dr. You (collectively, the "Director Replacement Options"). The Director Replacement Options have an exercise price of $0.35 per share and vest as follows: (a) in the event of a CIC Liquidity Event, then 100% of the total shares will vest immediately prior to and contingent upon the closing of such CIC Liquidity Event and (b) in the event of a Public Listing Liquidity Event, then 12/48th of the total shares will vest on the one year anniversary of the date of the Public Listing Liquidity Event, and 1/48th of the total shares will vest each month thereafter on the same day of the month as the vesting commencement date (or if there is no corresponding day, on the last day of the month), subject to the grantee's Continuous Service with Candid as of each such date and subject to the occurrence of such Public Listing Liquidity Event on or before December 31, 2026. Upon the Closing Date, the Director Replacement Options will begin vesting in accordance with subsection (b). For more information with respect to the vesting terms see the Replacement Options described above.

Candid has reimbursed and will continue to reimburse all of its non-employee directors for their travel, lodging and other reasonable expenses incurred in attending meetings of the Candid Board and committees of the Candid Board.

Non-Employee Director Compensation Policy

Following the Merger, Candid intends to adopt a new non-employee director compensation policy on terms to be determined by the combined company's board of directors. Under the non-employee director policy, the combined company's non-employee directors will be eligible to receive compensation for service on the combined company's board of directors and committees of combined company's board of directors.

PROPOSAL NO. 1—THE NASDAQ STOCK ISSUANCE PROPOSAL

General

At the Rallybio annual meeting, Rallybio stockholders will be asked to approve the issuance of shares of Rallybio Common Stock to (i) the securityholders of Candid, pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement, and (ii) certain investors in the Concurrent Financing, pursuant to the terms of the subscription agreement, which will (a) represent more than 20% of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding immediately prior to the Merger and (b) result in the change of control of Rallybio, pursuant to Nasdaq Listing Rules 5635(a) and 5635(b), respectively.

Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments (as described in more detail in the section titled "The Merger Agreement—Merger Consideration and Exchange Ratio"), including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing.

The terms of, reasons for and other aspects of the Merger Agreement, the Merger and the issuance of Rallybio Common Stock in the Merger are described in detail in the other sections in this proxy statement/prospectus. A copy of the Merger Agreement is attached as Annex A to this proxy statement/prospectus.

Reason for the Proposal

Under Nasdaq Listing Rule 5635(a)(1), a company listed on Nasdaq is required to obtain stockholder approval prior to the issuance of common stock, among other things, in connection with the acquisition of another company's stock, if the number of shares of common stock to be issued is in excess of 20% of the number of shares of common stock then outstanding. Accordingly, in order to ensure compliance with Nasdaq Listing Rule 5635(a)(1), Rallybio must obtain the approval of Rallybio stockholders for the issuance of these shares of common stock in the Merger.

Under Nasdaq Listing Rule 5635(b), a company listed on Nasdaq is required to obtain stockholder approval prior to an issuance of stock that will result in a "change of control" of the listed company. Nasdaq has determined that the Merger constitutes a "change of control" of the listed company. Accordingly, in order to ensure compliance with Nasdaq Listing Rule 5635(b), Rallybio must obtain the approval of Rallybio stockholders of the change of control of Rallybio resulting from the Merger.

Required Vote

The affirmative vote of a majority of the total votes cast by the holders of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting, assuming a quorum is present, is required to approve the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal. Abstentions and broker non-votes (if any) will have no effect on the outcome of the vote on the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal.

The Merger is conditioned upon the approval of the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal (or the waiver thereof in accordance with the terms of the Merger Agreement). Notwithstanding the approval of the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, if the Merger is not consummated for any reason, the actions contemplated by the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal will not be effected. The closing of the Concurrent Financing is conditioned upon the satisfaction or waiver of each of the conditions to the Closing as well as certain other conditions. Therefore, the Concurrent Financing cannot be consummated without the approval of the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal (or the waiver thereof).

Certain of Rallybio's stockholders have agreed to vote any shares of Rallybio Common Stock owned by them in favor of the Contemplated Transactions including: (a) the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, (b) the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, (c) the Name Change Proposal, (d) the Authorized Share Proposal, and (e) the other actions contemplated by the Merger Agreement, against approval of any proposal made in opposition to, or in competition with, the Merger Agreement or the consummation of the Merger, and against any alternative acquisition proposals. See "Agreements Related to the Merger—Support Agreements" for more information.

Unless otherwise instructed, it is the intention of the persons named in the accompanying proxy card to vote shares represented by properly executed proxy cards "FOR" the approval of the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal.

THE NASDAQ STOCK ISSUANCE PROPOSAL

PROPOSAL NO. 2—THE REVERSE STOCK SPLIT PROPOSAL

General

At the Rallybio annual meeting, Rallybio stockholders will be asked to approve an amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation that will implement a reverse stock split of the issued and outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock at a ratio in the range between 1-for-2 to 1-for-3 inclusive, with the final ratio to be mutually agreed to by Rallybio and Candid, for the purposes of maintaining compliance with Nasdaq listing standards or for the combined company to meet the initial listing standards of Nasdaq or otherwise if deemed advisable by Candid. Upon the effectiveness of such amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to effect the reverse stock split (the "reverse stock split effective time"), the issued and outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock immediately prior to the reverse stock split effective time will be reclassified into a smaller number of shares such that a Rallybio stockholder will own a ratio ranging from one new share of Rallybio Common Stock for every 2 to 3 shares of issued common stock held by such stockholder immediately prior to the reverse stock split effective time, as specified. Based upon the reverse stock split ratio selected by Rallybio and Candid, proportionate adjustments will be made to the per share exercise price, and/or the number of shares issuable upon the exercise or vesting of all then outstanding Rallybio stock options, which will result in a proportional decrease in the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock reserved for issuance upon exercise or vesting of such stock options, and a proportional increase in the exercise price of all such stock options.

The proposed form of certificate of amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation, a copy of which is attached as Annex I to this proxy statement/prospectus, will affect the reverse stock split but will not change the number of authorized shares of Rallybio Common Stock, or the par value of Rallybio Common Stock.

The Rallybio Board may determine to effect the reverse stock split, if it is approved by the stockholders, even if the other proposals to be acted upon at the meeting are not approved, including the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal. In addition, notwithstanding approval of this proposal by Rallybio stockholders, the Rallybio Board may, in its sole discretion, abandon the proposed amendment and determine prior to the effectiveness of any filing with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware not to effect the reverse stock split, as permitted under Section 242(c) of the DGCL.

Reasons for the Proposal

The Rallybio Board approved the proposal approving the amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation effecting the reverse stock split for the following reasons:

- the Rallybio Board believes effecting the reverse stock split will result in an increase in the minimum bid price of Rallybio Common Stock, thereby increasing the ability of the combined company to satisfy the Nasdaq initial listing requirements for the combined company common stock and reducing the risk of a delisting of Rallybio Common Stock from Nasdaq in the future;
- the Rallybio Board believes a higher stock price may help generate investor interest in Rallybio and ultimately the combined company and help Rallybio attract and retain employees;
- the Rallybio Board believes a higher stock price may increase trading volume in Rallybio Common Stock and facilitate future financings by the combined company;
- the Rallybio Board believes that the resulting increase in the number of authorized and unissued shares available for future issuance will facilitate the issuance of shares to the stockholders of Candid pursuant to the Merger Agreement, as described in the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, and ultimately the consummation of the Merger, and the issuance of shares to the investors in the Concurrent Financing pursuant to the Subscription Agreement; and
- the Rallybio Board believes that a range of reverse stock split ratios provides it with the most flexibility to achieve the desired results of the reverse stock split.

Requirements for Listing on Nasdaq

Rallybio Common Stock is listed on Nasdaq under the symbol "RLYB." Candid will file an initial listing application pursuant to the terms of the Merger Agreement for the combined company with Nasdaq.

According to the Nasdaq rules, an issuer must, in a case such as this, apply for initial inclusion following a transaction whereby the issuer combines with a non-Nasdaq entity, resulting in a change of control of the issuer and potentially allowing the non-Nasdaq entity to obtain a Nasdaq listing. Accordingly, the listing standards of Nasdaq will require Rallybio to have, among other things, a $4.00 per share minimum bid price for a certain number of trading days preceding the Closing. Therefore, the reverse stock split may be necessary in order to consummate the Merger.

In addition, it is a condition to the Closing that the shares of Rallybio Common Stock to be issued in the Merger pursuant to the Merger Agreement having been approved for listing on Nasdaq.

One of the effects of the reverse stock split will be to effectively increase the proportion of authorized shares which are unissued relative to those which are issued. This could result in Rallybio's management being able to issue more shares without further stockholder approval. The reverse stock split will not affect the number of authorized shares of Rallybio capital stock, which will continue to be authorized pursuant to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation.

Potential Increased Investor Interest

The closing price of the Rallybio Common Stock on _____, 2026, as reported on Nasdaq, was $ _____ per share. An investment in Rallybio Common Stock may not appeal to brokerage firms that are reluctant to recommend lower priced securities to their clients. Investors may also be dissuaded from purchasing lower priced stocks because the brokerage commissions, as a percentage of the total transaction, tend to be higher for such stocks. Moreover, the analysts at many brokerage firms do not monitor the trading activity or otherwise provide research coverage of lower priced stocks. Also, the Rallybio Board believes that most investment funds are reluctant to invest in lower priced stocks.

There are risks associated with the reverse stock split, including that the reverse stock split may not result in an increase in the per share price of Rallybio Common Stock at the levels expected or at all.

Rallybio cannot predict whether the reverse stock split will increase the market price for Rallybio Common Stock. The history of similar stock split combinations for companies in like circumstances is varied. There is no assurance that:

- the market price per share of Rallybio Common Stock after the reverse stock split will rise in proportion to the reduction in the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding before the reverse stock split;
- the reverse stock split will result in a per share price that will attract brokers and investors who do not trade in lower priced stocks;
- the reverse stock split will result in a per share price that will increase the ability of Rallybio to attract and retain employees;
- the market price per share will either exceed or remain in excess of the $1.00 minimum bid price as required by Nasdaq for continued listing;
- the reverse stock split will or increase trading volume in Rallybio Common Stock and facilitate future financings by the combined company; or
- the market price per share will achieve and maintain the $4.00 minimum bid price requirement for a sufficient period of time for the combined company's common stock to be approved for listing by Nasdaq.

The market price of Rallybio Common Stock will also be based on the performance of Rallybio, and after the Merger, on the performance of the combined company, and other factors, some of which are unrelated to the number of shares outstanding. If the reverse stock split is effected and the market price of Rallybio Common Stock declines, the percentage decline as an absolute number and as a percentage of the overall market capitalization of Rallybio may be greater than would occur in the absence of a reverse stock split. Furthermore, the liquidity of Rallybio Common Stock could be adversely affected by the reduced number of shares that would be outstanding after the reverse stock split.

Principal Effects of the Reverse Stock Split

The reverse stock split will be realized simultaneously for all shares of Rallybio Common Stock and Rallybio options outstanding immediately prior to the reverse stock split effective time. The reverse stock split will affect all holders of shares of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding immediately prior to the reverse stock split effective time uniformly and each such stockholder will hold the same percentage of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding immediately following the reverse stock split as that stockholder held immediately prior to the reverse stock split, except for immaterial adjustments that may result from the treatment of fractional shares as described below. The reverse stock split will not change the par value of Rallybio Common Stock or preferred stock and will not reduce the number of authorized shares of Rallybio Common Stock or preferred stock. Rallybio Common Stock issued pursuant to the reverse stock split will remain fully paid and nonassessable. The reverse stock split will not affect Rallybio continuing to be subject to the periodic reporting requirements of the Exchange Act.

Procedure for Effecting Reverse Stock Split and Exchange of Stock Certificates

If the Rallybio stockholders approve the amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation effecting the reverse stock split, and if the Rallybio Board still believes that a reverse stock split is in the best interests of Rallybio and its stockholders, Rallybio will file the certificate of amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware at such time as the Rallybio Board has determined to be the appropriate reverse stock split effective time. The Rallybio Board may delay effecting the reverse stock split without resoliciting stockholder approval.

Beginning at the reverse stock split effective time, each stock certificate representing pre-split shares will be deemed for all corporate purposes to evidence ownership of post-split shares.

Beneficial Owners of Common Stock. Upon the implementation of the reverse stock split, Rallybio intends to treat shares held by stockholders in "street name" (i.e., through a bank, broker, custodian or other nominee), in the same manner as registered stockholders whose shares are registered in their names. Banks, brokers, custodians or other nominees will be instructed to effect the reverse stock split for their beneficial holders holding Rallybio Common Stock in street name. However, these banks, brokers, custodians or other nominees may have different procedures than registered stockholders for processing the reverse stock split and making payment for fractional shares. If a stockholder holds shares of Rallybio Common Stock with a bank, broker, custodian or other nominee and has any questions in this regard, stockholders are encouraged to contact their bank, broker, custodian or other nominee.

Registered Holders of Common Stock in Book-Entry Form. Rallybio's registered holders of common stock hold their shares electronically in book-entry form with Rallybio's transfer agent, Computershare Trust Company, N.A. These stockholders do not hold physical stock certificates evidencing their ownership of Rallybio Common Stock. However, they are provided with a statement reflecting the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock registered in their accounts. No action needs to be taken to receive post-reverse stock split shares or payment in lieu of fractional shares, if applicable. If a stockholder is entitled to post-reverse stock split shares, a transaction statement will automatically be sent to the stockholder's address of record indicating the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock held following the reverse stock split.

Fractional Shares

No fractional shares will be issued in connection with the reverse stock split. Stockholders of record who otherwise would be entitled to receive fractional shares because they hold a number of pre-split shares not evenly divisible by the number of post-split shares for which each post-split share is to be reclassified, will be entitled to a cash payment in lieu thereof at a price equal to the fraction to which the stockholder would otherwise be entitled multiplied by the closing price of the common stock on Nasdaq on the date of the filing of the certificate of amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation effecting the reverse stock split. For the foregoing purposes, all shares of common stock held by a holder will be aggregated (thus resulting in no more than one fractional share per holder). The ownership of a fractional interest will not give the holder thereof any voting, dividend or other rights except to receive payment therefor as described herein.

Rallybio stockholders should be aware that, under the escheat laws of the various jurisdictions where stockholders reside, where Rallybio is domiciled and where the funds will be deposited, sums due for fractional interests that are not timely claimed after the effective date of the split may be required to be paid to the designated agent for each such jurisdiction, unless correspondence has been received by Rallybio or the exchange agent concerning ownership of such funds within the time permitted in such jurisdiction. Thereafter, stockholders otherwise entitled to receive such funds will have to seek to obtain them directly from the state to which they were paid.

Potential Anti-Takeover Effect

Although the increased proportion of unissued authorized shares to issued shares could, under certain circumstances, have an anti-takeover effect, for example, by permitting issuances that would dilute the stock ownership of a person seeking to effect a change in the composition of the Rallybio Board or contemplating a tender offer or other transaction for the combination of Rallybio with another company, the Reverse Stock Split Proposal is not being proposed in response to any effort of which Rallybio is aware to accumulate shares of Rallybio Common Stock or obtain control of Rallybio, other than in connection with the Merger and the Concurrent Financing, nor is it part of a plan by management to recommend a similar amendment to the Rallybio Board and stockholders. Other than the proposals being submitted to the Rallybio stockholders for their consideration at the Rallybio annual meeting, the Rallybio Board does not currently contemplate recommending the adoption of any other actions that could be construed to affect the ability of third parties to take over or change control of Rallybio. For more information, please see the section titled “Risk Factors—Risks Related to the Combined Company” of this proxy statement/prospectus.

Material U.S. Federal Income Tax Consequences of the Reverse Stock Split

The following is a discussion of the material U.S. federal income tax consequences of the reverse stock split that are applicable to U.S. holders (which, for purposes of this discussion, has the same meaning as in “Material U.S. Federal Income Tax Consequences of the Rallybio CVRs to holders of Rallybio Common Stock”) of Rallybio Common Stock. This discussion does not purport to be a complete analysis of all potential tax consequences and is based upon current provisions of the Code, existing Treasury regulations, judicial decisions and published rulings and administrative pronouncements of the IRS, all in effect as of the date hereof and all of which are subject to differing interpretations or change. Any such change or differing interpretation, which may be retroactive, could alter the tax consequences to holders of Rallybio Common Stock as described in this summary.

This discussion assumes that any cash distributed pursuant to a cash dividend will be treated for U.S. federal income tax purposes as separate and distinct from the reverse stock split.

Additionally, this discussion does not address all U.S. federal income tax consequences relevant to holders of Rallybio Common Stock. In addition, it does not address consequences relevant to holders of Rallybio Common Stock that are subject to particular U.S. or non-U.S. tax rules, including, without limitation, to holders of Rallybio Common Stock that are:

- persons who do not hold their Rallybio Common Stock as a “capital asset” within the meaning of Section 1221 of the Code;
- brokers, dealers or traders in securities, banks, insurance companies, other financial institutions or mutual funds;
- real estate investment trusts; regulated investment companies; tax-exempt organizations or governmental organizations;
- pass-through entities such as partnerships, S corporations, disregarded entities for federal income tax purposes and limited liability companies (and investors therein);
- subject to the alternative minimum tax provisions of the Code;
- persons who hold their shares as part of a hedge, wash sale, synthetic security, conversion transaction or other integrated transaction;
- persons that have a functional currency other than the U.S. dollar;
- traders in securities who elect to apply a mark-to-market method of accounting;
- persons who hold shares of Rallybio Common Stock that may constitute “qualified small business stock” under Section 1202 of the Code or as “Section 1244 stock” for purposes of Section 1244 of the Code;

- persons who acquired their shares of Rallybio stock in a transaction subject to the gain rollover provisions of Section 1045 of the Code;
- persons subject to special tax accounting rules as a result of any item of gross income with respect to Rallybio stock being taken into account in an "applicable financial statement" (as defined in the Code);
- persons deemed to sell Rallybio Common Stock under the constructive sale provisions of the Code;
- persons who acquired their shares of Rallybio Common Stock pursuant to the exercise of options or otherwise as compensation or through a tax-qualified retirement plan or through the exercise of a warrant or conversion rights under convertible instruments; and
- expatriates or former citizens or long-term residents of the United States.

Holders of Rallybio Common Stock subject to particular U.S. or non-U.S. tax rules, including those that are described in the preceding paragraph, are urged to consult their own tax advisors regarding the consequences to them of the reverse stock split.

If an entity that is treated as a partnership for U.S. federal income tax purposes (or any other pass-through entity) holds Rallybio stock, the U.S. federal income tax treatment of a partner in the partnership or other pass-through entity will generally depend upon the status of the partner, the activities of the partnership or other pass-through entity and certain determinations made at the partner level. If you are a partner of a partnership or other pass-through entity holding Rallybio Common Stock, you should consult your tax advisors regarding the tax consequences of the Merger.

In addition, the following discussion does not address (a) any tax consequences of transactions effectuated before, after or at the same time as the reverse stock split, whether or not they are in connection with the reverse stock split, except as specifically provided below; (b) the tax consequences of the reverse stock split under state, local and foreign tax laws; (c) any U.S. federal non-income tax consequences of the reverse stock split, including estate, gift or other tax consequences; or (d) the Medicare contribution tax on net investment income. No ruling from the IRS has been or will be requested in connection with the reverse stock split. Rallybio stockholders should be aware that the IRS could adopt a position contrary to that set forth in this discussion and which could be sustained by a court.

STOCKHOLDERS SHOULD CONSULT THEIR TAX ADVISORS WITH RESPECT TO THE APPLICATION OF THE U.S. FEDERAL INCOME TAX LAWS TO THEIR PARTICULAR SITUATIONS AS WELL AS ANY TAX CONSEQUENCES OF THE REVERSE STOCK SPLIT ARISING UNDER THE U.S. FEDERAL ESTATE OR GIFT TAX LAWS OR UNDER THE LAWS OF ANY STATE, LOCAL OR NON-U.S. TAXING JURISDICTION OR UNDER ANY APPLICABLE INCOME TAX TREATY.

Tax Consequences of the Reverse Stock Split

The proposed reverse stock split should constitute a "recapitalization" for U.S. federal income tax purposes pursuant to Section 368(a)(1)(E) of the Code. As a result, a U.S. holder should not recognize gain or loss upon the proposed reverse stock split, except with respect to cash received in lieu of a fractional share of Rallybio Common Stock, as discussed below. A U.S. holder's aggregate adjusted tax basis in the shares of Rallybio Common Stock received pursuant to the proposed reverse stock split should equal the aggregate adjusted tax basis of the shares of the Rallybio Common Stock surrendered (excluding any portion of such basis that is allocated to any fractional share of Rallybio Common Stock), and such U.S. holder's holding period in the shares of Rallybio Common Stock received should include the holding period in the shares of Rallybio Common Stock surrendered. U.S. Treasury Regulations provide detailed rules for allocating the tax basis and holding period of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock surrendered to the shares of Rallybio Common Stock received in a recapitalization pursuant to the proposed reverse stock split. U.S. holders of shares of Rallybio Common Stock acquired on different dates and at different prices should consult their tax advisors regarding the allocation of the tax basis and holding period of such shares. It is possible that the IRS or a court could determine that the issuance of the Rallybio CVRs (and/or any payments thereon) and the proposed reverse stock split constitute a single "recapitalization" for U.S. federal income tax purposes with the Rallybio CVRs constituting taxable "boot" received in such recapitalization exchange. In such case, the tax consequences of the Rallybio CVRs and the proposed reverse stock split would differ from those described above, including with respect to the timing and character of income.

Cash in Lieu of Fractional Shares

A U.S. holder that receives cash in lieu of a fractional share of Rallybio Common Stock pursuant to the proposed reverse stock split should recognize capital gain or loss in an amount equal to the difference between the amount of cash received and the U.S. holder's tax basis in the shares of Rallybio Common Stock surrendered that is allocated to such fractional share of Rallybio Common Stock. Such capital gain or loss should be long-term capital gain or loss if the U.S. holder's holding period for Rallybio Common Stock surrendered exceeded one year at the reverse stock split effective time.

Information Reporting and Backup Withholding

Payments of cash made in lieu of a fractional share of Rallybio Common Stock may, under certain circumstances, be subject to information reporting and backup withholding. To avoid backup withholding, each holder of Rallybio Common Stock that does not otherwise establish an exemption should furnish its taxpayer identification number and comply with the applicable certification procedures.

Backup withholding is not an additional tax. Any amounts withheld will be allowed as a credit against the holder's U.S. federal income tax liability and may entitle such holder to a refund, provided the required information is timely furnished to the IRS. Holders of Rallybio Common Stock should consult their tax advisors regarding their qualification for an exemption from backup withholding and the procedures for obtaining such an exemption.

Required Vote

The affirmative vote of a majority of the total votes cast by the holders of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting, assuming a quorum is present, is required to approve the Reverse Stock Split Proposal. Abstentions and broker non-votes (if any) will have no effect on the outcome of the vote on the Reverse Stock Split Proposal.

The Merger is conditioned upon the approval of the Reverse Stock Split Proposal (or the waiver thereof in accordance with the terms of the Merger Agreement). If the Merger is not consummated for any reason, the actions contemplated by the Reverse Stock Split Proposal may still be effected if the Reverse Stock Split Proposal is approved. The closing of the Concurrent Financing is conditioned upon the satisfaction or waiver of each of the conditions to the Closing as well as certain other conditions. Therefore, the Concurrent Financing cannot be consummated without the approval of the Reverse Stock Split Proposal (or the waiver thereof). Rallybio may still elect to proceed with the reverse stock split if the Reverse Stock Split Proposal is approved by Rallybio stockholders even if Proposal No. 1 is not approved, or even if approved, the Merger is not consummated.

Certain of Rallybio's stockholders have agreed to vote any shares of common stock owned by them in favor of the Contemplated Transactions including (a) the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, (b) the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, (c) the Name Change Proposal, (d) the Authorized Share Proposal, and (e) the other actions contemplated by the Merger Agreement, against approval of any proposal made in opposition to, or in competition with, the Merger Agreement or the consummation of the Merger, and against any alternative acquisition proposals. See "Agreements Related to the Merger—Support Agreements" for more information.

PROPOSAL NO. 3—THE NAME CHANGE PROPOSAL

General

At the Rallybio annual meeting, Rallybio stockholders will be asked to approve an amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation to effect the name change of "Rallybio Corporation" to "Candid Therapeutics, Inc." effective only upon the completion of the Merger.

The proposed form of certificate of amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation, a copy of which is attached as Annex J to this proxy statement/prospectus, will affect the name change.

Effects of the Name Change Amendment

If the Rallybio stockholders approve the amendment to Rallybio's certificate of incorporation effecting the name change, Rallybio will file the certificate of amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware upon the completion of the Merger.

Following the Name Change Amendment and resulting change of the Rallybio's corporate name, the common stock of the combined company will trade on Nasdaq under the symbol "CDRX." Stockholders will not experience any change in their rights as a stockholder as a result of this amendment to the Rallybio charter. Stockholders will not be required to submit their stock certificates for exchange as a result of this proposed name change. Following the effective date of the name change, all new stock certificates issued by us will use our new name.

Required Vote

The affirmative vote of a majority of the votes properly cast for and against by the holders of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote on at the Rallybio annual meeting is required to approve the Name Change Proposal. Abstentions and broker non-votes (if any) will have no effect on the outcome of the vote on the Name Change Proposal.

The Merger is conditioned upon the approval of the Name Change Proposal (or the waiver thereof in accordance with the terms of the Merger Agreement). Notwithstanding the approval of the Name Change Proposal, if the Merger is not consummated for any reason, the actions contemplated by the Name Change Proposal will not be effected. The closing of the Concurrent Financing is conditioned upon the satisfaction or waiver of each of the conditions to the Closing as well as certain other conditions. Therefore, the Concurrent Financing cannot be consummated without the approval of the Name Change Proposal (or the waiver thereof).

Certain of Rallybio's stockholders and Candid's equityholders have agreed to vote any shares of common stock owned by them in favor of the Contemplated Transactions including: (a) the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, (b) the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, (c) the Name Change Proposal, (d) the Authorized Share Proposal, and (e) the other actions contemplated by the Merger Agreement, against approval of any proposal made in opposition to, or in competition with, the Merger Agreement or the consummation of the Merger, and against any alternative acquisition proposals. See "Agreements Related to the Merger—Support Agreements" for more information.

PROPOSAL NO. 4—THE AUTHORIZED SHARE PROPOSAL

General

The Rallybio Board has determined that it is advisable to increase the authorized number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock from 200,000,000 shares to 500,000,000 shares, and has voted to recommend that the stockholders adopt an amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation effecting the proposed increase. The full text of the proposed amendment to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation is attached to this proxy statement as Annex K.

As of February 27, 2026, and assuming a 1-for-2.5 reverse stock split of Rallybio Common Stock of Rallybio Common Stock to be implemented immediately prior to the Closing and upon the approval of the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, 2,115,870 shares of Rallybio Common Stock were issued and outstanding (excluding treasury shares) and approximately an additional 545,476 shares of Rallybio Common Stock were reserved for issuance upon the settlement or exercise of outstanding equity awards and pre-funded warrants and a total of approximately 273,988 shares of Rallybio Common Stock were available for future issuance under Rallybio's existing equity plans. Additionally, Rallybio expects that it will issue 62,246,687 shares of Rallybio Common Stock in the Merger, assuming a 1-for-2.5 reverse stock split of Rallybio Common Stock of Rallybio Common Stock to be implemented prior to the consummation of the Merger as may be adjusted and as discussed in this proxy statement/prospectus and based on the assumed Exchange Ratio, excluding any shares that may be issued in connection with the exercise of options assumed by Rallybio. Following the issuance of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock in the Merger and upon the approval of the 2026 Plan Proposal and the 2026 ESPP Proposal, a total of approximately 13,478,389 shares of Rallybio Common Stock is expected to be available for future issuance assuming the approval of this Proposal No. 4.

The Rallybio Board believes it continues to be in Rallybio's best interest to have sufficient additional authorized but unissued shares of Rallybio Common Stock available in order to provide flexibility for corporate action and strategic transactions in the future. Management believes that the availability of additional authorized shares for issuance from time to time in the Rallybio Board's discretion in connection with future financings, investment opportunities, stock splits or dividends or for other corporate purposes is desirable in order to avoid repeated separate amendments to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation and the delay and expense incurred in holding special meetings of the stockholders to approve such amendments. Rallybio currently has no specific understandings, arrangements or agreements with respect to any future acquisitions that would require Rallybio to issue a material amount of new shares of Rallybio Common Stock. However, the Rallybio Board believes that the currently available unissued shares do not provide sufficient flexibility for corporate action in the future.

Rallybio will not solicit further authorization by vote of the stockholders for the issuance of the additional shares of Rallybio Common Stock proposed to be authorized, except as required by law, regulatory authorities or rules of Nasdaq or any other stock exchange on which the Rallybio Common Stock may then be listed. The issuance of additional shares of Rallybio Common Stock could have the effect of diluting existing stockholder earnings per share, book value per share and voting power. Rallybio stockholders do not have any preemptive right to purchase or subscribe for any part of any new or additional issuance of Rallybio's securities.

In addition to the corporate purposes mentioned above, an increase in the authorized number shares of Rallybio Common Stock may make it more difficult to, or discourage an attempt to, obtain control of Rallybio by means of a takeover bid that the Rallybio Board determines is not in the best interest of Rallybio and its stockholders. However, the Rallybio Board does not intend or view the proposed increase in the number of authorized shares of Rallybio Common Stock as an anti-takeover measure and is not aware of any attempt or plan to obtain control of Rallybio.

Required Vote

The affirmative vote of the holders of at least seventy-five percent of the outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting is required to approve the Name Change Proposal. Abstentions and broker non-votes (if any) will have the same effect as a vote "AGAINST" the Authorized Share Proposal.

The Merger is not conditioned upon the approval of the Authorized Share Proposal.

Certain of Rallybio's stockholders and Candid's equityholders have agreed to vote any shares of common stock owned by them in favor of the Contemplated Transactions including: (a) the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, (b) the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, (c) the Name Change Proposal, (d) the Authorized Share Proposal, and (e) the other actions contemplated by the Merger Agreement, against approval of any proposal made in opposition to, or in competition with, the Merger Agreement or the consummation of the Merger, and against any alternative acquisition proposals. See "Agreements Related to the Merger—Support Agreements" for more information.

PROPOSAL NO. 5—THE DIRECTOR ELECTION PROPOSAL

General

In accordance with the Rallybio's certificate of incorporation and bylaws, the Rallybio Board is divided into three classes. The members of each class are elected to serve a three-year term with the term of office of each class ending in successive years. Helen Boudreau, M.B.A., Lucian Iancovici, M.D. and Christine A. Nash, M.B.A. are the Class II directors whose terms expire at Rallybio's 2026 annual meeting of stockholders. Helen Boudreau, M.B.A., Lucian Iancovici, M.D. and Christine A. Nash, M.B.A. have been nominated for and have agreed to stand for re-election to the Rallybio Board to serve as a Class II director of Rallybio for three years and until their successors are duly elected and qualified or until their earlier death, resignation or removal.

It is intended that, unless you give contrary instructions, shares represented by proxies will be voted for the election of each of the nominees listed above. Rallybio has no reason to believe that any nominee will be unable to serve. In the event that either or both nominees are unexpectedly not available to serve, proxies may be voted for another person nominated as a substitute by the Rallybio Board, or the Rallybio Board may reduce the number of directors to be elected at the annual meeting. Information relating to each nominee for election as director and for each continuing director, including his or her period of service as a director of Rallybio, principal occupation and other biographical material is shown earlier in this proxy statement.

Rallybio stockholders should understand, however, that if the Merger is consummated, the effect of the approval of the director nominees named in the Director Election Proposal will be limited because the composition of the Rallybio Board will be reconstituted upon completion of the Merger in accordance with the Merger Agreement. Immediately following the Merger, the combined company's board of directors will be designated by Candid. All of Rallybio's current directors are expected to resign from their positions as directors of Rallybio, effective as of the Effective Time. For more information, see the section titled "Management Following the Merger."

The number of votes cast with respect to that director's election excludes abstentions and broker non-votes with respect to that director's election. In contested elections where the number of director nominees exceeds the number of directors to be elected, the voting standard will be a plurality of the shares present virtually in person or by proxy and entitled to vote.

The Merger is not conditioned upon the approval of the Director Election Proposal.

Unless otherwise instructed, it is the intention of the persons named in the accompanying proxy card to vote shares represented by properly executed proxy cards "FOR" the approval of the Director Election Proposal.

PROPOSAL NO. 6—THE AUDITOR RATIFICATION PROPOSAL

General

Rallybio's stockholders are being asked to ratify the selection by the audit committee of the Rallybio Board (the "audit committee") of Deloitte as Rallybio's independent registered public accounting firm for the fiscal year ending December 31, 2026. Deloitte has served as Rallybio's independent registered public accounting firm since 2018.

The audit committee annually reviews the independent registered public accounting firm's independence, including reviewing all relationships between the independent registered public accounting firm and us and any disclosed relationships or services that may impact the objectivity and independence of the independent registered public accounting firm, and the independent registered public accounting firm's performance. Although ratification is not required by Rallybio's bylaws or otherwise, the Rallybio Board is submitting the selection of Deloitte to Rallybio's stockholders for ratification as a matter of good corporate practice. If the selection is not ratified, the audit committee will consider whether it is appropriate to select another independent registered public accounting firm. Even if the selection is ratified, the audit committee in its discretion may select a different registered public accounting firm at any time during the year if the committee determines that such a change would be in the best interests of Rallybio and its stockholders.

A representative of Deloitte is expected to be present at the Rallybio annual meeting and will have an opportunity to make a statement if he or she desires to do so and to respond to appropriate questions from Rallybio's stockholders.

Policy on Audit Committee Pre-Approval of Audit and Permissible Non-Audit Services of Independent Registered Public Accounting Firm

The audit committee pre-approves all auditing services, internal control related services and permitted non-audit services (including the fees and terms thereof) to be performed by Deloitte, subject to the de minimis exception for non-audit services that are approved by the audit committee prior to the completion of an audit. The audit committee may delegate pre-approval authority to one or more members of the audit committee consistent with applicable law and listing standards, provided that the decisions of such audit committee member or members must be presented to the full audit committee at its next scheduled meeting. The audit committee is responsible for the audit fee negotiations associated with the retention of Deloitte.

Abstentions and broker non-votes (if any) will have no effect on the outcome of the vote on the Auditor Ratification Proposal.

The Merger is not conditioned upon the approval of the Auditor Ratification Proposal.

Unless otherwise instructed, it is the intention of the persons named in the accompanying proxy card to vote shares represented by properly executed proxy cards "FOR" the approval of the Auditor Ratification Proposal.

THE RALLYBIO BOARD UNANIMOUSLY RECOMMENDS THAT YOU VOTE "FOR" THE AUDITOR RATIFICATION PROPOSAL.

REPORT OF THE AUDIT COMMITTEE

The information contained in this report shall not be deemed to be “soliciting material” or “filed” or incorporated by reference in future filings with the SEC, or subject to the liabilities of Section 18 of the Exchange Act, except to the extent that Rallybio specifically incorporates it by reference into a document filed under the Securities Act or the Exchange Act.

We operate in accordance with a written charter adopted by our Board of Directors and reviewed annually by the audit committee. We are responsible for overseeing the quality and integrity of Rallybio's accounting, auditing and financial reporting practices. In accordance with the rules of the SEC and Nasdaq, the audit committee is composed entirely of members who are independent, as defined by the listing standards of Nasdaq and Rallybio's Corporate Governance Guidelines. Further, the Rallybio Board has determined that one of our members (Ms. Boudreau) is an audit committee financial expert as defined by the rules of the SEC.

We met 4 times during the fiscal year 2025 with Rallybio's management and Deloitte & Touche LLP (“Deloitte”), Rallybio's independent registered public accounting firm, including, but not limited to, meetings held to review and discuss the annual audited and quarterly financial statements and Rallybio's earnings press releases.

We believe that we fully discharged our oversight responsibilities as described in our charter, including with respect to the audit process. We reviewed and discussed our audited financial statements for the fiscal year ended December 31, 2025, with management and Deloitte. Management has the responsibility for the preparation of Rallybio's financial statements, and Deloitte has the responsibility for the audit of those statements. We discussed with Deloitte the matters required to be discussed by Public Company Accounting Oversight Board (“PCAOB”), Auditing Standard No. 1301 and the SEC. We received the written disclosures and the letter from Deloitte pursuant to Rule 3526, Communication with Audit Committees Concerning Independence, of the PCAOB, concerning any relationships between Deloitte and Rallybio and the potential effects of any disclosed relationships on Deloitte's independence, and discussed with Deloitte its independence. We reviewed with Deloitte their audit plans, audit scope, identification of audit risks and their audit efforts, and discussed and reviewed the results of Deloitte's examination of Rallybio's financial statements both with and without management.

We considered any fees paid to Deloitte for the provision of non-audit related services and do not believe that these fees compromise Deloitte's independence in performing the audit.

Based on these reviews and discussions with management and Deloitte, we approved the inclusion of Rallybio Corporation's audited financial statements in its Annual Report on Form 10-K for the fiscal year ended December 31, 2025 for filing with the SEC. We also have selected Deloitte as the independent registered public accounting firm for the fiscal year ending December 31, 2026, subject to ratification by Rallybio Corporation's stockholders.

PROPOSAL NO. 7—THE 2026 PLAN PROPOSAL

Unless otherwise indicated or the context otherwise requires, references in this section to the “Company,” “we,” “our,” “us,” or similar terms refer to the combined company and its subsidiaries following the Merger.

Overview

Rallybio stockholders are also being asked to consider and vote upon the 2026 Plan Proposal to approve the combined company's 2026 Equity Incentive Plan (the “2026 Plan”). The Rallybio Board initially approved the 2026 Plan on March 16, 2026, subject to Rallybio stockholder approval. If the Rallybio stockholders approve the 2026 Plan, the parties have agreed under the terms of the Merger Agreement that the 2026 Plan will become effective on the date immediately following the consummation of the Merger. If the 2026 Plan is not approved by the Rallybio stockholders, it will not become effective and no awards will be granted thereunder. The 2026 Plan is described in more detail below.

The summary is qualified in its entirety by reference to the text of the 2026 Plan, a copy of which is attached as Annex L to this proxy statement/prospectus. Rallybio stockholders should refer to the 2026 Plan for more complete and detailed information about the terms and conditions of the 2026 Plan.

2026 Equity Incentive Plan

The 2026 Plan will be the successor to and continuation of the Rallybio Corporation 2021 Equity Incentive Plan (the “2021 Plan”). Once the 2026 Plan becomes effective, no further grants will be made under the 2021 Plan.

Eligibility. Any individual who is an employee of us or any of our affiliates, or any person who provides services to us or our affiliates, including members of our board of directors, is eligible to receive awards under the 2026 Plan at the discretion of the plan administrator. If the 2026 Plan Proposal is approved by the Rallybio stockholders, all of our nonemployee directors (presently expected to be six individuals), all of employees, and consultants (as of) expected to continue with us after the Merger will be eligible to receive awards following the consummation of the Merger.

Types of Awards. The 2026 Plan provides for the grant of incentive stock options (“ISOs”) to employees, including employees of any parent or subsidiary, and for the grant of nonstatutory stock options (“NSOs”), stock appreciation rights, restricted stock awards, restricted stock unit awards, performance awards and other forms of stock awards to employees, directors, and consultants, including employees and consultants of our affiliates.

Authorized Shares. If the request to approve the 2026 Plan is approved by Rallybio's stockholders, a number of shares of our common stock will be available for grant under the 2026 Plan equal to (a) the product of (i) fifteen percent (15%), multiplied by (ii) the total number of shares of our common stock outstanding plus all shares of our common stock issuable upon conversion or exercise of outstanding securities and rights, including (without limitation) preferred stock on an as-converted basis, equity awards, warrants (including pre-funded warrants), and any convertible indebtedness or similar instruments, whether or not then vested or exercisable, determined on the effective date of the 2026 Plan, subject to adjustment for specified changes in our capitalization (the “Share Reserve”), plus (b) up to the number of shares of our common stock subject to outstanding stock awards granted under the 2021 Plan that, on or after the 2026 Plan becomes effective, expire or otherwise terminate prior to exercise or settlement; are not issued because the stock award is settled in cash; are forfeited or repurchased because of the failure to vest; or are reacquired or withheld to satisfy a tax withholding obligation or the purchase or exercise price if any, as such shares becomes available from time to time. Shares issued in connection with a merger or acquisition as permitted by applicable stock exchange listing rules, including Nasdaq Listing Rule 5635(c), will not reduce the number of shares available for issuance under the 2026 Plan. Accordingly, any Candid stock options that are converted into our common stock as part of the Merger are not counted against the foregoing equity pool established by the 2026 Plan. In addition, the number of shares of our common stock reserved for issuance under the 2026 Plan will automatically increase on January 1 of each calendar year, starting on January 1, 2027 through January 1, 2036, in an amount equal to 5% of the total number of shares of our common stock outstanding plus all shares of our common stock issuable upon conversion or exercise of outstanding securities and rights, including (without limitation) preferred stock on an as-converted basis, equity awards, warrants (including pre-funded warrants), and any convertible indebtedness or similar instruments, whether or not then vested or exercisable, on December 31 of the preceding year, or a lesser number of shares determined by our board of directors. The maximum number of shares of our common stock that may be issued on the exercise of ISOs under the 2026 Plan is equal to three multiplied by the Share Reserve. As of _____, the record date for the Rallybio annual meeting, the closing price of Rallybio Common Stock as reported on Nasdaq was $ _____ per share.

Shares subject to stock awards granted under the 2026 Plan that expire or terminate without being exercised in full, or that are paid out in cash rather than in shares, do not reduce the number of shares available for issuance under the 2026 Plan. Additionally, shares become available for future grant under the 2026 Plan if they were issued stock awards under the 2026 Plan and we repurchase them or they are forfeited because of a failure to meet a contingency or condition required for the vesting of such shares, or if such shares are used to pay the exercise price of a stock award or to satisfy the tax withholding obligations related to a stock award.

Plan Administration. Our board of directors, or a duly authorized committee of our board of directors, will administer the 2026 Plan. Our board of directors may delegate concurrent authority to administer the 2026 Plan to our compensation committee under the terms of our compensation committee's charter. We sometimes refer to our board of directors, or the applicable committee with the power to administer our equity incentive plans, as the administrator. The administrator may also delegate to one or more persons or bodies the authority to (i) designate employees (other than officers) to receive specified awards, and (ii) determine the number of shares subject to such awards. Such persons or bodies may not grant a stock award to themselves and neither our board nor any committee may delegate authority to any person or body (who is not a member of our board or such body that is not comprised solely of members of our board) the authority to determine the fair market value of our common stock for purposes of the 2026 Plan.

The administrator has the authority to determine the terms of awards, including recipients, the exercise, purchase or strike price of awards, if any, the number of shares subject to each award, the fair market value of a share of common stock, the vesting schedule applicable to the awards, together with any vesting acceleration, and the form of consideration, if any, payable upon exercise or settlement of the award and the terms of the award agreements for use under the 2026 Plan.

In addition, subject to the terms of the 2026 Plan, the administrator also has the power to modify outstanding awards under the 2026 Plan, including the authority to reprice any outstanding option or stock appreciation right, cancel and re-grant any outstanding option or stock appreciation right in exchange for new stock awards, cash or other consideration, or take any other action that is treated as a repricing under generally accepted accounting principles, with the consent of any materially adversely affected participant.

Stock Options. ISOs and NSOs are granted under stock option agreements adopted by the administrator. The administrator determines the exercise price for stock options, within the terms and conditions of the 2026 Plan, provided that the exercise price of a stock option generally cannot be less than 100% of the fair market value of our common stock on the date of grant. Options granted under the 2026 Plan vest at the rate specified in the stock option agreement as determined by the administrator.

Tax Limitations on ISOs. The aggregate fair market value, determined at the time of grant, of our common stock with respect to ISOs that are exercisable for the first time by an optionholder during any calendar year under all of our stock plans may not exceed $100,000. Options or portions thereof that exceed such limit will generally be treated as NSOs. No ISO may be granted to any person who, at the time of the grant, owns or is deemed to own stock possessing more than 10% of our total combined voting power or that of any of our affiliates unless (i) the option exercise price is at least 110% of the fair market value of the stock subject to the option on the date of grant; and (ii) the option is not exercisable after the expiration of five years from the date of grant.

Restricted Stock Unit Awards. Restricted stock units are granted under restricted stock unit award agreements adopted by the administrator. Restricted stock units may be granted in consideration for any form of legal consideration that may be acceptable to our board of directors and permissible under applicable law. A restricted stock unit may be settled by cash, delivery of stock, a combination of cash and stock as deemed appropriate by the administrator, or in any other form of consideration set forth in the restricted stock unit agreement. Additionally, dividend equivalents may be credited in respect of shares covered by a restricted stock unit. Except as otherwise provided in the applicable award agreement, restricted stock units that have not vested will be forfeited once the participant's continuous service ends for any reason.

Restricted Stock Awards. Restricted stock awards are granted under restricted stock award agreements adopted by the administrator. A restricted stock award may be awarded in consideration for cash, check, bank draft or money order, past services to us, or any other form of legal consideration that may be acceptable to our board of directors and permissible under applicable law. The administrator determines the terms and conditions of restricted stock awards, including vesting and forfeiture terms. If a participant's service relationship with us ends for any reason, we may receive any or all of the shares of our common stock held by the participant that have not vested as of the date the participant terminates service with us through a forfeiture condition or a repurchase right.

Stock Appreciation Rights. Stock appreciation rights are granted under stock appreciation grant agreements adopted by the administrator. The administrator determines the purchase price or strike price for a stock appreciation right, which generally cannot be less than 100% of the fair market value of our common stock on the date of grant. A stock appreciation right granted under the 2026 Plan vests at the rate specified in the stock appreciation right agreement as determined by the administrator.

Performance Awards. The 2026 Plan permits the grant of performance-based stock and cash awards. The administrator may structure awards so that the shares of our stock, cash, or other property will be issued or paid only following the achievement of certain pre-established performance goals during a designated performance period. The performance criteria that will be used to establish such performance goals may be based on any one of, or combination of, the following as determined by the administrator: earnings (including earnings per share and net earnings); earnings before interest, taxes and depreciation; earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization; total stockholder return; return on equity or average stockholder's equity; return on assets, investment, or capital employed; share price; margin (including gross margin); income (before or after taxes); operating income; operating income after taxes; pre-tax profit; operating cash flow; sales or revenue targets; increases in revenue or product revenue; expenses and cost reduction goals; improvement in or attainment of working capital levels; economic value added (or an equivalent metric); market share; cash flow; cash flow per share; share price performance; debt reduction; customer satisfaction; stockholder's equity; capital expenditures; debt levels; operating profit or net operating profit; workforce diversity; growth of net income or operating income; billings; financing; regulatory milestones; stockholder liquidity; corporate governance and compliance; intellectual property; personnel matters; progress of internal research; progress of partnered programs; partner satisfaction; budget management; partner or collaborator achievements; internal controls, including those related to the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002; investor relations, analysts and communication; implementation or completion of projects or processes; employee retention; number of users, including unique users; strategic partnerships or transactions (including in-licensing and out-licensing of intellectual property); establishing relationships with respect to the marketing, distribution and sale of the Company's products, if approved; supply chain achievements; co-development, co-marketing, profit sharing, joint venture or other similar arrangements; individual performance goals; corporate development and planning goals; and other measures of performance selected by the administrator.

The performance goals may be based on a company-wide basis, with respect to one or more business units, divisions, affiliates, or business segments, and in either absolute terms or relative to the performance of one or more comparable companies or the performance of one or more relevant indices. Unless specified otherwise (i) in the award agreement at the time the award is granted or (ii) in such other document setting forth the performance goals at the time the goals are established, we will appropriately make adjustments in the method of calculating the attainment of performance goals as follows: (1) to exclude restructuring and/or other nonrecurring charges; (2) to exclude exchange rate effects; (3) to exclude the effects of changes to generally accepted accounting principles; (4) to exclude the effects of any statutory adjustments to corporate tax rates; (5) to exclude the effects of items that are "unusual" in nature or occur "infrequently" as determined under generally accepted accounting principles; (6) to exclude the dilutive effects of acquisitions or joint ventures; (7) to assume that any business divested by us achieved performance objectives at targeted levels during the balance of a performance period following such divestiture; (8) to exclude the effect of any change in the outstanding shares of our common stock by reason of any stock dividend or split, stock repurchase, reorganization, recapitalization, merger, consolidation, spin-off, combination or exchange of shares or other similar corporate change, or any distributions to common stockholders other than regular cash dividends; (9) to exclude the effects of stock based compensation and the award of bonuses under our bonus plans; (10) to exclude costs incurred in connection with potential acquisitions or divestitures that are required to be expensed under generally accepted accounting principles; and (11) to exclude the goodwill and intangible asset impairment charges that are required to be recorded under generally accepted accounting principles. In addition, we retain the discretion to reduce or eliminate the compensation or economic benefit due upon attainment of the goals. The performance goals may differ from participant to participant and from award to award.

Other Stock Awards. The administrator may grant other awards based in whole or in part by reference to our common stock. The administrator will set the number of shares under the stock award and all other terms and conditions of such awards.

Non-Employee Director Compensation Limit. The aggregate value of all compensation granted or paid to any non-employee director with respect to any calendar year, including stock awards granted and cash fees paid by us to such non-employee director, will not exceed $750,000 in total value, or in the event such non-employee director is first appointed or elected to the board during such calendar year, $1,000,000 in total value (in each case, calculating the value of any such stock awards based on the grant date fair value of such stock awards for financial reporting purposes).

Changes to Capital Structure. In the event there is a specified type of change in our capital structure, such as a stock split, reverse stock split, or recapitalization, appropriate adjustments will be made to (i) the class and maximum number of shares reserved for issuance under the 2026 Plan, (ii) the class and maximum number of shares by which the Share Reserve may increase automatically each year, (iii) the class and maximum number of shares that may be issued on the exercise of ISOs, and (iv) the class and number of shares and exercise price, strike price, or purchase price, if applicable, of all outstanding stock awards.

Corporate Transactions. The following applies to stock awards under the 2026 Plan in the event of a corporate transaction, unless otherwise provided in a participant's stock award agreement or other written agreement with us or one of our affiliates or unless otherwise expressly provided by the administrator at the time of grant.

In the event of a corporate transaction, any stock awards outstanding under the 2026 Plan may be assumed, continued or substituted for by any surviving or acquiring corporation (or its parent company), and any reacquisition or repurchase rights held by us with respect to the stock award may be assigned to the successor (or its parent company). If the surviving or acquiring corporation (or its parent company) does not assume, continue or substitute for such stock awards, then with respect to any such stock awards that are held by participants whose continuous service has not terminated prior to the effective time of the transaction, or current participants, the vesting (and exercisability, if applicable) of such stock awards will be accelerated in full to a date prior to the effective time of the transaction (contingent upon the effectiveness of the transaction), and such stock awards will terminate if not exercised (if applicable) at or prior to the effective time of the transaction, and any reacquisition or repurchase rights held by us with respect to such stock awards will lapse (contingent upon the effectiveness of the transaction). With respect to performance awards with multiple vesting levels depending on performance level, unless otherwise provided by an award agreement or by the administrator, the award will accelerate at 100% of target. If the surviving or acquiring corporation (or its parent company) does not assume, continue or substitute for such stock awards, then with respect to any such stock awards that are held by persons other than current participants, such awards will terminate if not exercised (if applicable) prior to the effective time of the transaction, except that any reacquisition or repurchase rights held by us with respect to such stock awards will not terminate and may continue to be exercised notwithstanding the transaction. The administrator is not obligated to treat all stock awards or portions of stock awards in the same manner and is not obligated to take the same actions with respect to all participants.

In the event a stock award will terminate if not exercised prior to the effective time of a transaction, the administrator may provide, in its sole discretion, that the holder of such stock award may not exercise such stock award but instead will receive a payment equal in value to the excess (if any) of (i) the value of the property the participant would have received upon the exercise of the stock award over (ii) any exercise price payable by such holder in connection with such exercise.

Under the 2026 Plan, a corporate transaction is defined to include the consummation, in a single transaction or in a series of related transactions, of any one or more of the following events: (i) a sale or disposition of all or substantially all of our assets; (ii) a sale or disposition of more than 50% of our outstanding securities; (iii) a merger, consolidation or similar transaction where we do not survive the transaction; and (iv) a merger or consolidation where we do survive the transaction but the shares of our common stock outstanding before such transaction are converted or exchanged into other property by virtue of the transaction, unless otherwise provided in an award agreement or other written agreement between us and the award holder.

Change in Control. In the event of a change in control, as defined under the 2026 Plan, awards granted under the 2026 Plan will not receive automatic acceleration of vesting and exercisability, although this treatment may be provided for in an award agreement.

Under the 2026 Plan, a change in control is defined to include: (i) the acquisition by any person or company of more than 50% of the combined voting power of our then outstanding stock; (ii) a consummated merger, consolidation or similar transaction in which our stockholders immediately before the transaction do not own, directly or indirectly, more than 50% of the combined voting power of the surviving entity (or the parent of the surviving entity); (iii) a consummated sale, lease, exclusive license or other disposition of all or substantially all of our assets other than to an entity more than 50% of the combined voting power of which is owned by our stockholders; and (iv) an unapproved change in the majority of the board of directors.

Transferability. A participant may not transfer stock awards under the 2026 Plan other than by will, the laws of descent and distribution, or as otherwise provided under the 2026 Plan.

Plan Amendment or Termination. Our board of directors has the authority to amend, suspend, or terminate the 2026 Plan, provided that such action does not materially impair the existing rights of any participant without such participant's written consent. Certain material amendments also require the approval of our stockholders. No ISOs may be granted after the tenth anniversary of the date our board of directors adopted the 2026 Plan. No stock awards may be granted under the 2026 Plan while it is suspended or after it is terminated.

Clawback Policy. All awards granted under the 2026 Plan will be subject to recoupment in accordance with any clawback policy that the combined company is required to adopt pursuant to the listing standards of any national securities exchange or association on which the combined company's securities are listed or as is otherwise required by the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act or other applicable law, and any clawback policy that the combined company otherwise adopts, to the extent applicable and permissible under applicable law. In addition, the board of directors may impose such other clawback, recovery or recoupment provisions in an award agreement as the board determines necessary or appropriate, including but not limited to a reacquisition right in respect of previously acquired shares of common stock or other cash or property upon the occurrence of cause. No recovery of compensation under such a clawback policy will be an event giving rise to a participant's right to voluntarily terminate employment upon a "resignation for good reason," or for a "constructive termination" or any similar term under any plan of or agreement with the combined company.

U.S. Federal Income Tax Consequences

The following is a summary of the principal U.S. federal income tax consequences to participants and the combined company with respect to participation in the 2026 Plan, which will not become effective until the date immediately following the consummation of the Merger. This summary is not intended to be exhaustive and does not discuss the income tax laws of any local, state or foreign jurisdiction in which a participant may reside. The information is based upon current U.S. federal income tax rules and therefore is subject to change when those rules change. Because the tax consequences to any participant may depend on his or her particular situation, each participant should consult the participant's tax adviser regarding the federal, state, local and other tax consequences of the grant or exercise of an award or the disposition of stock acquired under the 2026 Plan. The 2026 Plan is not qualified under the provisions of Section 401(a) of the Code and is not subject to any of the provisions of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, as amended. The combined company's ability to realize the benefit of any tax deductions described below depends on the combined company's generation of taxable income as well as the requirement of reasonableness and the satisfaction of the combined company's tax reporting obligations.

Tax Consequences to the Participants

Nonstatutory Stock Options. Generally, there is no taxation upon the grant of a nonstatutory stock option. Upon exercise, a participant will recognize ordinary income equal to the excess, if any, of the fair market value of the underlying stock on the date of exercise of the stock option over the exercise price. If the participant is employed by the combined company or one of its affiliates, that income will be subject to withholding taxes. The participant's tax basis in those shares will be equal to their fair market value on the date of exercise of the stock option, and the participant's capital gain holding period for those shares will begin on the day after they are transferred to the participant. Subject to the requirement of reasonableness, the deduction limits under Section 162(m) of the Code and the satisfaction of a tax reporting obligation, the combined company will generally be entitled to a tax deduction equal to the taxable ordinary income realized by the participant.

Incentive Stock Options. The 2026 Plan provides for the grant of stock options that are intended to qualify as "incentive stock options," as defined in Section 422 of the Code. Under the Code, a participant generally is not subject to ordinary income tax upon the grant or exercise of an ISO. If the participant holds a share received upon exercise of an ISO for more than two years from the date the stock option was granted and more than one year from the date the stock option was exercised, which is referred to as the required holding period, the difference, if any, between the amount realized on a sale or other taxable disposition of that share and the participant's tax basis in that share will be long-term capital gain or loss. If, however, a participant disposes of a share acquired upon exercise of an ISO before the end of the required holding period, which is referred to as a disqualifying disposition, the participant generally will recognize ordinary income in the year of the disqualifying disposition equal to the excess, if any, of the fair market value of the share on the date of exercise of the stock option over the exercise price. However, if the sales proceeds are less than the fair market value of the share on the date of exercise of the stock option, the amount of ordinary income recognized by the participant will not exceed the gain, if any, realized on the sale. If the amount realized on a disqualifying disposition exceeds the fair market value of the share on the date of exercise of the stock option, that excess will be short-term or long-term capital gain, depending on whether the holding period for the share exceeds one year. For purposes of the alternative minimum tax, the amount by which the fair market value of a share of stock acquired upon exercise of an ISO exceeds the exercise price of the stock option generally will be an adjustment included in the participant's alternative minimum taxable income for the year in which the stock option is exercised. If, however, there is a disqualifying disposition of the share in the year in which the stock option is exercised, there will be no adjustment for alternative minimum tax purposes with respect to that share. In computing alternative minimum taxable income, the tax basis of a share acquired upon exercise of an ISO is increased by the amount of the adjustment taken into account with respect to that share for alternative minimum tax purposes in the year the stock option is exercised. The combined company is not allowed a tax deduction with respect to the grant or exercise of an ISO or the disposition of a share acquired upon exercise of an ISO after the required holding period. If there is a disqualifying disposition of a share, however, the combined company will generally be entitled to a tax deduction equal to the taxable ordinary income realized by the participant, subject to the requirement of reasonableness, the deduction limits under Section 162(m) of the Code and provided that either the employee includes that amount in income or the combined company timely satisfies its reporting requirements with respect to that amount.

Restricted Stock Awards. Generally, the recipient of a restricted stock award will recognize ordinary income at the time the stock is received equal to the excess, if any, of the fair market value of the stock received over any amount paid by the recipient in exchange for the stock. If, however, the stock is subject to restrictions constituting a substantial risk of forfeiture when it is received (for example, if the employee is required to work for a period of time in order to have the right to transfer or sell the stock), the recipient generally will not recognize income until the restrictions constituting a substantial risk of forfeiture lapse, at which time the recipient will recognize ordinary income equal to the excess, if any, of the fair market value of the stock on the date it becomes vested over any amount paid by the recipient in exchange for the stock. A recipient may, however, file an election with the IRS, within 30 days following the date of grant, to recognize ordinary income, as of the date of grant, equal to the excess, if any, of the fair market value of the stock on the date the award is granted over any amount paid by the recipient for the stock. The recipient's basis for the determination of gain or loss upon the subsequent disposition of shares acquired from a restricted stock award will be the amount paid for such shares plus any ordinary income recognized either when the stock is received or when the restrictions constituting a substantial risk of forfeiture lapse. Subject to the requirement of reasonableness, the deduction limits under Section 162(m) of the Code and the satisfaction of a tax reporting obligation, the combined company will generally be entitled to a tax deduction equal to the taxable ordinary income realized by the recipient of the restricted stock award.

Restricted Stock Unit Awards. Generally, the recipient of a restricted stock unit award will generally recognize ordinary income at the time the stock is delivered equal to the excess, if any, of (i) the fair market value of the stock received over any amount paid by the recipient in exchange for the stock or (ii) the amount of cash paid to the participant. The recipient's basis for the determination of gain or loss upon the subsequent disposition of shares acquired from a restricted stock unit award will be the amount paid for such shares plus any ordinary income recognized when the stock is delivered, and the participant's capital gain holding period for those shares will begin on the day after they are transferred to the participant. Subject to the requirement of reasonableness, the deduction limits under Section 162(m) of the Code and the satisfaction of a tax reporting obligation, the combined company will generally be entitled to a tax deduction equal to the taxable ordinary income realized by the recipient of the restricted stock unit award.

Stock Appreciation Rights. Generally, the recipient of a stock appreciation right will recognize ordinary income equal to the fair market value of the stock or cash received upon such exercise. Subject to the requirement of reasonableness, the deduction limits under Section 162(m) of the Code and the satisfaction of a tax reporting obligation, the combined company will generally be entitled to a tax deduction equal to the taxable ordinary income realized by the recipient of the stock appreciation right.

Tax Consequences to the Combined Company

Compensation of Covered Employees. The ability of the combined company to obtain a deduction for amounts paid under the 2026 Plan could be limited by Section 162(m) of the Code. Section 162(m) of the Code limits the combined company's ability to deduct compensation, for U.S. federal income tax purposes, paid during any year to a "covered employee" (within the meaning of Section 162(m) of the Code) in excess of $1 million.

Golden Parachute Payments. The ability of the combined company (or the ability of one of its subsidiaries) to obtain a deduction for future payments under the 2026 Plan could also be limited by the golden parachute rules of Section 280G of the Code, which prevent the deductibility of certain "excess parachute payments" made in connection with a change in control of an employer-corporation.

New Plan Benefits

The awards, if any, that will be made to eligible persons under the 2026 Plan are subject to the discretion of the combined company's board of directors. Therefore, Rallybio cannot currently determine the benefits or number of shares subject to awards that may be granted in the future nor may it determine the amounts that would have been granted in the last completed fiscal year if the 2026 Plan had been in effect.

Registration with the SEC

If the 2026 Plan is approved by Rallybio's stockholders and becomes effective, the combined company intends to file a registration statement on Form S-8 registering the shares reserved for issuance under the 2026 Plan as soon as reasonably practicable after the combined company becomes eligible to use such form.

Required Vote

The affirmative vote of a majority of the total votes cast by the holders of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting, assuming a quorum is present, is required to approve the 2026 Plan Proposal. Abstentions and broker non-votes will be treated as shares present for purposes of determining the presence of a quorum for the transaction of business at the Rallybio annual meeting, but will not be counted as votes cast and will have no effect on the outcome of the vote on the 2026 Plan Proposal.

The 2026 Plan Proposal is conditioned on the consummation of the Merger. If the Merger is not consummated, the 2026 Plan Proposal will have no effect, even if approved by Rallybio's stockholders.

The Merger is not conditioned upon the approval of the 2026 Plan Proposal.

Unless otherwise instructed, it is the intention of the persons named in the accompanying proxy card to vote shares represented by properly executed proxy cards "FOR" the approval of the 2026 Plan Proposal.

PROPOSAL NO. 8—THE 2026 ESPP PROPOSAL

Unless otherwise indicated or the context otherwise requires, references in this section to the “Company,” “we,” “our,” “us,” or similar terms refer to the combined company and its subsidiaries following the Merger.

Overview

Rallybio stockholders are also being asked to consider and vote upon the 2026 ESPP Proposal to approve the combined company's 2026 Employee Stock Purchase Plan (the “2026 ESPP”). The Rallybio Board initially approved the 2026 Plan on March 16, 2026, subject to Rallybio stockholder approval. If the Rallybio stockholders approve the 2026 ESPP Proposal, the parties have agreed under the terms of the Merger Agreement that the 2026 ESPP will become effective on the date immediately following the consummation of the Merger. If the 2026 ESPP is not approved by the Rallybio stockholders, it will not become effective. The 2026 ESPP is described in more detail below.

The summary is qualified in its entirety by reference to the text of the 2026 ESPP, a copy of which is attached as Annex M to this proxy statement/prospectus. Rallybio stockholders should refer to the 2026 ESPP for a more complete and detailed information about the terms and conditions of the 2026 ESPP.

2026 Employee Stock Purchase Plan

The purpose of the 2026 ESPP is to secure and retain the services of new employees, to retain the services of existing employees, and to provide incentives for such individuals to exert maximum efforts toward our success and that of our affiliates. Our 2026 ESPP will include two components. One component will be designed to allow eligible U.S. employees to purchase our common stock in a manner that may qualify for favorable tax treatment under Section 423 of the Code. The other component will permit the grant of purchase rights that do not qualify for such favorable tax treatment in order to allow deviations necessary to permit participation by eligible employees who are foreign nationals or employed outside of the U.S. while complying with applicable foreign laws. The 2026 ESPP will serve as the go-forward employee stock purchase plan for the combined company, and the combined company expects to commence offerings under the 2026 ESPP following the current offering period under the Rallybio Corporation 2021 Employee Stock Purchase Plan.

Eligibility. Our employees and the employees of any of our designated affiliates, will be eligible to participate in the 2026 ESPP, provided they may have to satisfy one or more of the following service requirements before participating in the 2026 ESPP, as determined by the administrator:

(1) customary employment with us or one of our affiliates for more than 20 hours per week and more than five months per calendar year or
(2) continuous employment with us or one of our affiliates for a minimum period of time, not to exceed two years, prior to the first date of an offering. In addition, our board of directors may also exclude from participation in the 2026 ESPP or any offering, employees who are “highly compensated employees” (within the meaning of Section 423(b)(4)(D) of the Code) or a subset of such highly compensated employees. If this 2026 ESPP Proposal is approved by the Rallybio stockholders, all of our employees and our related corporations (as of) will be eligible to participate in the 2026 ESPP following the consummation of the Merger. An employee may not be granted rights to purchase stock under the 423 Component of the 2026 ESPP (a) if such employee immediately after the grant would own stock (including stock issuable upon exercise of all such employee's purchase rights) possessing 5% or more of the total combined voting power or value of all classes of our common stock or (b) to the extent that such rights would accrue at a rate that exceeds $25,000 worth of our common stock for each calendar year that the rights remain outstanding. Our board of directors may approve different eligibility rules for the Non-423 Component.

Share Reserve. The 2026 ESPP authorizes the issuance of shares of our common stock under purchase rights granted to our employees or to employees of any of our designated affiliates. Following the consummation of the Merger, the maximum number of shares of our common stock that may be issued under the 2026 ESPP will not exceed the number of shares of our common stock equal to 1% of the total number of shares of our common stock outstanding plus all shares of our common stock issuable upon conversion or exercise of outstanding securities and rights, including (without limitation) preferred stock on an as-converted basis, equity awards, warrants (including pre-funded warrants), and any convertible indebtedness or similar instruments, whether or not then vested or exercisable, determined on the effective date of the 2026 ESPP, subject to adjustment for specified changes in our capitalization (the "Initial Share Reserve"). Additionally, the number of shares of our common stock reserved for issuance will automatically increase on January 1 of each calendar year, beginning on January 1, 2027 (assuming the 2026 ESPP becomes effective in 2026) through January 1, 2036, by the lesser of (i) 1% of the total number of shares of our common stock outstanding plus all shares of our common stock issuable upon conversion or exercise of outstanding securities and rights, including (without limitation) preferred stock on an as-converted basis, equity awards, warrants (including pre-funded warrants), and any convertible indebtedness or similar instruments, whether or not then vested or exercisable, on December 31 of the preceding calendar year, and (ii) a number of shares equal to three times the Initial Share Reserve; provided that before the date of any such increase, our board of directors may determine that such increase will be less than the amount set forth in clauses (i) and (ii). As of _____, the record date for the Rallybio annual meeting, the closing price of Rallybio Common Stock as reported on Nasdaq was $ _____ per share.

Administration. Our board of directors, or a duly authorized committee thereof, will administer our 2026 ESPP. Our board may delegate concurrent authority to administer the 2026 ESPP to our compensation committee under the terms of the compensation committee's charter. The 2026 ESPP is implemented through a series of offerings under which eligible employees are granted purchase rights to purchase shares of our common stock on specified dates during such offerings. Under the 2026 ESPP, we may specify offerings with durations of not more than 27 months and may specify shorter purchase periods within each offering. Each offering will have one or more purchase dates on which shares of our common stock will be purchased for employees participating in the offering. An offering under the 2026 ESPP may be terminated under certain circumstances.

Payroll Deductions. Generally, all regular employees, including executive officers, employed by us or by any of our designated affiliates, will be eligible to participate in the 2026 ESPP and to contribute, normally through payroll deductions, up to a maximum percentage of their earnings (as defined in the 2026 ESPP) or up to a set dollar amount for the purchase of our common stock under the 2026 ESPP. Unless otherwise determined by our board of directors, common stock will be purchased for the accounts of employees participating in the 2026 ESPP at a price per share that is at least the lesser of (i) 85% of the fair market value of a share of our common stock on the first date of an offering; or (ii) 85% of the fair market value of a share of our common stock on the date of purchase.

Limitations. Employees may have to satisfy one or more of the following service requirements before participating in the 2026 ESPP, as determined by our board of directors, including: (i) customary employment with us or one of our affiliates for more than 20 hours per week and more than five months per calendar year; or (ii) continuous employment with us or one of our affiliates for a minimum period of time (not to exceed two years). No employee may purchase shares under the 2026 ESPP at a rate in excess of $25,000 worth of our common stock based on the fair market value per share of our common stock at the beginning of an offering for each year such a purchase right is outstanding. Finally, no employee will be eligible for the grant of any purchase rights under the 2026 ESPP if immediately after such rights are granted, such employee has voting power over 5% or more of our outstanding capital stock measured by vote or value under Section 424(d) of the Code.

Changes to Capital Structure. In the event that there occurs a change in our capital structure through such actions as a stock split, merger, consolidation, reorganization, recapitalization, reincorporation, stock dividend, dividend in property other than cash, large nonrecurring cash dividend, liquidating dividend, combination of shares, exchange of shares, change in corporate structure, or similar transaction, the board of directors will make appropriate adjustments to: (i) the number of shares reserved under the 2026 ESPP; (ii) the maximum number of shares by which the share reserve may increase automatically each year; (iii) the number of shares and purchase price of all outstanding purchase rights; and (iv) the number of shares that are subject to purchase limits under ongoing offerings.

Corporate Transactions. In the event of certain significant corporate transactions, including the consummation, in a single transaction or in a series of related transactions, of any one or more of the following events: (i) a sale of all or substantially all of our assets; (ii) a sale or disposition of more than 50% of our outstanding securities; (iii) a merger or consolidation where we do not survive the transaction; and (iv) a merger or consolidation where we do survive the transaction but the shares of our common stock outstanding immediately before such transaction are converted or exchanged into other property by virtue of the transaction, any then-outstanding rights to purchase our stock under the 2026 ESPP may be assumed, continued or substituted for by any surviving or acquiring entity (or its parent company). If the surviving or acquiring entity (or its parent company) elects not to assume, continue, or substitute for such purchase rights, then the participants' accumulated payroll contributions will be used to purchase shares of our common stock within ten business days (or such other period specified by the board of directors) before such corporate transaction, and such purchase rights will terminate immediately after such purchase.

2026 ESPP Amendment or Termination. Our board of directors has the authority to amend or terminate our 2026 ESPP, provided that except in certain circumstances such amendment or termination may not materially impair any outstanding purchase rights without the holder's consent. We will obtain stockholder approval of any amendment to our 2026 ESPP as required by applicable law or listing requirements.

U.S. Federal Income Tax Consequences

The following is a summary of the principal U.S. federal income tax consequences to participants and the combined company with respect to participation in the 2026 ESPP. This summary is not intended to be exhaustive and does not discuss the income tax laws of any local, state or foreign jurisdiction in which a participant may reside. The information is based upon current U.S. federal income tax rules and therefore is subject to change when those rules change. Because the tax consequences to any participant may depend on his or her particular situation, each participant should consult the participant's tax adviser regarding the federal, state, local, and other tax consequences of the grant or exercise of a purchase right or the sale or other disposition of the combined company's common stock acquired under the 2026 ESPP. The 2026 ESPP is not qualified under the provisions of Section 401(a) of the Code and is not subject to any of the provisions of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, as amended.

Tax Consequences to Participants

423 Component of the 2026 ESPP. Rights granted under the 423 Component of the 2026 ESPP are intended to qualify for favorable U.S. federal income tax treatment associated with rights granted under an employee stock purchase plan which qualifies under the provisions of Section 423 of the Code.

A participant will be taxed on amounts withheld for the purchase of shares of the combined company's common stock as if such amounts were actually received. Otherwise, no income will be taxable to a participant as a result of the granting or exercise of a purchase right until a sale or other disposition of the acquired shares. The taxation upon such sale or other disposition will depend upon the holding period of the acquired shares.

If the shares are sold or otherwise disposed of more than two years after the beginning of the offering period and more than one year after the shares are transferred to the participant, then the lesser of the following will be treated as ordinary income: (i) the excess of the fair market value of the shares at the time of such sale or other disposition over the purchase price; or (ii) the excess of the fair market value of the shares as of the beginning of the offering period over the purchase price (determined as of the beginning of the offering period). Any further gain or any loss will be taxed as a long-term capital gain or loss.

If the shares are sold or otherwise disposed of before the expiration of either of the holding periods described above, then the excess of the fair market value of the shares on the purchase date over the purchase price will be treated as ordinary income at the time of such sale or other disposition. The balance of any gain will be treated as capital gain. Even if the shares are later sold or otherwise disposed of for less than their fair market value on the purchase date, the same amount of ordinary income is attributed to the participant, and a capital loss is recognized equal to the difference between the sales price and the fair market value of the shares on such purchase date. Any capital gain or loss will be short-term or long-term, depending on how long the shares have been held.

Non-423 Component. A participant will be taxed on amounts withheld for the purchase of shares of the combined company's common stock as if such amounts were actually received. Under the Non-423 Component, a participant will recognize ordinary income equal to the excess, if any, of the fair market value of the underlying stock on the date of exercise of the purchase right over the purchase price. If the participant is employed by the combined company or one of its affiliates, that income will be subject to withholding taxes. The participant's tax basis in those shares will be equal to their fair market value on the date of exercise of the purchase right, and the participant's capital gain holding period for those shares will begin on the day after they are transferred to the participant.

Tax Consequences to the Combined Company

There are no U.S. federal income tax consequences to the combined company by reason of the grant or exercise of rights under the 2026 ESPP. The combined company is entitled to a deduction to the extent amounts are taxed as ordinary income to a participant for shares sold or otherwise disposed of before the expiration of the holding periods described above (subject to the requirement of reasonableness, the deduction limits under Section 162(m) of the Code and the satisfaction of tax reporting obligations).

New Plan Benefits

Participation in the 2026 ESPP is voluntary and each eligible employee will make his or her own decision regarding whether and to what extent to participate in the 2026 ESPP. Therefore, Rallybio cannot currently determine the benefits or number of shares subject to purchase rights and a new plan benefits table is thus not provided. In addition, Rallybio cannot determine the benefits or number of shares subject to awards that would have been received by any service provider of Rallybio if the 2026 ESPP had been in effect.

Registration with the SEC

If the 2026 ESPP is approved by Rallybio stockholders and becomes effective, the combined company intends to file a registration statement on Form S-8 registering the shares reserved for issuance under the 2026 ESPP as soon as reasonably practicable after the combined company becomes eligible to use such form.

Required Vote

The affirmative vote of a majority of the total votes cast by the holders of Rallybio Common Stock entitled to vote at the Rallybio annual meeting, assuming a quorum is present, is required to approve the 2026 ESPP Proposal. Abstentions and broker non-votes will be treated as shares present for purposes of determining the presence of a quorum for the transaction of business at the Rallybio annual meeting, but will not be counted as votes cast and will have no effect on the outcome of the vote on the 2026 ESPP Proposal.

The 2026 ESPP Proposal is conditioned on the consummation of the Merger. If the Merger is not consummated, the 2026 ESPP Proposal will have no effect, even if approved by Rallybio's stockholders.

The Merger is not conditioned upon the approval of the 2026 ESPP Proposal.

Unless otherwise instructed, it is the intention of the persons named in the accompanying proxy card to vote shares represented by properly executed proxy cards "FOR" the approval of the 2026 ESPP Proposal.

PROPOSAL NO. 9—THE ADJOURNMENT PROPOSAL

General

If Rallybio fails to receive a sufficient number of votes to approve the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, the Name Change Proposal and/or the Authorized Share Increase Proposal, Rallybio may propose to adjourn the Rallybio annual meeting, for a period of not more than 60 days, for the purpose of soliciting additional proxies to approve the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, the Name Change Proposal and/or the Authorized Share Increase Proposal. Rallybio currently does not intend to propose adjournment at the Rallybio annual meeting if there are sufficient votes to approve the Nasdaq Stock Issuance Proposal, the Reverse Stock Split Proposal, the Name Change Proposal and/or the Authorized Share Increase Proposal.

If a quorum is not present at the Rallybio annual meeting, under Rallybio's bylaws, the chairperson of the Rallybio annual meeting will have the power to adjourn the Rallybio annual meeting until a quorum is present or represented.

Required Vote

The affirmative vote of a majority of shares of Rallybio Common Stock present in person (by virtual attendance) or represented by proxy at the Rallybio annual meeting and entitled to vote on the matter is required to approve the Adjournment Proposal.

The Merger is not conditioned upon the approval of the Adjournment Proposal.

Unless otherwise instructed, it is the intention of the persons named in the accompanying proxy card to vote shares represented by properly executed proxy cards "FOR" the approval of the Adjournment Proposal.

RALLYBIO'S BUSINESS

Unless otherwise indicated or the context otherwise requires, references in this section to "Rallybio," the "Company" "we," "us," "our" and other similar terms refer to Rallybio and its subsidiaries.

Overview

We are a clinical-stage biotechnology company comprised of experienced biopharma industry leaders with extensive research, development, and rare disease expertise with a mission to develop and commercialize life-transforming therapies for patients with severe and rare diseases. Our lead program, RLYB116, is a differentiated complement component 5 ("C5") inhibitor with the potential to treat diseases of complement dysregulation. In addition, RLYB332, a long-acting matriptase-2 ("MTP-2") antibody for the treatment of diseases of iron overload, is currently in preclinical development.

Recent Developments

On March 1, 2026, we entered into an Agreement and Plan of Merger and Reorganization (the "Merger Agreement") with Candid Therapeutics, Inc., a Delaware corporation ("Candid"), a clinical-stage biotechnology company advancing a leading portfolio of T-cell engager ("TCE") therapeutics for autoimmune diseases, and Farmington Merger Sub, Inc., a Delaware corporation and wholly-owned subsidiary of Rallybio ("Merger Sub"). Upon the terms and subject to the satisfaction of the conditions described in the Merger Agreement, Merger Sub will be merged with and into Candid, with Candid surviving as a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio. The Merger is intended to qualify as a tax-free reorganization for U.S. federal income tax purposes.

Concurrently with the execution and delivery of the Merger Agreement, certain investors entered into the Subscription Agreement with Candid, pursuant to which such investors have agreed to purchase, immediately prior to the Merger, shares of Candid Common Stock representing an aggregate commitment of approximately $505.5 million in the Concurrent Financing. The shares of Candid Common Stock that are issued in the Concurrent Financing will be or will have the right to be, respectively, converted into shares of Rallybio Common Stock in the Merger.

Subject to the terms and conditions of the Merger Agreement, at the Effective Time (the "Effective Time"), (a) each then-outstanding share of common stock or preferred stock of Candid (each such share, a "Candid Share") (excluding any share described in clauses (b) or (c) below and Candid Capital Stock held by stockholders who have exercised and perfected appraisal rights for such shares) will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock, par value $0.0001 per share ("Rallybio Common Stock"), equal to the Exchange Ratio as set forth in the Merger Agreement (the "Exchange Ratio"), (b) each Candid Share issued in the Concurrent Financing will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio, (c) any Candid Capital Stock held as treasury shares or held or owned by Rallybio, Merger Sub or any subsidiary of Rallybio or Candid immediately prior to the Effective Time will be canceled and shall cease to exist, and no consideration shall be delivered in exchange therefor. Each then-outstanding option to purchase Candid Capital Stock will be converted into an option to purchase Rallybio Common Stock, based on the Exchange Ratio and subject to adjustment as set forth in the Merger Agreement.

Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments, including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing.

Immediately prior to the Effective Time, Rallybio and a rights agent are expected to enter into a Contingent Value Rights Agreement (the "CVR Agreement"), pursuant to which holders of record of certain Rallybio securities as of the close of business on the last business day prior to the day on which the Effective Time occurs will receive one contingent value right (each, a "CVR") for each outstanding share of Rallybio Common Stock, prefunded warrant, Rallybio restricted stock unit or In the Money Parent Option (as defined in the CVR Agreement) held as of such date. Pursuant to the CVR Agreement, each CVR holder will be entitled to receive their pro rata share of (i) all of the net proceeds (including cash the value of stock to the extent listed on a national exchange, at the time of disposition), if any, received by Rallybio as a result of payments made to Rallybio of any upfront, milestone, royalty and other payments received under any disposition agreement related to Rallybio's pre-Merger assets (the "Legacy Assets"), and (ii) any cash proceeds received from Recursion under the Membership Interest Purchase Agreement, dated July 8, 2025, by and among Recursion, Exscientia Ventures I, Inc., Rallybio Corporation and Rallybio IPB, LLC. For a period of one year after the Closing Date, Rallybio will use commercially reasonable efforts to effect the disposition of the Legacy Assets. Such net proceeds will be subject to certain permitted deductions, including for applicable tax payments, certain expenses incurred or other liabilities borne by Rallybio or its affiliates in respect of the Legacy Assets, and losses incurred by Rallybio or its affiliates due to a third-party proceeding in connection with such disposition.

Our Pipeline

As part of the proposed Merger with Candid the programs in Rallybio's pipeline that are illustrated in the chart below will be subject to the CVR described above.

C5: Complement component 5; ABD: Albumin-binding domain; PTR: Platelet Transfusion Refractoriness; APS: Antiphospholipid Syndrome

C5: Complement component 5; ABD: Albumin-binding domain; PTR: Platelet Transfusion Refractoriness; APS: Antiphospholipid Syndrome

Treatment of Disorders Due to Complement Dysregulation

The complement system plays a central role in innate immunity, as well as shaping adaptive immune response. Dysregulation of the complement pathway has been implicated in the pathogenesis of a growing number of diseases, making it an attractive target for therapeutic intervention. Antibody inhibitors of C5 have been successfully developed to treat diseases caused by complement pathway dysregulation, including paroxysmal nocturnal hemoglobinuria ("PNH"), atypical hemolytic uremic syndrome ("aHUS"), refractory generalized myasthenia gravis ("gMG") and relapsing neuromyelitis optica spectrum disorder ("NMOSD"). Despite the approval of antibody-based C5 inhibitors for patients with these diseases, we believe there remains a significant need in the market for safe, effective, patient-friendly, and accessible therapies.

Our team has a track record of success in designing, developing, and securing marketing approval for C5 complement inhibitors, including Soliris and Ultomiris, for patients around the world with severe and rare complement-mediated diseases. Our most advanced product candidate in this therapeutic area is RLYB116, an innovative, once-weekly, small volume, subcutaneously injected inhibitor of C5, which is a central component of the terminal complement pathway. RLYB116 is an Affibody molecule attached to an albumin binding domain ("ABD") that has the potential to drive the rapid, complete, and sustained inhibition of C5 with a subcutaneous ("SC") injection. We have completed two Phase 1 clinical trials in healthy participants that included the study of RLYB116 as both a single ascending dose ("SAD") and a multiple ascending dose ("MAD").

After the first Phase 1 clinical trial, we completed manufacturing process enhancements that were designed to improve the tolerability of RLYB116. In 2025, we completed the confirmatory Phase 1 clinical trial evaluating the pharmacokinetic ("PK") / pharmacodynamic ("PD") properties of RLYB116. The confirmatory trial achieved its two key objectives including: a significant improvement in the tolerability of RLYB116 and demonstration of complete and sustained inhibition of terminal complement. These results support the study of RLYB116 as a potential best-in-class therapeutic for multiple complement mediated diseases.

Hematological Disorders

In May 2022, we obtained worldwide exclusive rights to RLYB331, a preclinical, monoclonal antibody that is designed to inhibit MTP-2. The inhibition of MTP-2 significantly increases levels of hepcidin, decreases iron load and treats ineffective erythropoiesis. In 2024, we re-engineered RLYB331 to extend its half-life. In the fourth quarter of 2024 we presented preclinical data at the annual meeting of the American Society of Hematology ("ASH") for RLYB332, the long-acting version of RLYB331, including favorable PD data, that support RLYB332 as a long-acting, potentially best-in-class therapy for the treatment of diseases of iron overload. We believe RLYB332 has the potential to address a significant unmet need for patients with severe anemia with ineffective red blood cell production or erythropoiesis and iron overload, such as polycythemia vera, beta thalassemia and a subset of myelodysplastic syndromes ("MDS"), amongst others. Currently these patients are underserved by the existing standard of care.

Artificial Intelligence Drug Discovery Collaboration

In July 2019, we formed a joint venture with Exscientia Limited ("Exscientia"), an Oxford, UK-based artificial intelligence ("AI") and machine learning drug discovery company with a proprietary chemical design platform to discover novel small molecule drug candidates. Exscientia was acquired by Recursion in 2024. In July 2025, we entered into the ENPP1 Purchase Agreement with Recursion Exscientia Ventures I, Inc., an indirect wholly-owned subsidiary of Recursion ("Buyer") and Rallybio IPB, LLC, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Rallybio Corporation to sell our interest in REV102, an Ectonucleotide Pyrophosphatase/ Phosphodiesterase 1 ("ENPP1") inhibitor in preclinical development for the treatment of patients with hypophosphatasia ("HPP"), to Buyer (a subsidiary of our joint venture partner Recursion) (the "JV Sale"). In connection with the JV Sale, we received a total of $20.0 million in the third quarter of 2025 including $7.5 million from an upfront payment and $12.5 million from a milestone payment related to the initiation of additional preclinical studies. We are eligible to receive a $5.0 million milestone payment in connection with the initiation of dosing in a Phase 1 clinical study, as defined in the ENPP1 Purchase Agreement and low single-digit royalties on all future net sales by Recursion of products comprising or incorporating certain compounds developed by REV-I. We may also be eligible to receive certain payments in the event of Recursion's sale of the REV102 program.

AbCellera Collaboration

In December 2022, we entered into a strategic alliance to discover, develop, and commercialize novel antibody-based therapeutics for rare diseases. This multi-year, multi-target collaboration will combine AbCellera Biologic's ("AbCellera") antibody discovery engine with Rallybio's clinical and commercial expertise in rare diseases to identify optimal clinical candidates with a goal of delivering therapies to patients. We and AbCellera intended that the collaboration would co-develop up to five rare disease therapeutic targets, which will be chosen together by both companies with the first program focused on addressing the significant unmet therapeutic needs of patients with rare metabolic diseases.

Our Strategy

In 2025, the Company made a decision to evaluate strategic alternatives, with a goal of enhancing long term shareholder value that culminated with the signing of the Merger Agreement with Candid, a clinical-stage biotechnology company advancing a leading portfolio of TCE therapeutics for autoimmune diseases on March 1, 2026. In connection with the planned Merger, we have started to take steps to wind down our general and administrative operations that will not be needed after the close of the Merger. We are continuing to move forward with limited research and development operations with a goal of advancing our programs in the near term to maximize the potential value of the CVRs.

Our Product Candidates

RLYB116 for the treatment of disorders due to complement dysregulation

RLYB116 is an inhibitor of complement component C5, a component of the complement pathway which plays a central role in innate immunity as well as shaping adaptive immune response. Dysregulation of the complement pathway has been implicated in the pathogenesis of a growing number of diseases, making it an attractive target for therapeutic intervention. Antibody inhibitors of C5 have been successfully developed to treat diseases caused by immune dysfunction, including PNH, aHUS, refractory gMG and relapsing NMOSD. RLYB116 includes an Affibody molecule, which is an antibody mimetic protein that has a much smaller molecular weight than a traditional antibody and may be easier and less costly to produce. In contrast to most C5-targeted antibody therapeutics that are administered intravenously or via daily injection, RLYB116 has the potential to be administered via an autoinjector as a small volume, once-weekly SC injection.

We view RLYB116 as a potential pipeline-in-a-product for many disease including platelet transfusion refractoriness ("PTR") and antiphospholipid syndrome ("APS"). We believe RLYB116 can address significant unmet needs for patients with these diseases by providing a potential treatment that is more accessible and patient-friendly than existing marketed products, including by reducing the frequency and improving the route of administration.

Based on our team's experience studying and developing therapies targeting the complement system, we believe there are five important attributes that could support clinical and commercial success in the treatment of a broad range of patients suffering from complement-mediated diseases. These include a mechanism of action targeting terminal complement, the ability to produce rapid, complete and sustained inhibition of C5, a safety profile consistent with C5 antibodies currently approved for therapeutic use, the ability to self-administer the drug less frequently (e.g. once per week) in an easy to use autoinjector, and pricing flexibility to treat a broad range of complement-mediated diseases. Based on the data generated to date and the manufacturing process enhancements completed in 2024, we believe RLYB116 has the potential to demonstrate these attributes as a best-in-class therapeutic, and if so, could have a life-transforming impact on patients.

The complement system

The complement system includes over 30 proteins in plasma and on cell surfaces that support the body's adaptive or antibody-based immune system in the destruction of pathogenic bacteria. Complement proteins circulate in the blood in an inactive form prior to activation in response to infection. Activation occurs through a pathway of proteolytic cleavage events initiated by pathogen recognition and resulting in pathogen destruction. Three complement pathways that converge on C5 are known and are referred to as the classical, lectin and alternative pathways. In the classical pathway, antibodies bind to antigens, which in turn trigger a protease cascade that activates complement protein C3 and then complement protein C5. Activation of C5 convertase generates C5b which can initiate formation of membrane pores and subsequent lysis of cells. The binding of C5b to host cells is normally prevented by the presence of specific glycoproteins on the cell surface.

Immune platelet transfusion refractoriness (PTR) disease background

PTR is a condition in which a patient shows poor platelet counts after a platelet transfusion due to an immune-mediated process. It can result from antibodies directed against donor platelet antigens—especially human leukocyte antigen ("HLA") class I antigens, or human platelet antigens ("HPAs"). These antibodies rapidly clear transfused platelets from the circulation, leading to transfusion failure. Immune PTR typically develops after prior antigen exposure, such as through previous transfusions. It is diagnosed by consistently low post-transfusion platelet count in the absence of non-immune causes like sepsis or splenomegaly. We estimated that there are more than 25,000 cases annually in the United States and other major markets.

Current treatments for PTR and their limitations

Management of PTR includes using HLA-matched, crossmatched, or HPA-matched platelets, or attempting to address the underlying immune sensitization. Platelet matching, the current standard of care is expensive, challenging and is often not an option in local settings not directly connected to a major blood center. Controlling the immune response is often expensive and is accompanied by a variety of undesirable side effects.

Potential benefits of our approach

We believe PTR represents an attractive development opportunity for RLYB116 for several reasons. First, there are data from at least one investigator initiated trial showing C5 blockade has a positive impact on post-transfusion platelet counts, providing a sound biological rationale for a C5-targeted intervention. Second, PTR offers the opportunity for early clinical validation using objective endpoints, including impact on post-transfusion platelet counts. And third—and most importantly—we believe that RLYB116 could potentially provide transformative therapeutic impact for unserved and underserved patients with PTR globally.

APS disease background

APS is a potentially life-threatening, rare autoimmune disorder in which an individual's immune system mistakenly creates antiphospholipid antibodies that can lead to the formation of blood clots. Blood clots can occur in the legs, lungs, brain, and other organs, such as the kidneys and spleen. The clots can lead to a heart attack or a stroke. During pregnancy, women with APS are also at increased risk of miscarriage. APS can occur on its own but can also occur secondary to other autoimmune diseases such as systemic lupus erythematosus. APS affects three to five times as many women as men and is most often diagnosed in people between the ages of 30 and 50. It is estimated that there are >130,000 people in the US and >120,000 in Europe who suffer from APS.

Current treatments for APS and their limitations

Currently, there is no cure for APS. However, medicines including blood thinners such as warfarin or heparin can help prevent health problems caused by the disease. The goals of treatment are to prevent blood clots from forming and to keep existing clots from increasing in size. However, direct oral anticoagulants are generally less effective in preventing recurrent thromboembolic events, most notably strokes.

Potential benefits of our approach

We believe APS is an attractive indication to pursue as part of a comprehensive development strategy for two reasons. First, there is significant unmet need in patients with APS given the lack of currently available treatment alternatives and the rapid time to generate initial proof-of-concept data. Second, we believe that RLYB116 has the potential to be an effective treatment for this patient population given published data from prior investigational studies using commercially available complement inhibitors not approved in this therapeutic indication.

The RLYB116 solution:

RLYB116 is an engineered protein that includes an Affibody molecule and an antibody binding domain ("ABD"). We acquired rights to RLYB116 from Swedish Orphan Biovitrum AB (Publ) ("Sobi"). RLYB116 was designed for optimal C5 binding, increased stability, as well as a long half-life in serum. Potential benefits of RLYB116 include:

- Subcutaneous administration. The low molecular weight allows for a higher concentration of active molecules than antibodies in an equivalent volume. This likely enables the delivery of RLYB116 in a patient friendly format such as an autoinjector.
- Efficiency of manufacturing. RLYB116 is expressed in E. coli, providing for a more streamlined and potentially lower cost manufacturing process compared to antibodies or other biologics expressed in mammalian cell culture, which typically require larger scale and longer manufacturing times.
- Less frequent dosing. Linkage of the Affibody domain to an ABD may lengthen the dosing interval of RLYB116 by extending the biological half-life and offer potential dosing benefits to patients. Based on the data generated to date, we believe that RLYB116 will be administered once-weekly.
- Potentially lower risk of treatment conversion. Due to 1:1 binding to C5, there is an expected lack of risk for drug-target-drug complex formation when switching from treatment with an antibody.
- Favorable stability. The Affibody platform provides the possibility of delivering highly stable and soluble therapeutic agents that allow for high-concentration low-volume products.

Treatment Goal: Rapid, complete, and sustained terminal complement blockade via C5 inhibition

Clinical development of RLYB116

We have completed two Phase 1 clinical trials in healthy participants that included the study of RLYB116 as a SAD and a MAD. After the first Phase 1 clinical trial, we completed manufacturing process enhancements that were designed to improve the tolerability of RLYB116 and enable us to increase the dose.

In 2025, we completed the confirmatory (second) Phase 1 clinical trial evaluating the PK /PD properties of RLYB116 in healthy volunteers. The trial was a single-blind MAD study evaluating a 4-week treatment duration and a 10-week follow-up period. There were eight participants in each of 2 cohorts, six of whom received RLYB116 and two of whom received placebo. The trial is summarized below.

Subject Screening	Cohort 1	150mg Once Weekly	10-week follow-up
	Cohort 2	300mg Once Weekly

The trial achieved its two key objectives including: a significant improvement in the tolerability of RLYB116 and demonstration of complete and sustained inhibition of terminal complement. We believe the results, which are summarized in the three graphs below, support the study of RLYB116 as a potential best-in-class therapeutic for multiple complement mediated diseases.

Serum RLYB116 Concentration

The PK profile of RLYB116 is highly predictable with low intersubject variability, rapid absorption and long terminal elimination rates.

RLYB116 to C5 Ratio

RLYB116 levels significantly exceed C5 within 12 hours of the first dose and are maintained at ratios of greater than 2:1 with a once-weekly, subcutaneously administered dose of 300mg.

Hemolytic Activity

Most importantly, we observed complete and sustained inhibition of hemolysis observed in subjects who received the 300mg dose.

Based on market research conducted to date, we believe that an effective, once-weekly, well-tolerated therapy that can be rapidly self-administered with an autoinjector would be an attractive alternative for patients suffering from a wide array of complement mediated diseases.

RLYB332 for the treatment of severe anemia with ineffective erythropoiesis and iron overload

In May 2022, we obtained worldwide exclusive rights to RLYB331, a preclinical antibody designed to inhibit MTP-2. The inhibition of MTP-2 significantly increases levels of hepcidin, decreases iron load and treats ineffective erythropoiesis. We believe this molecule has the potential to address a significant unmet need for patients with severe anemias with ineffective erythropoiesis and iron overload, including beta thalassemia and a subset of lower risk MDS. Currently these patients are underserved by the existing standard of care.

In 2024, we completed non-clinical studies that demonstrated favorable tolerability, dose-dependent PK, and sustained PD effects with RLYB332, a long-acting version of RLYB331. These findings, which were presented in a poster at the 66th annual meeting of ASH, support the continued development of RLYB332 as a potentially best-in-class therapeutic for treating diseases of iron overload.

AbCellera Collaboration

We entered into a strategic alliance with AbCellera to discover, develop, and commercialize novel antibody-based therapeutics for rare diseases. This multi-year, multi-target collaboration combines AbCellera's antibody discovery engine with Rallybio's clinical and commercial expertise in rare diseases to identify optimal clinical candidates with a goal of delivering therapies to patients.

Competition

The biotechnology and pharmaceutical industries are highly competitive and subject to significant and rapid technological change. There are many public and private biopharmaceutical companies, universities, government agencies and other research organizations actively engaged in the research and development of products that may be like our product candidates or address similar markets. In addition, the number of companies seeking to develop and commercialize products and therapies competing with our product candidates is likely to increase. However, we seek to build our portfolio with key differentiating attributes to provide a competitive advantage in the markets we target. The success of our product candidates, if approved, is likely to be a result of their efficacy, safety, convenience, price, the level of biosimilar or generic competition and/or the availability of reimbursement from government and other third-party payors.

Many of our competitors may have significantly greater name recognition and financial, manufacturing, marketing, product development, technical, commercial infrastructure, and human resources than we do. Mergers and acquisitions in the pharmaceutical, biotechnology and diagnostic industries may result in even more resources being concentrated among a smaller number of our competitors. These competitors also compete with us in establishing clinical trial sites and patient registration for clinical trials, as well as in acquiring technologies complementary to, or necessary for, our programs. Smaller or early-stage companies may also prove to be significant competitors, particularly through collaborative arrangements with large and established companies.

Intellectual Property

Our success depends, in part, on our ability to obtain, maintain, defend, and enforce patent rights and other intellectual property rights that protect our business, preserve the confidentiality of our trade secrets, and operate without infringing the valid and enforceable intellectual property rights of others. In addition to our efforts to protect our product candidates and methods of using them, we also seek to secure or acquire patent rights regarding other products and methods that are important to the general development of commercial products. We utilize a multi-layered approach that includes acquiring intellectual property rights through purchase or exclusive license, filing and prosecuting U.S. and foreign patent applications directed to our own innovations, and developing and protecting proprietary know-how to maintain our competitive position.

Our ongoing efforts to secure patent rights that protect our business constitute a key component of our business strategy. We also strive to protect as trade secrets or confidential know-how, certain aspects of our programs and technological innovations that are commercially valuable but are not amenable to or appropriate for patent protection. We achieve this, in part, through the use of confidentiality agreements with our employees, consultants, scientific advisors, collaborators, licensors, and contractors, and by striving to maintain physical security of our premises and digital security of our electronic information and technology systems.

Notwithstanding our commitment to protecting our intellectual property rights, we, like other pharmaceutical and biopharmaceutical companies, are subject to several sources of uncertainty that can affect those rights. For example, we cannot be certain that any patents that we currently own or in-license, or that we may own or in-license in the future, will not be challenged, held to be invalid and/or unenforceable, have the scope of their claims narrowed, or be circumvented by others. Nor can we be certain that such patents will successfully protect our products or our business from competition.

Similarly, with respect to patent applications that are currently pending, or that may be pending in the future, we cannot be certain that such patent applications will result in the issuance of granted patents, or of patent claims with the desired claim scope. In order to secure an issued patent, an invention claimed in a patent application must meet certain legal requirements for patentability, which differ between countries based on each country's particular patent laws. In addition, because of the significant amount of time required for clinical development and regulatory review of product candidates, we cannot be certain that any of our product candidates will be commercialized while there is significant patent term remaining on patents relating to those products. The term of a patent depends upon the legal requirements for determination of patent term in the country in which that patent is granted. In most countries, including the United States, the patent term is 20 years from the earliest claimed filing date of a non-provisional patent application. In the United States, a patent's term may, in certain cases, be lengthened by patent term adjustment ("PTA") which compensates a patentee for administrative delays by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office ("USPTO") in examining and granting the patent. Likewise, a patent's term may be shortened if it is terminally disclaimed over an earlier-expiring patent with a common owner or inventor.

The term of a U.S. patent relating to an approved drug product may also be extended to compensate the patentee for delays due to the regulatory approval process. Such a patent term extension ("PTE") cannot exceed five years, and cannot extend the remaining term of a patent beyond a total of 14 years from the date of product approval. Furthermore, the term can be extended for only one patent applicable to each regulatory review period and only those claims covering the approved product, or a method for using it or manufacturing it, may be extended. In the future, if any of our product candidates receive approval by the FDA we expect to apply for PTE on any issued patents covering those products, depending upon the length of the clinical studies for each product and other factors. There can be no assurance that we will benefit from any PTE or favorable adjustments to the terms of any patents we currently own or in-license or that we may own or in-license in the future.

In addition to and separate from patent exclusivity, the FDA may also grant marketing exclusivity of varying lengths in connection with the approval of a New Chemical Entity (5 years), Biologic (12 years), or Orphan Drug indication (7 years). Marketing exclusivity may also be granted for new clinical studies (3 years) and pediatric studies (6 months) on approved drugs. Depending on the length of the regulatory approval process and the ability to make use of the procedures for obtaining PTE, any FDA exclusivity period may in part or in whole overlap with any patent exclusivity to which we are entitled. We intend to pursue relevant marketing exclusivities in the US and in foreign countries in which any candidate product is approved. However, we cannot be certain that any such exclusivities will be granted or, if granted, will insulate our commercial product(s) from competition.

With respect to trade secrets, while we have confidence in the protective measures that we employ, such measures can be breached, and we may not have adequate remedies for any such breach. We also cannot be certain that any of our activities will not be subject to the intellectual property rights of others.

As of March 1, 2026, we owned two patent families relating to the current product candidates in our complement program, RLYB114 and RLYB116, and certain aspects of their use that were acquired from Sobi. These two patent families currently include five granted U.S. patents and one pending U.S. patent application, with granted patents and/or pending patent applications in more than 25 additional countries worldwide. In the United States, Australia, Canada the European Patent Convention contracting states, and Japan, applications in both patent families have been granted and are scheduled to expire between 2033 and 2034, excluding any PTA or PTE. In addition, we filed and own a family of patent applications directed to dosing and administration of RLYB116 that consists of pending patent applications in Australia, Canada, Europe, Japan, the United States and 22 additional countries. Patents issuing in this patent family will have an expiration date in November 2042, excluding any PTA or PTE that may be awarded. We also filed and own nine pending provisional patent applications directed to methods of treatment of various C5-related conditions by administration of RLYB116. We have also non-exclusively in-licensed certain patent rights relating to our current product candidates from Affibody, including patent rights relating to the Affibody molecule technology and Albumod albumin binding molecule technology.

As of March 1, 2026, we exclusively in-licensed from Kymab Limited certain patent rights to the current product candidate in our iron overload program, RLYB332, as well as back-up compounds. Under the exclusive license, we are managing prosecution of a patent family relating to RLYB332 and the back-up compounds. The patent family currently includes pending patent applications in the United States and in more than 20 other countries/regions, including Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, Eurasia, Europe, India, Japan, Mexico, and Saudi Arabia. Patents have been granted in Eurasia, Japan, and Malaysia, and are scheduled to expire in November 2040. In addition, we filed and own a pending International (PCT) patent application family directed to use of RLYB332 for treating pathologies of beta-thalassemia. Further, we have non-exclusively in-licensed from Kymab Limited certain patent rights relating to the development, manufacture, and use of RLYB332 and the back-up compounds.

License Agreements

Product License Agreement with Affibody AB

In March 2019, our subsidiary IPC Research, LLC ("IPC Research") and Sobi entered into a Contract Assignment Agreement pursuant to which Sobi assigned to, and IPC Research assumed, all obligations in a certain Product License Agreement ("PLA") as amended, between Sobi and Affibody AB ("Affibody"), dated March 9, 2012, as amended on January 1, 2018 and December 22, 2020.

Pursuant to the PLA, we obtained a license to the Affibody platform technology and a particular ABD, in order to further develop and commercialize certain Affibody ligands, which we are now developing as RLYB116 and RLYB114.

Under the PLA, Affibody grants us (1) a non-exclusive right under certain patents to use the Affibody ligands alone or as a fusion protein and (2) an exclusive right to use the Affibody ligands alone or as a fusion protein, in each case, for human therapeutic use. Affibody also grants us (a) a non-exclusive right under certain patents to use the ABD in combination with the Affibody ligands as a fusion protein and (b) an exclusive right to use the ABD solely in combination with the Affibody ligands as a fusion protein, in each case, for human therapeutic use. Affibody grants us a non-exclusive license under applicable know-how needed to practice the rights and licenses granted under the PLA. All licenses to us are sublicensable, provided that each sublicense is consistent with the terms and conditions of the PLA. Under the PLA, Affibody has an exclusive right under any product patents, which are a category of certain patents that we own, to use the specific Affibody ligands outside of human therapeutics and a non-exclusive right under know-how needed to practice the Affibody ligands outside of human therapeutics.

Under the PLA, Affibody is the exclusive owner of, and controls prosecution, maintenance, and defense of intellectual property covering, platform technology. We are the exclusive owner of, and control prosecution, maintenance, and defense of intellectual property covering, product technology. Affibody agrees to disclose to us any improvement to the Affibody technology that it deems commercially reasonable for us to practice and grants us an option to license any such improvement. We have the first right to enforce product patents against a third-party infringer and Affibody retains the first right to enforce any other licensed patent. We agree to not provide or make available any Affibody Ligand to a third-party on a standalone basis except for research purposes or to commercialize a licensed product.

We agree to use commercially reasonable efforts to develop and commercialize a licensed product. We also will pay Affibody certain regulatory milestones up to an aggregate amount of €7.5 million and (a) a mid-single-digit royalty on annual net sales of products if such products are covered by a valid claim of a product patent or a platform patent or (b) low-single-digit royalties on annual net sales of products that are not covered by any such valid claim. Our obligation to pay royalties expires on a country-by-country and product-by-product basis on the later of (a) the expiration of the last-to-expire valid claim of a patent covering a licensed product or (b) the 10th anniversary following first commercial sale of such product in such country.

The PLA will terminate when we are no longer obligated to pay royalties to Affibody. Either party may terminate the PLA upon material breach of the PLA by the other, subject to a cure period, or immediately in the case of the other party's insolvency, bankruptcy or a similar event. Affibody may terminate the PLA immediately if we or any of our affiliates or third party transferees commences any proceeding challenging the validity of the licensed patents or any of Affibody's other patents or challenging the confidentiality or substance of the licensed know-how or licensed technology. We may terminate the PLA for convenience upon 90 days prior written notice and upon payment of any amounts due to Affibody through the effective date of such termination.

If Affibody terminates the PLA or if we terminate the PLA for convenience, (a) all rights and licenses granted under the PLA will terminate, (b) at Affibody's request, we must transfer all rights to the product technology free of charge to Affibody and (c) we must return or destroy all of Affibody's confidential information. Furthermore, if we terminate for convenience, we must grant Affibody an exclusive, royalty free perpetual right to use all regulatory filings, approvals and data provided to regulatory authorities in support of such filings or approvals that relate to the licensed product. However, if we terminate the PLA as a result of Affibody's material breach of the PLA or its insolvency or bankruptcy, we will retain our license and rights under the PLA, provided that we will remain bound by certain obligations under the PLA with respect to milestone payments, royalties (subject to a reduction in rate, in the case of material breach), audits and indemnity.

Product License Agreement with Sanofi

In May 2022, through our subsidiary, Rallybio IPE, LLC ("Rallybio IPE"), we entered into a License Agreement with Kymab Limited ("Sanofi", and such agreement the "Sanofi License Agreement"). Under the Sanofi License Agreement, Sanofi provides Rallybio IPE with worldwide exclusive rights to Sanofi's KY1066, which is now referred to as RLYB331. Under the terms of the Sanofi License Agreement, Rallybio has an exclusive license to certain Sanofi patents to develop, manufacture and commercialize RLYB331 and Rallybio agrees to use commercially reasonable efforts to develop and commercialize a licensed product in at least one indication in the field in each of several major markets, as described in the Sanofi License Agreement.

We paid Sanofi an upfront cash payment of $3.0 million. In addition, Rallybio has agreed to pay Sanofi up to an aggregate of $43.0 million in development and regulatory milestones and up to an aggregate of $150.0 million in commercial milestones for a product in its first indication, plus tiered low-to-mid double digit percentages of such milestone amounts for up to three additional indications, and mid to high single digit royalties on net sales.

The Sanofi License Agreement contains other customary license terms including sublicensing, development, regulatory, manufacturing, commercialization, milestones, royalties, intellectual property, and termination. The Sanofi License Agreement will expire on a product-by-product and country-by-country basis at the end of the applicable royalty term. Either party may terminate the Sanofi License Agreement upon material breach of the Sanofi License Agreement by the other, subject to a cure period. Rallybio may terminate the Sanofi License Agreement for convenience upon 90 days prior written notice to Sanofi. Sanofi may terminate the Sanofi License Agreement immediately in the case of Rallybio's insolvency, bankruptcy or a similar event, or if Rallybio or its affiliates participates in any proceeding challenging the validity of the licensed patents.

If the Sanofi License Agreement is terminated in its entirety, among other things (a) all rights and licenses granted by Sanofi under the License Agreement (including any sublicenses) will terminate and (b) if Sanofi has an interest in developing, manufacturing and commercializing the licensed compounds or products, the parties to the Sanofi License Agreement shall negotiate an arrangement to provide Sanofi rights to the patents, know-how, materials and other properties controlled by Rallybio applicable to any of the licensed product.

Asset Purchase Agreements

Asset Transfer Agreement with Swedish Orphan Biovitrum AB (Publ)

In March 2019, through IPC Research, we entered into an agreement with Sobi, pursuant to which we acquired the right, title and interest in assets related to certain C5 inhibitor compounds. We are currently developing the assets acquired from Sobi as RLYB116 and RLYB114.

We paid Sobi an upfront purchase price of $5.0 million and we are obligated to pay Sobi an aggregate amount of up to $51.0 million upon achievement of certain development milestones and an aggregate amount of up to $65.0 million upon achievement of certain sales milestones.

We also will pay Sobi tiered, low single-digit royalties on annual net sales to third parties for products containing any compound transferred under the agreement as an active ingredient. Our obligation to pay royalties expires, on a country-by-country and product-by-product basis, on the later of (a) the 10th anniversary following first commercial sale of such product in such country and (b) the expiration date in such country of the last to expire of any issued patent included in the patent rights acquired from Sobi that includes at least one valid claim covering the sale of such product in such country.

We are obligated to use commercially reasonable efforts to research, develop and exploit at least one product that contains a compound transferred under the agreement as an active ingredient in each of the United States, European Union ("EU") and Japan.

If, prior to the commercial launch in the United States of the first product containing the compounds, we decide to divest our rights in the assets acquired from Sobi or to terminate all research, development and commercialization activities in respect of the acquired compounds, we must notify Sobi and negotiate in good faith with Sobi a possible business transaction relating to the assets. This right of negotiation will not apply to a transaction to sell all or substantially all of the assets of IPC Research or an affiliate of IPC Research, a pledge of the assets as collateral or a sale or transfer of the assets to an affiliate of IPC Research that agrees to be bound by the right of negotiation.

Joint Venture Agreement

In July 2019, we entered into a partnership with Recursion (as successor in interest to Exscientia) and created REV-I, which was jointly owned by Recursion and one of our wholly-owned subsidiaries, each a Member and collectively the Members. The joint venture was formed to initiate early-stage drug discovery of orally available small molecules targeting ENPP1 for the treatment of HPP, and thereafter for the future research, development, manufacture, sale and exploitation of any company-owned technology and compounds, including any resulting compound identified by the steering committee of the joint venture.

In July 2025, we entered into a ENPP1 Purchase Agreement with Recursion Exscientia Ventures I, Inc., an indirect wholly-owned subsidiary of Buyer and Rallybio IPB, LLC, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Rallybio Corporation to sell our interest in REV102, ENPP1 inhibitor in preclinical development for the treatment of patients with HPP, to Buyer (a subsidiary of our joint venture partner Recursion) (the "JV Sale"). In connection with the JV Sale, we received a total of $20.0 million in the third quarter of 2025 including $7.5 million from an upfront payment and $12.5 million from a milestone payment related to the initiation of additional preclinical studies. We are eligible to receive a $5.0 million milestone payment in connection with the initiation of dosing in a Phase 1 clinical study, as defined in the ENPP1 Purchase Agreement and low single-digit royalties on all future net sales by Recursion of products comprising or incorporating certain compounds developed by REV-I. We may also be eligible to receive certain payments in the event of Recursion's sale of the REV102 program.

AbCellera Collaboration Agreement

In December 2022, the Company entered into a strategic alliance to discover, develop, and commercialize novel antibody-based therapeutics for rare diseases. This multi-year, multi-target collaboration combined AbCellera's antibody discovery engine with Rallybio's clinical and commercial expertise in rare diseases to identify optimal clinical candidates and ultimately deliver therapies to patients.

Under the terms of the agreement, AbCellera and Rallybio were planning to co-develop up to five rare disease therapeutic targets, which will be chosen together by both companies. The collaboration was designed to allow Rallybio to add product candidates to its existing pipeline and provide the option for AbCellera to conduct process development and clinical manufacturing activities.

Collaboration Agreement with Johnson & Johnson

In April 2024, through Rallybio IPA, we entered into a collaboration agreement (the "J&J Collaboration Agreement") with Johnson & Johnson, through its wholly-owned subsidiary, Momenta Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("J&J"). Under the J&J Collaboration Agreement, the Company and J&J planned to advance therapeutic solutions for pregnant individuals at risk of fetal and neonatal alloimmune thrombocytopenia ("FNAIT"). The Company shared certain aggregated, anonymized data with J&J, collected from the Company's FNAIT natural history study and the Company's Phase 2 FNAIT clinical trial. The Company also agreed to disseminate information to its FNAIT study sites related to J&J's and its affiliates' research and development of complementary therapeutic approaches aimed at reducing the risk of FNAIT.

Under the terms of the J&J Collaboration Agreement, J&J made an upfront payment of $0.5 million. We were also eligible to receive additional payments upon certain triggers related to both companies' FNAIT studies, however, in connection with our decision in April 2025 to discontinue development of RLYB212, we do not expect any payments regarding the achievement of certain enrollment-related events.

The J&J Collaboration Agreement expires in April 2026. The Company may terminate the agreement upon J&J's material breach, the Company's decision to discontinue an FNAIT study, or during a certain part of the term if the Company determines for any reason that termination of the agreement is in the best interests of the Company. J&J may terminate the agreement upon the Company's material, uncured breach, upon the Company's decision to discontinue an FNAIT study, documented failure of the Company to conduct its FNAIT studies in accordance with applicable law and J&J's decision to discontinue its FNAIT studies.

Manufacturing and Supply

We do not own or operate, and currently have no plans to establish, any internal manufacturing facilities. We currently rely and expect to continue to rely on third-party contract manufacturer organizations ("CMOs") for the manufacture of our product candidates for preclinical and clinical testing, as well as for commercial production of any product candidates that are approved.

We currently rely on multiple CMOs for all of our preclinical and clinical supply requirements, including drug substances and drug products, and label and packaging for our preclinical research and clinical trials. We believe that we will be able to contract with other CMOs to manufacture drug substances if our existing sources of drug substances were no longer available to us or with sufficient capacity, but there is no assurance that the drug substance capacity would be available from other CMOs on acceptable terms, on the timeframe that our business would require, or at all. We do not currently have supply commitments or other arrangements in place with our existing CMOs.

We do not have any current contractual relationships for the manufacture of commercial supplies of any of our product candidates if they are approved by the regulatory authorities, and we intend to enter into agreements with a CMO and plans for one or more back-up manufacturers for the commercial production of our product candidates as they near phase 3 clinical trials.

Any products to be used in clinical trials and any approved product that we may commercialize will need to be manufactured in facilities, and by processes, that comply with the FDA's current Good Manufacturing Practice ("cGMP") requirements and comparable requirements of the regulatory agencies of other jurisdictions in which we are seeking approval. We currently employ internal resources to manage our CMOs. We believe that RLYB116 and RLYB332 can be manufactured through reliable and reproducible biologic and chemical processes from readily available starting materials. We believe that our manufacturing processes are amenable to scale-up and will not require unusual or expensive equipment. We expect to continue to develop, on our own or with our collaborators, product candidates that can be produced cost-effectively at contract manufacturing facilities.

Government Regulation

The research, development, testing, manufacture, quality control, packaging, labeling, storage, record-keeping, distribution, import, export, promotion, advertising, marketing, sale, pricing and reimbursement of drug and biologic products are extensively regulated by governmental authorities in the United States and other countries. The processes for obtaining regulatory approvals in the United States and in foreign countries and jurisdictions, along with compliance with applicable statutes and regulations and other regulatory requirements, both pre-approval and post-approval, require the expenditure of substantial time and financial resources. The regulatory requirements applicable to drug and biological product development, approval and marketing are subject to change, and regulations and administrative guidance often are revised or reinterpreted by the agencies in ways that may have a significant impact on our business.

U.S. Government Regulation of Drug and Biological Products

In the United States, the FDA regulates human drugs under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, (the "FDCA"), and in the case of biologics, also under the Public Health Service Act (the "PHSA"), and their implementing regulations. Failure to comply with the applicable U.S. requirements may result in FDA refusal to approve pending New Drug Applications ("NDAs") or Biologics License Applications ("BLAs") or delays in development and may subject an applicant to administrative or judicial sanctions, such as issuance of warning letters, or the imposition of fines, civil penalties, product recalls, product seizures, total or partial suspension of production or distribution, injunctions and/or civil or criminal prosecution brought by the FDA and the DOJ or other governmental entities.

The FDA must approve our product candidates for therapeutic indications before they may be marketed in the United States. For drug products, the FDA must approve an NDA, and for biologic products, the FDA must approve a BLA. An applicant seeking approval to market and distribute a new drug or biologic in the United States generally must satisfactorily complete each of the following steps:

- completion of preclinical laboratory tests and animal studies according to Good Laboratory Practice ("GLP") regulations or other applicable regulations;
- manufacture and testing of the therapeutic or biologic moiety and its respective product formulation according to cGMP regulations or other applicable regulations;
- submission to the FDA of an IND application, which must become effective before human clinical trials may begin;
- approval by an independent institutional review board ("IRB") or ethics committee representing each clinical trial site before each clinical trial may be initiated;
- performance of adequate and well-controlled human clinical trials in accordance with applicable IND regulations, good clinical practices ("GCPs") and other clinical-trial related regulations to evaluate the safety and efficacy of the investigational product for each proposed indication;
- preparation and submission to the FDA of an NDA or BLA requesting marketing approval for one or more proposed indications, including payment of application user fees;
- review of the NDA or BLA by an FDA advisory committee, where applicable;
- satisfactory completion of one or more FDA inspections of the manufacturing facility or facilities at which the drug or biologic and its respective finished product is produced;
- satisfactory completion of any FDA audits of clinical trial sites to assure compliance with GCPs and the integrity of the clinical data submitted in support of the NDA or BLA; and
- FDA review and approval of the NDA or BLA.

Preclinical Studies and IND

Before testing any drug or biological product candidate in humans, the product candidate must undergo rigorous preclinical testing. The preclinical development stage generally involves laboratory evaluations of drug chemistry/biology, formulation, and stability, as well as in vitro and animal studies to assess safety and in some cases to establish a rationale for therapeutic use. The conduct of preclinical studies is subject to federal regulations and requirements, including GLP regulations for safety and toxicology studies. The sponsor must submit the results of the preclinical studies, together with manufacturing information, analytical data, any available clinical data or literature and a proposed clinical protocol, to the FDA as part of the IND.

An IND is a request for authorization from the FDA to administer an investigational product to humans and must become effective before human clinical trials may begin. An IND automatically becomes effective 30 days after receipt by the FDA, unless before that time, the FDA raises concerns or questions related to one or more proposed clinical trials and places the clinical trial on a clinical hold. In such a case, the IND sponsor and the FDA must resolve any outstanding concerns before the clinical trial can begin. Certain long-term preclinical testing, such as animal tests of reproductive adverse events and carcinogenicity, may initiate or continue after an IND for an investigational product candidate is submitted to the FDA and human clinical trials have been initiated.

Human Clinical Trials in Support of an NDA or BLA

Clinical trials involve the administration of an investigational product candidate to healthy volunteers or patients with the disease to be treated under the supervision of qualified investigators. Clinical trials are conducted under protocols detailing the objectives of the study, inclusion and exclusion criteria, dosing procedures and the parameters to be used in monitoring the safety and effectiveness criteria to be evaluated. Each protocol, as well as any subsequent amendments, must be submitted to the FDA as part of the IND.

An IRB representing each institution that is participating in the clinical trial must review and approve the plan for any clinical trial before it commences at that institution, and the IRB must thereafter conduct a continuing review of the trial. The IRB will consider, among other things, clinical trial design, patient informed consent, ethical factors and the safety of human subjects. The IRB must review and approve, among other things, the trial protocol and informed consent information to be provided to clinical trial subjects or their legal representatives and must operate in compliance with FDA regulations.

Clinical trials must also comply with extensive GCP standards intended to ensure protection of human subjects and the quality and integrity of the study data, including requirements for obtaining subjects' informed consent. Additionally, some clinical trials are overseen by an independent group of qualified experts organized by the clinical trial sponsor, known as a data safety monitoring board or committee. This group may recommend continuation of the trial as planned, changes in trial conduct or cessation of the trial at designated checkpoints based on access to certain data from the study. The FDA may at any time while clinical trials are ongoing impose a partial or complete clinical hold based on concerns for patient safety and/or noncompliance with regulatory requirements. This order issued by the FDA would cause suspension of an ongoing trial until all outstanding concerns have been adequately addressed, and the FDA has notified the company that investigations may proceed.

Human clinical trials to evaluate therapeutic indications to support NDAs and BLAs for marketing approval are typically conducted in three sequential phases that may overlap or be combined:

- Phase 1: The product candidate is initially introduced into human subjects, who are commonly healthy volunteers, and tested for safety, dosage tolerance, absorption, metabolism, distribution, and excretion, and if possible, to gain early evidence for effectiveness.
- Phase 2: Clinical trials are conducted in a limited patient population with a specified disease or condition to identify possible adverse effects and safety risks, to preliminarily evaluate the efficacy of the product for specific targeted diseases and to determine dosage tolerance and optimal dosage.
- Phase 3: Clinical trials are undertaken with an expanded patient population to further evaluate dosage, and to provide substantial evidence of clinical efficacy and safety in an expanded patient population, often at geographically dispersed clinical study sites. These studies are intended to establish the overall risk-benefit ratio of the product candidate and provide, if appropriate, an adequate basis for product labeling.

Post-approval trials, sometimes referred to as Phase 4 clinical trials, may be conducted after initial marketing approval. These trials are used to gain additional experience from the treatment of patients in the intended therapeutic indication, to document a clinical benefit in the case of drugs or biologics approved under FDA's accelerated approval regulations and to generate additional safety data regarding use of the product in a clinical setting. In certain instances, the FDA may mandate the performance of Phase 4 clinical trials as a condition of approval of an NDA or BLA. Failure to exhibit due diligence with regard to conducting Phase 4 clinical trials could result in withdrawal of approval for the product.

The FDA or the sponsor may suspend or terminate a clinical trial at any time on various grounds, including a finding that the research subjects or patients are being exposed to an unacceptable health risk. Similarly, an IRB can suspend or terminate approval of a clinical trial at its institution if the clinical trial is not being conducted in accordance with the clinical protocol, GCP or other IRB requirements or if the drug has been associated with unexpected serious harm to patients.

During the development of a new drug or biological product, sponsors have the opportunity to meet with the FDA at certain points, including prior to submission of an IND, at the end of phase 2 and before submission of an NDA or

BLA. These meetings can provide an opportunity for the sponsor to share information about the data gathered to date and for the FDA to provide advice on the next phase of development.

Concurrent with clinical trials, companies usually complete additional non-clinical studies and must also develop additional information about the physical characteristics of the drug or biological product and finalize a process for manufacturing the product in commercial quantities in accordance with cGMP requirements. The manufacturing process must be capable of consistently producing quality batches of the product candidate and, among other things, the manufacturer must develop methods for testing the identity, strength, quality, potency and purity of the final drug or biological product. For biological products in particular, the PHSA emphasizes the importance of manufacturing controls for products whose attributes cannot be precisely defined in order to help ensure safety, purity and potency.

Marketing Application Submission and FDA Review

Assuming successful completion of the required clinical testing, the results of the preclinical studies and clinical trials, along with information relating to the product's chemistry, manufacturing, controls ("CMC") and proposed labeling, are submitted to the FDA as part of an NDA or BLA requesting approval to market the product for one or more indications. Data may come from company-sponsored clinical trials intended to test the safety and efficacy of a product's use or from a number of alternative sources, including studies initiated by investigators. To support marketing approval, the data submitted must be sufficient in quality to establish the safety and efficacy of the investigational product to the satisfaction of the FDA. The fee required for the submission of an NDA or BLA under the Prescription Drug User Fee Act ("PDUFA") is substantial (for example, for fiscal year 2025 this application fee is approximately $4.3 million), and the sponsor of an approved NDA or BLA is also subject to an annual program fee, currently more than $403,000 per program. These fees are typically adjusted annually, but exemptions and waivers may be available under certain circumstances. No user fee is required for orphan drug product applications, except when an application also includes an indication for a non-rare disease or condition.

The FDA conducts a preliminary review of all NDAs and BLAs within 60 days of receipt and informs the sponsor by the 74th day after the FDA's receipt of the submission whether an application is sufficiently complete to permit substantive review. The FDA may request additional information rather than accept an NDA or BLA for filing. In this event, the application must be resubmitted with the additional information.

After the submission is accepted for filing, the FDA begins an in-depth substantive review of the application. Under the goals and policies agreed to by the FDA under PDUFA, the FDA has ten months from the filing date in which to complete its initial review of a standard application and respond to the applicant and six months from the filing date for an application with priority review. The review process may be extended by the FDA for three additional months to consider new information or in the case of a clarification provided by the applicant to address an outstanding deficiency identified by the FDA following the original submission. Despite these review goals, it is not uncommon for FDA review of an NDA or BLA to extend beyond the PDUFA goal date.

Before approving an NDA or BLA, the FDA will typically conduct a pre-approval inspection of the manufacturing facilities for the therapeutic/biologic to determine whether the manufacturing processes and facilities comply with cGMPs. The FDA will not approve the product unless it determines that the manufacturing processes and facilities comply with cGMP requirements and are adequate to assure consistent production of the product within required specifications. The FDA also may inspect the sponsor and one or more clinical trial sites to assure compliance with GCP requirements and the integrity of the clinical data submitted to the FDA.

Additionally, the FDA may refer any NDA or BLA, including applications for novel product candidates which present difficult questions of safety or efficacy, to an advisory committee for review, evaluation and recommendation as to whether the application should be approved and under what conditions. Typically, an advisory committee is a panel of independent experts, including clinicians and other scientific experts. The FDA is not bound by the recommendation of an advisory committee, but it considers such recommendations when making final decisions on approval. The FDA also may require submission of a Risk Evaluation and Mitigation Strategy ("REMS"), if it determines that a REMS is necessary to ensure that the benefits of the drug outweigh its risks and to assure the safe use of the drug or biological product. If the FDA concludes a REMS is needed, the sponsor of the NDA or BLA must submit a proposed REMS and the FDA will not approve the NDA or BLA without a REMS.

Under the Pediatric Research Equity Act of 2003 ("PREA"), an NDA or BLA or certain supplements thereto must contain data that are adequate to assess the safety and effectiveness of the product for the claimed indications in all relevant pediatric subpopulations, and to support dosing and administration for each pediatric subpopulation for which the product is safe and effective, unless this requirement is waived, deferred or inapplicable. Sponsors must submit a pediatric study plan to FDA outlining the proposed pediatric study or studies they plan to conduct, including study objectives and design, any deferral or waiver requests and other information required by regulation. The FDA must then review the information submitted, consult with the sponsor and agree upon a final plan. In general, PREA requirements do not apply to drugs or biologics for indications granted orphan drug designation by the FDA.

The FDA reviews an NDA or BLA to determine, among other things, whether a product is safe and effective for its intended use and whether its manufacturing is cGMP-compliant to assure and preserve the product's identity, strength, quality and purity. The approval process is lengthy and often difficult, and the FDA may refuse to approve an NDA or BLA if the applicable regulatory criteria are not satisfied or may require additional clinical or other data and information. After evaluating the application and all related information, the FDA may issue either an approval letter or a Complete Response Letter ("CRL"). An approval letter authorizes commercial marketing of the product with specific prescribing information for specific indications. A CRL indicates that the review cycle of the application is complete, and the application will not be approved in its present form. A CRL generally outlines the deficiencies in the submission and may require substantial additional testing or information in order for the FDA to reconsider the application. If a CRL is issued, the applicant may either resubmit the NDA or BLA addressing all of the deficiencies identified in the letter or withdraw the application. If and when those deficiencies have been addressed to the FDA's satisfaction in a resubmission of the NDA or BLA, the FDA will issue an approval letter.

If a product receives regulatory approval from the FDA, the approval is limited to the conditions of use (e.g., patient population, indication) described in the FDA-approved labeling. Further, depending on the specific risk(s) to be addressed, the FDA may require that contraindications, warnings or precautions be included in the product labeling, require that post-approval trials, including Phase 4 clinical trials, be conducted to further assess a product's safety after approval, require testing and surveillance programs to monitor the product after commercialization or impose other conditions, including distribution and use restrictions or other risk management mechanisms under a REMS which can materially affect the potential market and profitability of the product. The FDA may prevent or limit further marketing of a product based on the results of post-marketing trials or surveillance programs. After approval, some types of changes to the approved product, such as adding new indications, manufacturing changes and additional labeling claims, are subject to further testing requirements and FDA review and approval.

Regulation of Combination Products

Certain products may be comprised of components, such as drug or biologic components and device components that would normally be regulated under different types of regulations, and frequently by different centers at the FDA. These products are known as combination products. We expect to rely on a delivery system, such as pre-filled syringes, pen-injectors and/or autoinjectors to deliver certain of our product candidates. Although we have not yet selected the delivery system to use for administration of such product candidates, including RLYB116, we expect that, if approved, any such product candidate would be regulated as a combination product, because it is composed of both a drug or biological product and a delivery system "device."

Under the FDCA and its implementing regulations, the FDA is charged with assigning a center with primary jurisdiction, or a lead center, for review of a combination product. The designation of a lead center generally eliminates the need to receive approvals from more than one FDA center for combination products, although the lead center may consult with other centers within the FDA. The determination of which center will be the lead center is based on the "primary mode of action" of the combination product. Thus, if the primary mode of action of a drug-device combination product is attributable to the drug product, the FDA center responsible for review of the drug product would have primary jurisdiction for the combination product.

A combination product involving a novel drug or biological product and delivery system generally would have a drug or biologic primary mode of action. A combination product with a drug or biologic primary mode of action would be reviewed and approved pursuant to the drug or biologic approval processes. In reviewing the NDA or BLA for such a product, however, the FDA review division reviewing the application could consult with their counterparts in the device center to ensure that the device component of the combination product met applicable requirements regarding safety, effectiveness, durability and performance. Approval may require the performance of certain clinical studies, such as clinical usability or human factors studies to demonstrate the safety and/or effectiveness of the device component of the combination product.

Similar considerations apply to regulation of drugs combined with delivery systems outside the United States, including in the EU.

Expedited Programs for Serious Conditions

The FDA is authorized to designate certain products for expedited development or review if they are intended to address an unmet medical need in the treatment of a serious or life-threatening disease or condition. These programs include fast track designation, breakthrough therapy designation, priority review designation and accelerated approval.

To be eligible for a fast track designation, the FDA must determine, based on the request of a sponsor, that a product is intended to treat a serious or life-threatening disease or condition and demonstrates the potential to address an unmet medical need by providing a therapy where none exists or a therapy that may be potentially superior to existing therapy based on efficacy or safety factors. Fast track designation provides opportunities for earlier and more frequent interactions with the FDA review team to expedite development and review of the product. The FDA also may review sections of the NDA or BLA for a fast track product on a rolling basis before the complete application is submitted if the sponsor and the FDA agree on a schedule for the submission of the application sections and the sponsor pays any required user fees upon submission of the first section of the NDA or BLA. Fast track designation may be rescinded by the FDA if the designation is no longer supported by data emerging from the clinical trial process.

In addition, a new drug or biological product may be eligible for Breakthrough Therapy designation if it is intended, alone or in combination with one or more other drugs or biologics, to treat a serious or life-threatening disease or condition, and preliminary clinical evidence indicates that the drug or biologic may demonstrate substantial improvement over existing therapies on one or more clinically significant endpoints, such as substantial treatment effects observed early in clinical development. Breakthrough Therapy designation provides all the features of Fast Track designation in addition to intensive guidance on an efficient development program beginning as early as Phase 1 and FDA organizational commitment to expedited development, including involvement of senior managers and experienced review staff in a cross-disciplinary review, where appropriate. Breakthrough designation may be rescinded by the FDA if the designation is no longer supported.

The FDA may designate a product for priority review if it is a drug or biologic that treats a serious condition and, if approved, would provide a significant improvement in safety or effectiveness. The FDA determines at the time that the marketing application is submitted, on a case-by-case basis, whether the proposed drug or biologic qualifies for priority review. A priority review designation is intended to direct overall attention and resources to the evaluation of such applications and to shorten the FDA's goal for taking action on a marketing application from ten months to six months for an original BLA or NDA from the date of filing.

Fast track designation, breakthrough therapy designation and priority review do not change the standards for approval and may not ultimately expedite the development or approval process.

Finally, the FDA may grant accelerated approval to a product for a serious or life-threatening condition that provides meaningful therapeutic advantage to patients over existing treatments based upon a determination that the product has an effect on a surrogate endpoint that is reasonably likely to predict clinical benefit. The FDA may also grant accelerated approval for such a condition when the product has an effect on an intermediate clinical endpoint that can be measured earlier than an effect on irreversible morbidity or mortality ("IMM") and that is reasonably likely to predict an effect on IMM or other clinical benefit, taking into account the severity, rarity, or prevalence of the condition and the availability or lack of alternative treatments. For drugs granted accelerated approval, FDA generally requires sponsors to conduct, in a diligent manner, additional post-approval confirmatory studies to verify and describe the product's clinical benefit. Failure to conduct required post-approval studies with due diligence, failure to confirm a clinical benefit during the post-approval studies, or dissemination of false or misleading promotional materials would allow the FDA to withdraw the product approval on an expedited basis. All promotional materials for product candidates approved under accelerated approval are subject to prior review by the FDA unless FDA informs the applicant otherwise.

Post-Approval Requirements

Following approval of a new product, the manufacturer and the approved product are subject to pervasive and continuing regulation by the FDA, governing, among other things, monitoring and recordkeeping activities, reporting of adverse experiences with the product and product problems to the FDA, product sampling and distribution, manufacturing and promotion and advertising. Although physicians may prescribe legally available products for unapproved uses or patient populations (i.e., "off-label uses"), manufacturers may not market or promote such uses. The FDA and other agencies actively enforce the laws and regulations prohibiting the promotion of off-label uses, and a company that is found to have improperly promoted off-label uses may be subject to significant liability. The current presidential administration announced in September 2025 that it intends to prioritize enforcement of pharmaceutical advertising requirements.

If there are any modifications to the product, including changes in indications, labeling or manufacturing processes or facilities, the applicant may be required to submit and obtain FDA approval of a new NDA/BLA or an NDA/BLA supplement, which may require the applicant to develop additional data or conduct additional preclinical studies and clinical trials. The FDA may also place other conditions on approvals including the requirement for a REMS to assure the safe use of the product, which may require substantial commitment of resources post-approval to ensure compliance. A REMS could include medication guides, physician communication plans or elements to assure safe use, such as restricted distribution methods, patient registries and other risk minimization tools. Any of these limitations on approval or marketing could restrict the commercial promotion, distribution, prescription or dispensing of products. Product approvals may be withdrawn for non-compliance with regulatory standards or if problems occur following initial marketing.

FDA regulations require that drug and biological products be manufactured in specific approved facilities and in accordance with cGMP. The cGMP regulations include requirements relating to organization of personnel, buildings and facilities, equipment, control of components and drug product containers and closures, production and process controls, packaging and labeling controls, holding and distribution, laboratory controls, records and reports and returned or salvaged products. The manufacturing facilities for our product candidates must meet cGMP requirements and satisfy the FDA or comparable foreign regulatory authorities' satisfaction before any product is approved and our commercial products can be manufactured. In addition, for any of our product candidates that include a device delivery system, the device component will be subject to aspects of the Quality System Regulation ("QSR") applicable to medical devices. Manufacturers of drug-device combination products may either opt to comply with all quality regulations governing each component of the product separately, or may take a "streamlined approach" to cGMP that allows the manufacturer to demonstrate compliance with the drug cGMP along with compliance with several specific provisions from the device QSR—namely, management responsibility, design controls, purchasing controls, corrective and preventive action, installation, and servicing, as applicable.

We rely, and expect to continue to rely, on third parties for the production of clinical and commercial quantities of our products in accordance with cGMP regulations. These manufacturers must comply with cGMP regulations, including requirements for quality control and quality assurance, the maintenance of records and documentation and the obligation to investigate and correct any deviations from cGMP. Manufacturers and other entities involved in the manufacture and distribution of approved drugs or biologics are required to register their establishments with the FDA and certain state agencies and are subject to periodic unannounced inspections by the FDA and certain state agencies for compliance with cGMP and other laws. Accordingly, manufacturers must continue to expend time, money and effort in the area of production and quality control to maintain cGMP compliance.

Once an approval of a drug/biologic product is granted, the FDA may withdraw the approval if compliance with regulatory requirements and standards is not maintained or if problems occur after the product reaches the market. Later discovery of previously unknown problems with a product, including adverse events of unanticipated severity or frequency, or with manufacturing processes, or failure to comply with regulatory requirements, may result in mandatory revisions to the approved labeling to add new safety information, imposition of post-market clinical trials requirement to assess new safety risks or imposition of distribution or other restrictions under a REMS program. Other potential consequences include, among other things:

- restrictions on the marketing or manufacturing of the product, complete withdrawal of the product from the market or product recalls;
- safety alerts, Dear Healthcare Provider letters, press releases or other communications containing warnings or other safety information about a product;
- mandated modification of promotional materials and labeling and issuance of corrective information;
- fines, warning letters, untitled letters or other enforcement-related letters or clinical holds on post-approval clinical trials;
- refusal of the FDA to approve pending NDAs/BLAs or supplements to approved NDAs/BLAs, or suspension or revocation of product approvals;
- product seizure or detention, or refusal to permit the import or export of products;
- injunctions or the imposition of civil or criminal penalties; and
- consent decrees, corporate integrity agreements, debarment, or exclusion from federal health care programs; or mandated modification of promotional materials and labeling and the issuance of corrective information.

In addition, the distribution of prescription pharmaceutical products is subject to the Prescription Drug Marketing Act, which regulates the distribution of drugs and drug samples at the federal level and sets minimum standards for the registration and regulation of drug distributors by the states. Additionally, the Drug Supply Chain Security Act imposes requirements related to identifying and tracing certain prescription drugs distributed in the United States, including most biological products.

U.S. Patent Term Restoration and Hatch-Waxman Marketing Exclusivity

Depending upon the timing, duration and specifics of FDA approval for our product candidates, some of our U.S. patents may be eligible for limited PTE under the Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act of 1984, commonly referred to as the Hatch-Waxman Amendments. The Hatch Waxman Amendments permit restoration of the patent term up to five years as compensation for patent term lost during the FDA regulatory review process. Patent-term restoration, however, cannot extend the remaining term of a patent beyond a total of 14 years from the product's approval date, and only those claims covering such approved drug product, a method for using it or a method for manufacturing it may be extended. The patent-term restoration period is generally one-half the time between the effective date of an IND and the submission date of an NDA or BLA plus the time during which the applicant failed to exercise due diligence. Only one patent applicable to an approved drug is eligible for the extension, and the application for the extension must be submitted prior to the expiration of the patent. The USPTO, in consultation with the FDA, reviews and approves the application for any PTE or restoration.

Regulatory exclusivity provisions under the FDCA also can delay the submission or the approval of certain applications. The FDCA provides a five-year period of non-patent marketing exclusivity within the United States to the first applicant to gain approval of an NDA for a new chemical entity. During the exclusivity period, the FDA may not accept for review an abbreviated new drug application ("ANDA") or a 505(b)(2) NDA submitted by another company for another version of such drug. However, an application may be submitted after four years if it contains a certification of patent invalidity or non-infringement.

The FDCA also provides three years of exclusivity for an NDA, 505(b)(2) NDA or supplement to an existing NDA if new clinical investigations, other than bioavailability studies, that were conducted or sponsored by the applicant are deemed by the FDA to be essential to the approval of the application. This three-year exclusivity covers only the conditions of use associated with the new clinical investigations and does not prohibit the FDA from approving ANDAs for drugs containing the original active agent for other conditions of use. Three-year exclusivity will not delay the submission or approval of a full NDA. However, an applicant submitting a full NDA would be required to conduct or obtain a right of reference to all of the preclinical studies and adequate and well-controlled clinical trials necessary to demonstrate safety and effectiveness.

In addition, both drugs and biologics can obtain pediatric exclusivity in the United States. Pediatric exclusivity, if granted, adds six months to existing exclusivity periods and patent terms. This six-month exclusivity, which runs from the end of other exclusivity protection or patent term, may be granted based on the voluntary completion of a pediatric study in accordance with an FDA-issued "Written Request" for such a study.

Biosimilars and Reference Product Exclusivity for Biological Products

In March 2010, the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act ("ACA") was enacted in the United States and included the Biologics Price Competition and Innovation Act of 2009 (the "BPCIA"). The BPCIA amended the PHSA to create an abbreviated approval pathway for biological products that are biosimilar to or interchangeable with an FDA-licensed reference biological product. To date, the FDA has approved a number of biosimilars. The FDA approved the first interchangeable biosimilar product in 2021 and has since approved others. The FDA has also issued several guidance documents outlining its approach to reviewing and approving biosimilars and interchangeable biosimilars.

Under the BPCIA, a manufacturer may submit an application that is "biosimilar to" or "interchangeable with" a previously approved biological product or "reference product." In order for the FDA to approve a biosimilar product, it must find that there are no clinically meaningful differences between the reference product and proposed biosimilar product in terms of safety, purity and potency. For the FDA to approve a biosimilar product as interchangeable with a reference product, the agency must find that the biosimilar product can be expected to produce the same clinical results as the reference product and (for products administered multiple times) that the biologic and the reference biologic may be switched after one has been previously administered without increasing safety risks or risks of diminished efficacy relative to exclusive use of the reference biologic. Upon licensure by the FDA, an interchangeable biosimilar may be substituted for the reference product without the intervention of the health care provider who prescribed the reference product.

The biosimilar applicant must demonstrate that the product is biosimilar based on data from analytical studies showing that the biosimilar product is highly similar to the reference product, data from animal studies (including toxicity) and data from one or more clinical studies to demonstrate safety, purity and potency in one or more appropriate conditions of use for which the reference product is approved. In addition, the applicant must show that the biosimilar and reference products have the same mechanism of action for the conditions of use on the label, route of administration, dosage and strength, and the production facility must meet standards designed to assure product safety, purity, and potency.

A reference biological product is granted 12 years of data exclusivity from the time of first licensure of the product, and the first approved interchangeable biologic product will be granted an exclusivity period of up to one year after it is first commercially marketed. The FDA will not accept an application for a biosimilar or interchangeable product based on the reference biological product until four years after the date of first licensure of the reference product.

The BPCIA is complex and only beginning to be interpreted and implemented by the FDA. In addition, recent government proposals have sought to reduce the 12-year reference product exclusivity period. Other aspects of the BPCIA, some of which may impact the BPCIA exclusivity provisions, have also been the subject of recent litigation. As a result, the ultimate impact, implementation and meaning of the BPCIA is subject to significant uncertainty.

Regulation Outside of the United States

In addition to regulations in the United States, we will be subject to a variety of foreign regulations governing clinical trials and commercial sales and distribution of our products. Whether or not we obtain FDA approval for a product candidate, we must obtain approval from the comparable regulatory authorities of foreign countries or economic areas, such as the EU, before we may commence clinical trials or market products in those countries or areas.

Until recently, the EMA and the European Commission ("EC") were responsible for approving new medicines for supply in Northern Ireland according to the Northern Ireland Protocol. From January 1, 2025, in accordance with the "Windsor Framework," all new medicines for the UK market, including Northern Ireland, will be authorized by the MHRA and UK packaging must carry a clearly legible 'UK only' to be allowed onto the UK market. The International Recognition Procedure ("IRP") provides the framework for the MHRA to take into account assessments of medicinal products conducted by trusted regulatory authorities in Australia, Canada, Switzerland, Singapore, Japan, the United States and the EU when assessing applications for marketing authorization.

With the exception of the EU EEA applying harmonized regulatory rules for medicinal products, the approval process and requirements governing the conduct of clinical trials, product licensing, and pricing and reimbursement vary greatly between countries and jurisdictions and can involve additional testing and additional administrative review periods. The time required to obtain approval in other countries and jurisdictions might differ from and be longer than that required to obtain FDA approval. Regulatory approval in one country or jurisdiction does not ensure regulatory approval in another, but a failure or delay in obtaining regulatory approval in one country or jurisdiction may negatively impact the regulatory process in others.

European Union Drug Development, Review and Approval

In the EU, our product candidates will be subject to extensive regulatory requirements. As in the United States, medicinal products can be marketed only if a marketing authorization ("MA") is granted by a competent regulatory agency. Similar to the United States, the various phases of preclinical and clinical research in the EU are subject to significant regulatory controls.

In the EU, clinical trials are primarily regulated by the CTR.

The CTR requires sponsors to submit one clinical trial authorization ("CTA") application via the Clinical Trials Information System, which will then be reviewed by the competent regulatory agency selected by the sponsor as the reporting Member State to lead the validation and evaluation of the application. If successful, the resulting CTA would cover all EU Member States concerned by the application. However, a concerned Member State may in limited circumstances declare an "opt-out" from an approval and prevent the clinical trial from being conducted in such Member State. In addition to a CTA, sponsors of clinical trials conducted in the EU must also obtain a positive opinion on the clinical trial from a research ethics committee in each Member State where the trial will be conducted.

Combination Products

Product candidates that incorporate a medical device for the administration of the medicinal product, and which are intended to be commercialized as a single integral product used exclusively in the given combination, will be regulated by Directive 2001/83/EC or Regulation (EC) 726/2004 as a medicinal product. However, the medical device component must satisfy the general safety and performance requirements under applicable EU law governing general medical devices. Proof of such must be included in an application for MA for the combination product. In particular, to the extent the device component has already been conformity assessed and a European Conformity ("CE") mark affixed, the certificate of conformity issued by the Notified Body must be provided in the MA application dossier. Where the medical device component has not already been CE marked, the MA application dossier must include an opinion issued by a notified body on the conformity of the device component against the relevant general safety and performance requirements set out in Annex I of Regulation (EU) 2017/745.

EU regulatory regime contemplates that MAs can be granted either centrally or nationally, albeit through mutual recognition or decentralized procedure, depending on the type of product and the therapeutic indications for which approval is being sought.

Centralized Procedure

The centralized procedure is compulsory for: medicinal products produced by biotechnology; orphan medicinal products; advanced-therapy medicinal products such as gene-therapies; and medicinal products containing new active substances and which are indicated for the treatment of HIV, AIDS and immune dysfunctions, cancer, neurodegenerative diseases, diabetes, autoimmune and other immune dysfunctions, and viral diseases. The centralized procedure is optional for other medicines containing a new active substance, which constitute a significant therapeutic, scientific or technical innovation, or which are in the interest of public health in the EU. Under the centralized procedure, a single MA application is submitted to the EMA where it will be evaluated by its advisory committee, the Committee for Medicinal Products for Human Use (the "CHMP"). Under the centralized procedure, the maximum timeframe for the evaluation of a MA application by the EMA is 210 days, excluding clock stops. Clock-stops allow the applicant the necessary time to provide additional information in response to questions raised by the CHMP. The clock-stops considerably extend the time taken by the CHMP to complete the evaluation of a MA application. The EMA will then provide the EC with an opinion on whether the medicinal product should be approved. Ordinarily, within 67 days of receipt of a positive scientific opinion from the EMA, the EC will adopt single MA an implementing decision on granting a centralized marketing authorization. A centralized MA is valid for all EU member states and, by extension (after taking the corresponding national implementing measures), in Norway, Iceland and Liechtenstein.

National Procedure

The purely national procedure results in a MA in a single EU Member State. This route is available for products not falling within the mandatory scope of the centralized procedure.

Decentralized Procedure

The decentralized procedure allows national MA applications in respect of medicinal products not authorized in the EU/European Economic Area ("EEA") to be submitted simultaneously in multiple EU member states. This is in contrast to the mutual recognition procedure, which applies if the product has been authorized in at least one EU member state on a national basis, and the applicant seeks approval progressively of the same medicinal product in one or more EU member state(s). Both the decentralized and mutual recognition procedures provide for approval by one or more "concerned" member state(s) based on an assessment of an application performed by one "reference" member state. Under the decentralized procedure, an applicant submits an application, accompanied by a dossier, containing the requisite scientific data, and related materials to the reference member state and concerned member state(s). The reference member state prepares a draft assessment and drafts of the related materials within 120 days of the receipt of a valid application. Within 90 days of receiving the reference member state's positive assessment report, each concerned member state must approve the assessment report and related materials, unless they identify a potential serious risk to public health.

Mutual Recognition Procedure

Under the mutual recognition procedure, the concerned member state(s) have a 90-day period to recognize the MA in the reference member state. The decentralized procedure contemplates a single clock-stop at day 105 for applicants to address questions raised by the reference member state and concerned member states, which may extend the process for completing the assessment procedure.

In either case, if there is a disagreement between member states during the assessment of the submitted data based on concerns about serious risks to public health, the Coordination Group for Mutual Recognition and Decentralized Procedures will consider the matter and seek to reach a conclusion within 60 days. If this is not possible, the reference member state can escalate the issue to the EMA for arbitration.

Conditional Marketing Authorization

In specific circumstances, Regulation (EC) No 726/2004 (as amended) enables applicants to obtain a conditional MA prior to obtaining the comprehensive clinical data required for an application for a full MA. Such conditional approvals may be granted for product candidates (including medicines designated as orphan medicinal products) if (1) the product candidate is intended for the treatment, prevention or medical diagnosis of seriously debilitating or life-threatening diseases; (2) the drug candidate is intended to meet unmet medical needs of patients; (3) a MA may be granted prior to submission of comprehensive clinical data provided that the benefit of the immediate availability on the market of the medicinal product concerned outweighs the risk inherent in the fact that additional data are still required; (4) the risk-benefit balance of the product candidate is positive, and (5) it is likely that the applicant will be in a position to provide the required comprehensive clinical trial data. A conditional MA requires specific obligations to be fulfilled by the MA holder, including obligations with respect to the completion of ongoing or new studies and with respect to the collection of pharmacovigilance data. Conditional MAs are valid for one year, and can be renewed annually, if the risk-benefit balance remains positive, and after a satisfactory re-assessment of benefit: risk balance and progress in fulfilling the specific obligations. Failure to submit the required comprehensive data may result in regulatory action against the conditional marketing authorization, including the possibility of its revocation. The timelines for the centralized procedure described above also apply with respect to the review by the CHMP of applications for a conditional MA.

Pediatric Studies

In the EEA, companies developing a new medicinal product must agree upon a pediatric investigation plan ("PIP"), with the EMA's Pediatric Committee ("PDCO") and must conduct pediatric clinical trials in accordance with that PIP, unless a waiver applies. The PIP sets out the timing and measures proposed for the generation of data to support a pediatric indication of the drug for which a MA is being sought. The PDCO can grant a deferral of the obligation to implement some or all of the measures of the PIP until there are sufficient data to demonstrate the efficacy and safety of the product in adults or other age groups not covered by the agreed PIP. Further, the obligation to provide pediatric clinical trial data can be waived by the PDCO in circumstances where the medicinal product or the product class is likely to be ineffective or unsafe in part or all of the pediatric population; or the disease or condition occurs only in adult populations, or the specific medicinal product does not represent a significant therapeutic benefit over existing treatments in pediatric patients. Products that are granted a MA with the results of the pediatric clinical trials conducted in accordance with the PIP (even where such results are negative) are eligible for a six month extension to their supplementary protection certificate. In the case of orphan medicinal products, a two-year extension of the orphan market exclusivity may be available. This pediatric reward is subject to the condition that the results are provided in respect of all studies in compliance with the agreed PIP.

European Union Regulatory Data Exclusivity

In the EU, new products containing a new active substance are considered as "reference medicinal products," and accordingly qualify for eight years of data exclusivity and an additional two years of marketing exclusivity upon granting of a MA. The data exclusivity period prevents generic or biosimilar applicants from relying on the preclinical and clinical trial data contained in the dossier of the reference medicinal product when applying for a generic or biosimilar MA in the EU. The marketing exclusivity period prevents a successful generic or biosimilar MA applicant from commercializing its product in the EU until ten years have elapsed from the initial authorization of the reference medicinal product in the EU. The ten-year market exclusivity period can be extended to a maximum of eleven years if, during the first eight years of those ten years, the MA holder obtains an authorization for one or more new therapeutic indications which, during the scientific evaluation prior to their authorization, are held to bring a significant clinical benefit in comparison with existing therapies.

European Union Orphan Designation and Exclusivity

The criteria for designating an orphan medicinal product in the EU are similar in principle to those in the United States. Under Article 3 of Regulation (EC) 141/2000, a medicinal product may be designated as orphan if it is intended for the diagnosis, prevention or treatment of a life-threatening or chronically debilitating condition, which either (a) affects not more than five in 10,000 persons in the EU when the application is made, or (b), without the benefits derived from orphan status, would not generate sufficient return in the EU to justify investment. In each case, there exists no satisfactory method of diagnosis, prevention or treatment of such condition authorized in the EU, or if such a method exists, the product will be of significant benefit to those affected by the condition. The term 'significant benefit' is defined in Regulation (EC) 847/2000 to mean a clinically relevant advantage or a major contribution to patient care.

Orphan medicinal products are upon grant of a MA, entitled to ten years of market exclusivity for the approved therapeutic indication. During this ten-year market exclusivity period, the EMA or the competent authorities of the Member States of the EEA, cannot accept an application for a MA for a similar medicinal product for the same indication. A similar medicinal product is defined as a medicinal product containing a similar active substance or substances as contained in an authorized orphan medicinal product, and which is intended for the same therapeutic indication. The application for orphan designation must be submitted before the application for MA. The applicant will receive a fee reduction for the MA application if the orphan designation has been granted, but not if the designation is still pending at the time the MA is submitted. Orphan designation does not convey any advantage in, or shorten the duration of, the regulatory review and approval process.

The ten-year market exclusivity in the EU may be reduced to six years if, at the end of the fifth year, it is established that the product no longer meets the criteria for orphan designation, for example, if the product is sufficiently profitable not to justify maintenance of market exclusivity. Additionally, MA may be granted to a similar product for the same indication at any time if:

- the second applicant can establish that its product, although similar, is safer, more effective or otherwise clinically superior;
- the applicant consents to a second orphan medicinal product application; or
- the applicant cannot supply enough of the orphan medicinal product.

An equivalent regime is reflected in domestic law in the UK. Under the UK regime, however, orphan designations are not granted and instead a decision is made at the point of MA grant.

RLYB212 has been granted orphan drug designation by the EMA for the prevention of FNAIT.

Priority Medicines Designation

Developers of innovative medicinal product can apply to the EMA for access to the Priority Medicines ("PRIME") program. A medicinal product will be accepted onto the PRIME scheme if the EMA determines that the available preliminary data demonstrate the medicinal product's potential to address an unmet medical need and bring a major therapeutic advantage to patients. As part of the program, EMA provides early and enhanced dialogue and support to optimize the development of eligible medicines and speed up their evaluation, aiming to bring promising treatments to patients sooner. Rallybio anticipates that it will request PRIME designation for certain of our product candidates.

Periods of Authorization and Renewals

In general, an initial MA is valid for five years and may be renewed on the basis of a re-evaluation of the risk-benefit balance by the EMA or by the competent authority of the authorizing member state. To this end, the MA holder must provide the EMA or the competent authority with a consolidated version of the file in respect of the medicinal product's quality, safety and efficacy, including all variations introduced since the MA was granted, at least nine months before the MA ceases to be valid. Once renewed, the MA is generally valid for an unlimited period, unless the EC or the competent authority decides, on justified grounds relating to pharmacovigilance, to proceed with one additional five-year renewal.

In accordance with the sunset clause, any authorization which is not followed by the actual placing of the drug on the EU market (in case of centralized procedure) or on the market of the authorizing member state (in the case of the national, decentralized and mutual recognition procedures) within three years after the MA is granted will cease to be valid.

The EU is currently revising its general pharmaceutical legislation, known as the 'Pharma Package'. This initiative is designed to ensure fair access to safe, effective, and affordable medicines throughout the EU. It also aims to boost the competitiveness of the pharmaceutical industry by reducing regulatory burdens and enhancing supply chain security to better prevent and manage shortages.

The legislative process began with the European Commission's proposal in April 2023, followed by the development of positions by the European Parliament and the Council. Trilogue negotiations concluded with a political agreement in December 2025. The agreed text now awaits formal adoption by both the Parliament and Council, after which it will be published in the Official Journal of the EU.

Key measures include a new exclusivity framework, enhanced incentives for orphan drugs and antibiotics, an expanded Bolar exemption, and a shortened regulatory assessment timeframe. The reforms also introduce stricter controls on product availability and supply shortages. It is anticipated that the new EU pharmaceutical legislation will be fully applicable in 2028, following a two-year transition period.

Additionally, in December 2025, the EC proposed the Biotech Act. This legislation is intended to strengthen the competitiveness of the biotechnology sector and facilitate the development and timely market entry of biotechnology innovations, while maintaining high standards for the protection of human health. The Biotech Act introduces a 12-month extension to the Supplementary Protection Certificate ("SPC") for advanced therapy medicinal products such as gene and cell therapies, and innovative biotech medicines. This extension aims to incentivize EU-based manufacturing and R&D by rewarding novel, highly effective medicines that conduct clinical trials across multiple EU Member States, addressing the time lost in regulatory approval.

Brexit and the Regulatory Framework in the United Kingdom

The UK formally left the EU on January 31, 2020, and after the expiry of the transition period on December 31, 2020, became a "third country" for the purposes of EU law. At present, the regulatory regime in the UK broadly aligns with EU regulations. However, it is possible that the regime may diverge in the future. It remains to be seen how Brexit will impact regulatory requirements for product candidates and products in the UK in the long-term.

The EU and the UK concluded a trade and cooperation agreement ("TCA"), which was applied provisionally from January 1, 2021 and entered into force on May 1, 2021. The TCA includes specific provisions concerning pharmaceuticals, which include the mutual recognition of the outcomes of GMP inspections and GMP documents. However, the TCA does not foresee wholesale mutual recognition of UK and EU pharmaceutical regulations.

To be used or sold in the UK, a medicinal product must have a valid MA granted through the national application process. National applications are governed by the Human Medicines Regulations (SI 2012/1916). Applications are made electronically through the MHRA Submissions Portal. The MHRA operates fixed submission and assessment timetables for innovative medicines applications to facilitate consultation with its statutory advisory committee, the Commission on Human Medicines ("CHM"). The MHRA assessment procedure for a MA application involves an initial evaluation, including orphan designation if applicable, and consultation with expert advisory groups as needed. By Day 90, applicants receive a consolidated request for information ("RFI"), which pauses the review clock until a complete response is submitted electronically. Responses are assessed by Day 150, with further RFIs issued for minor issues or a CHM letter for major objections. Each subsequent RFI requires a complete response within three months, and the clock is restarted upon submission. Applicants may make written or oral representations to the CHM if major objections remain. Final compliance checks are conducted once all issues are resolved, and the MHRA issues a grant or refusal letter specifying any conditions and the MA expiry date. The entire assessment process is designed to be completed within 210 calendar days, excluding any procedural clock-stops for additional information or representations. The innovative medicines timetable allows for a positive decision within 150 clock-on days if all issues are resolved following one round of questions. Where there are outstanding issues at Day 150, we will come to a final decision as soon as possible and within 210 clock-on days. The innovative medicines timetable allows for a positive decision within 150 clock-on days if all issues are resolved following one round of questions. Where there are outstanding issues at Day 150, we will come to a final decision as soon as possible and within 210 clock-on days.

In addition, the MHRA 150-day accelerated review is a specialized, fast-track national MA procedure designed for innovative medicines, new active substances, and biosimilars, aiming for a decision in 150 "clock-on" days rather than the standard 210. It requires high-quality applications, typically involving one round of questions and a 60-day cool-down period for responses.

On August 30, 2023, the MHRA published detailed guidance on its recently announced new IRP for MAAs. The IRP applies from January 1, 2024, and replaces existing EU decision reliance procedure. to apply for authorizations from seven international regulators (e.g. Health Canada, Swiss Medic, FDA, EMA, among others). The IRP allows the MHRA to take into account the assessment and decision-making of the 'Reference Regulators' to perform a targeted assessment of IRP applications but retain the authority to reject applications if the evidence provided is considered insufficiently robust. There exist two recognition timetables for new IRP MAAs: IRP Route A (60 days) and IRP Route B (110 days), both starting from validation. Eligibility is determined via an applicant-completed form six weeks before submission. Recognition A applies to applications with Reference Regulator approval within the past two years, with no clock stop, but may revert to Recognition B if major objections arise. IRP Route B covers Reference Regulator approvals within the past ten years (or exceptionally older) and applies if specific criteria, such as conditional approvals, manufacturing changes, or UK-specific requirements, are met. IRP Route B allows for consultation with the CHM and aligns with CHM dates for new active substances. Applications not eligible for either timetable may be submitted as full national applications if MHRA requirements are met. IRP can be used for post-authorization measures including line extensions, variations, and renewal application.

Rest of the World Regulation

For other countries outside of the EU and the United States, such as countries in Eastern Europe, Latin America or Asia, the requirements governing the conduct of clinical trials, product licensing, pricing and reimbursement vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. Additionally, the clinical trials must be conducted in accordance with current good clinical practice requirements and the applicable regulatory requirements and the ethical principles that have their origin in the Declaration of Helsinki.

If we fail to comply with applicable foreign regulatory requirements, we may be subject to, among other things, fines, suspension or withdrawal of regulatory approvals, product recalls, seizure of products, operating restrictions, and criminal prosecution.

Coverage, Pricing and Reimbursement

Sales of any biopharmaceutical products, if and when approved by the FDA or analogous authorities outside the United States, will depend in significant part on the availability of third-party coverage and reimbursement for the products.

In the United States, third-party payors include government healthcare programs, such as Medicare and Medicaid, private health insurers, managed care plans and other organizations. These third-party payors are increasingly challenging the price and examining the cost-effectiveness of medical products and services, including biopharmaceutical products. Significant uncertainty exists regarding coverage and reimbursement for newly approved healthcare products. Seeking coverage and reimbursement is time consuming and expensive. We may need to conduct expensive pharmacoeconomic studies to demonstrate the medical necessity and cost-effectiveness of our products, which would be in addition to the studies required to obtain FDA regulatory approvals. Third-party payors may take into account clinical practice guidelines in determining coverage and there may be significant delays before our products are addressed by such guidelines and we cannot predict what position such guidelines would take with respect to our products if and when addressed. Coverage and reimbursement varies across third-party payors. Third-party payors may limit coverage to specific products on an approved list, or formulary, which might not include all of the approved products for a particular indication, or utilize other mechanisms to manage utilization (such as requiring prior authorization for coverage for a product for use in a particular patient). Limits on coverage may impact demand for our products. Even if coverage is obtained, third-party reimbursement may not be adequate to allow us to sell our products on a competitive and profitable basis. As a result, we may not be able to maintain price levels high enough to realize an appropriate return on investment in product development.

In addition, in some foreign countries, the proposed pricing for a drug must be approved before it may be lawfully marketed. The requirements governing drug pricing vary widely from country to country. Some countries provide that drug products may be marketed only after a reimbursement price has been agreed. Some countries may require the completion of additional studies that compare the cost-effectiveness of our product candidate to currently available therapies (so called health technology assessment ("HTA") in order to obtain reimbursement or pricing approval). For example, subject to the requirements set out in Directive 89/105/EEC relating to the transparency of measures regulating the pricing of medicinal products for human use and their inclusion in the scope of national health insurance systems, EU Member States have the legal competence to set national measures of an economic nature on the marketing of medicinal products in order to control public health expenditure on such products. Accordingly, EU Member States can restrict the range of medicinal products for which their national health insurance systems provide reimbursement and to control the prices of medicinal products for human use. An EU Member State may approve a specific price for the medicinal product, or it may instead adopt a system of direct or indirect controls on the profitability of the company placing the medicinal product on the market. Other EU Member States allow companies to fix their own prices for drug products but monitor and control prescription volumes and issue guidance to physicians to limit prescriptions. There can be no assurance that any country that has price controls or reimbursement limitations for pharmaceutical products will allow favorable reimbursement and pricing arrangements for any of our products. Historically, products launched in the EU do not follow price structures of the United States and generally tend to be significantly lower.

Regulation (EU) 2021/2282 on health technology assessment (the "HTA Regulation") entered into force on January 11, 2022 and will apply from January 12, 2025. Given the increasing use of HTA to guide market access in EU member states, the HTA Regulation seeks to achieve three legislative objectives: to promote convergence in HTA tools, procedures and methodologies; to ensure efficient use of resources and strengthen the quality of HTA across the EU and to improve business predictability. From January 15, 2025, all new oncology medicines and advanced therapy medicinal products (i.e. gene and cell therapies and tissue engineered products) will be assessed at EU level through the Joint Clinical Assessment procedure ("JCA"), which forms part of an HTA and evaluates the relative clinical effectiveness of a new health technology against one or more other health technologies. Importantly, the outcomes of JCAs are not binding on national HTA bodies which may draw their own conclusions on the clinical added value of a new technology. From January 13, 2028, all new orphan medicinal products will be subject to JCA. From January 13, 2030, all new medicines will come under the scope of the HTA Regulation. The HTA Regulation established the Coordination Group on HTA (the "HTACG") consisting of representatives of EU member states, mainly from HTA authorities or bodies. The HTACG's remit is to coordinate and adopt the joint HTA work carried out by its subgroups within the scope of the HTA Regulation and to adopt methodological and procedural guidance documents for joint work, including JCAs.

The downward pressure on health care costs in general, particularly prescription drugs, has become intense. As a result, increasingly high barriers are being erected to the entry of new products. In addition, there can be considerable pressure by governments and other stakeholders on prices and reimbursement levels, including as part of cost containment measures. Political, economic, and regulatory developments may further complicate pricing negotiations, and pricing negotiations may continue after reimbursement has been obtained. Reference pricing used by various EU Member States and parallel import or distribution (arbitrage between low-priced and high-priced member states) can further reduce prices. Any country that has price controls or reimbursement limitations for drug products may not allow favorable reimbursement and pricing arrangements.

Other U.S. Health Care Laws and Regulations

In the United States, biopharmaceutical manufacturers and their products are subject to extensive regulation at the federal and state level, such as laws intended to prevent fraud and abuse in the healthcare industry, which may constrain their business operations. These laws, some of which will apply only if and when we have an approved product, include:

- federal false claims, false statements and civil monetary penalties laws prohibiting, among other things, any person from knowingly presenting, or causing to be presented, a false claim for payment of government funds or knowingly making, or causing to be made, a false statement to get a false claim paid;
- federal healthcare program anti-kickback law, which prohibits, among other things, persons from offering, soliciting, receiving or providing remuneration, directly or indirectly, to induce either the referral of an individual for, or the purchasing or ordering of, a good or service for which payment may be made under federal healthcare programs such as Medicare and Medicaid;
- the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 ("HIPAA") which, in addition to privacy protections applicable to healthcare providers and other entities, prohibits executing a scheme to defraud any healthcare benefit program or making false statements relating to healthcare matters;
- FDCA, which among other things, strictly regulates drug marketing, prohibits manufacturers from marketing such products prior to approval or for off-label use and regulates the distribution of samples;

- federal laws that require pharmaceutical manufacturers to calculate, report and certify certain complex product prices to the government or provide certain discounts or rebates to government authorities or private entities, often as a condition of reimbursement under government healthcare programs;
- federal Open Payments (or federal "sunshine" law), which requires pharmaceutical and medical device companies to monitor and report certain financial interactions with certain healthcare providers to the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS") for re-disclosure to the public, as well as ownership and investment interests held by physicians and their immediate family members;
- federal consumer protection and unfair competition laws, which broadly regulate marketplace activities and activities that potentially harm consumers;
- analogous state laws and regulations, including: state anti-kickback and false claims laws; state laws requiring pharmaceutical companies to comply with specific compliance standards, restrict financial interactions between pharmaceutical companies and healthcare providers or report information related to payments to health care providers, marketing expenditures or drug prices; state or local laws requiring the registration of pharmaceutical sales representatives; state laws regulating the manufacture and distribution of biopharmaceutical products; and state laws governing privacy, security and breaches of health information in certain circumstances, many of which differ from each other in significant ways and often are not preempted by HIPAA, thus complicating compliance efforts; and
- laws and regulations prohibiting bribery and corruption, such as the U.S. Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977, as amended (the "FCPA") which, among other things, prohibits U.S. companies and their employees and agents from authorizing, promising, offering, or providing, directly or indirectly, corrupt or improper payments or anything else of value to foreign government officials, employees of public international organizations or foreign government-owned or affiliated entities, candidates for foreign public office, and foreign political parties or officials thereof.

Ensuring compliance is time consuming and costly. Violations of the laws may be subject to criminal and/or civil sanctions, including, in some instances, exclusion from participation in federal and state health care programs, which could adversely affect our business, financial condition, results of operations, and prospects.

Similar healthcare laws and regulations exist in the EU and other jurisdictions, including reporting requirements detailing interactions with and payments to healthcare providers and laws governing the privacy and security of personal information.

Health Care Reform in the United States and Potential Changes to Health Care Laws

Health care reform has been a significant trend in the U.S. health care industry and elsewhere. In particular, government authorities and other third-party payors have attempted to control costs by limiting coverage and the amount of reimbursement for particular medical products and services. Health care reform, specifically reform addressing pricing and payment for drugs, has been an ongoing focus and is likely to continue under the current presidential administration. A number of healthcare reforms involving drugs have been successfully implemented, including reforms related to Medicare payment for drugs and manufacturer rebate obligations under the Medicaid Drug Rebate Program.

There has been heightened governmental scrutiny in recent years over the manner in which manufacturers set prices for their marketed products, which has resulted in proposed and enacted federal and state legislation designed to, among other things, bring more transparency to product pricing and reform government program reimbursement methodologies for pharmaceutical and biologic products. At the state level, individual states are increasingly passing legislation and implementing regulations designed to control pharmaceutical and biological product pricing, including price or patient reimbursement constraints, discounts, restrictions on certain product access and marketing cost disclosure and transparency measures, and, in some cases, designed to encourage importation from other countries and bulk purchasing. These measures could reduce the ultimate demand for our products, once approved, or put pressure on our product pricing.

We cannot predict the likelihood, nature or extent of government regulation that may arise from future legislation or administrative or executive action, either in the United States or abroad. We expect that additional federal and state health care reform measures will be adopted in the future, any of which could limit the amounts that federal and state governments will pay for health care products and services.

Data Privacy Regulation

U.S. Privacy Law

There are numerous U.S. federal and state laws and regulations related to the privacy and security of personal information, including laws requiring the safeguarding of personal information, laws requiring notification to governmental authorities and data subjects as well as remediation in the event of a data breach, and laws that afford individuals numerous rights with respect to their personal information.

There have been several developments in recent years with respect to U.S. state data privacy laws. For example, the California Consumer Privacy Act of 2018, as amended by the California Privacy Rights Act (collectively, "CCPA") imposes many requirements for the collection, processing, and sharing of personal information of California residents. The CCPA contains significant penalties for companies that violate its requirements and provides California residents a private right of action, including the ability to seek statutory damages, in the event of a breach involving their personal information. Several states have proposed or passed comprehensive privacy laws, including several laws imposing obligations similar to those of the CCPA. In addition, several states have proposed or enacted health-focused consumer privacy laws, such as Washington state's My Health, My Data Act, which took effect in March 2024, and imposes obligations related to the collection and sharing of certain health-related information that is not subject to HIPAA and that does not fall within certain other exceptions in the law.

Also of note, in June 2024, the Protecting Americans' Data from Foreign Adversaries Act of 2024 took effect. This law prohibits data brokers from making available certain personally identifiable sensitive data of U.S. individuals to "foreign adversary" countries, such as the People's Republic of China (the "PRC"), and entities controlled by such countries. Additionally, in January 2025, the DOJ published a final rule implementing President Biden's Executive Order 14117, "Preventing Access to Americans' Bulk Sensitive Personal Data and United States Government-Related Data by Countries of Concern," which became effective in April 2025. This final rule prohibits certain data brokerage transactions and transactions involving certain bulk human "omic data and biospecimens from which such data can be derived with restricted persons and jurisdictions, such as the PRC, and "covered persons" that have certain ties to such restricted jurisdictions. The final rule also places restrictions on certain vendor, employment and investment agreements with such jurisdictions.

General Data Protection Regulation

Many countries outside of the United States maintain rigorous laws governing the privacy and security of personal information. For example, the collection, use, disclosure, transfer, or other processing of personal data, including personal health data, regarding individuals who are located in the EEA, and the processing of personal data that takes place in the EEA, is subject to the General Data Protection Regulation ("GDPR"), which became effective on May 25, 2018. The GDPR is wide-ranging in scope and imposes numerous requirements on companies that process personal data, and it imposes heightened requirements on companies that process health and other sensitive data, such as requiring in many situations that a company obtain the consent of the individuals to whom the sensitive personal data relate before processing such data and imposing strict rules regarding the transfer of personal data to countries outside the EEA, including the United States. The GDPR permits data protection authorities to impose large penalties for violations of the GDPR, including potential fines of up to €20 million, or 4% of annual global revenues, whichever is greater, and confers a private right of action on data subjects and consumer associations to lodge complaints with supervisory authorities, seek judicial remedies, and obtain compensation for damages resulting from violations of the GDPR. Following the withdrawal of the U.K. from the EU, the U.K. Data Protection Act 2018 applies to the processing of personal data that takes place in the U.K. and includes parallel obligations to those set forth by GDPR.

Overview

We are a global clinical-stage biotechnology company focused on building the leading portfolio of TCE therapeutics to treat autoimmune diseases, which affect an estimated 5-10% of the global population. Despite available treatments, many patients experience persistent disease activity, progressive organ damage, and lifelong dependence on immunosuppressive therapies that provide incomplete disease control and cause significant adverse events. Cizutamig, which targets B-cell maturation antigen ("BCMA"), is our lead clinical-stage TCE program and is advancing into global Phase 2 studies in generalized myasthenia gravis ("gMG") and systemic autoimmune rheumatic diseases—interstitial lung disease ("SARD-ILD"). TCEs harness a patient's own T cells to deplete pathogenic B-cells, with the potential to deliver either deep depletion of B-cells, which could provide durable disease remission ("immune reset"), or partial depletion of B-cells, which could provide for controlled, sustained disease management ("immune dimming").

We have built a diversified pipeline of four TCE programs in development targeting distinct B-cell antigens—BCMA, CD20, and CD19. Our most advanced clinical stage program, cizutamig, is a BCMA TCE that is being investigated in multiple Phase 1 dose-escalation trials in patients with gMG and systemic lupus erythematosus ("SLE") as well as investigator-initiated trials ("IITs") in SARD-ILD, systemic sclerosis ("SSc"), and other diseases. Biopsies obtained post treatment with cizutamig show deep B-cell depletion, including plasma cells, in bone marrow and lymph nodes. In patients with gMG, we have seen clinical improvements with standardized physician and patient disease activity indices. In patients with SARD-ILD, we have seen improvements in lung function as measured by increases in force vital capacity ("FVC"). Cizutamig has demonstrated a favorable tolerability profile in patients with autoimmune disease with low rates of adverse events related to cytokine release and no deaths or dose-limiting adverse events. We plan to initiate global Phase 2 clinical trials in gMG and SARD-ILD by the middle of 2026. In gMG, we plan to conduct a head-to-head study comparing cizutamig to VYVGART®, a neonatal Fc receptor ("FcRn") antagonist therapy.

Our second clinical-stage program, CND261, is a CD20 TCE that is being investigated in Phase 1 dose-escalation studies in patients with rheumatoid arthritis ("RA"), SLE, as well as an IIT in ANCA-associated vasculitis. CND261 was engineered with the goal of achieving deeper B-cell depletion than approved CD20-targeted monoclonal antibodies ("mAbs") such as Rituxan® or GAZYVA®. Lymph node biopsies post treatment with CND261 in patients with autoimmune disease shows deep depletion of CD20 positive B-cells. CND261 has demonstrated a favorable tolerability profile in patients with autoimmune disease with low rates of adverse events related to cytokine release and no deaths or dose-limiting adverse events. Beyond these two clinical programs, we have built a pipeline of next-generation trispecific TCEs, each designed to target two different antigens expressed on B-cells. CND319 is a TCE that targets CD19 and CD20 for B-cell depletion. In non-human primate studies, single doses of CND319 show deep tissue B-cell depletion with minimal cytokine release. We expect to initiate first-in-human studies for CND319 in the middle of 2026. CND460 is a TCE that targets CD19 and BCMA and is currently undergoing IND-enabling studies with first-in-human trials planned for the first half of 2027.

Our Approach: Why TCEs Can Be a Transformative Treatment for Autoimmune Diseases

B-cell dysregulation drives autoimmune disease pathology, making these cells an attractive therapeutic target. TCEs engage a patient's own T cells via CD3 binding to kill pathogenic B-cells, which can include the terminally differentiated plasma cells, potentially achieving either immune reset or immune dimming. Clinical data with our TCE drug candidates as well as third party data with other TCE drug candidates demonstrate strong signs of clinical improvement, even in patients who have failed multiple therapies. Our TCE drug candidates have the potential to be differentiated from marketed TCEs based on an improved safety and tolerability profile.

We believe TCEs represent a significant step forward versus existing antibody and cell therapy-based approaches. Compared to mAbs, TCEs deliver deeper B-cell killing in tissues through T-cell engagement which has been shown to translate to improved clinical responses. Compared to CAR-T therapy, which has also shown deep B-cell depletion in tissues, TCEs offer the following several advantages: no need for leukapheresis, no lymphodepleting chemotherapy, more scalable manufacturing, and off-the-shelf availability with the potential for outpatient administration. In clinical trials and real-world use to date, TCEs appear to have an improved safety and tolerability profile as compared to CAR-T therapies. TCEs have the potential to combine the potency needed to achieve deep B-cell depletion with the practical attributes required for broad patient access.

We are evaluating cizutamig in clinical trials and IITs using a range of dosing regimens designed to achieve both immune reset and immune dimming. Immune reset offers the potential advantage of a “one and done” approach in which a single treatment cycle can lead to deep B-cell depletion, which in turn could provide for durable disease remission. Immune dimming refers to partial B-cell depletion which offers the potential advantage of disease control and minimization of deep immune suppression which could be associated with higher rates of infection. Immune dimming would likely require intermittent chronic dosing at lower target doses. TCEs can be developed for both the immune reset and immune dimming profiles based on different dosing regimens which we believe is a unique property of TCEs as compared to other B-cell depleting modalities.

Our clinical development strategy is focused on: (1) efficiently generating proof-of-concept clinical data across multiple autoimmune diseases (2) using clinical data to prioritize indications for further investment into mid to later stage clinical trials and (3) maintaining regulatory alignment and operational flexibility. To date, we have generated clinical data in China, Europe, and Australia through investigational new drug (“IND”) studies, IITs, and compassionate use via named patient use (“NPU”). As we advance cizutamig into global Phase 2 studies, we plan to engage with key regulatory agencies, including but not limited to the FDA, EMA, and NMPA, to align on study design, endpoints, and registration pathways. We believe speed, disciplined execution, and data-driven decision-making are core strengths of our team, and we continuously evaluate emerging clinical data to advance high-potential programs and indications while deprioritizing those that do not meet our clinical or commercial thresholds.

Our Pipeline

We have built a portfolio of four TCE programs at various stages of development. Our current pipeline is summarized in the table below.

CND460 (BCMA/CD19/CD3)	Autoimmune diseases						1H '27: First-in-human studies

¹Phase 1 multiple myeloma (MM) completed (40 patients)
²Phase 1 Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma (NHL) completed (93 patients)

Cizutamig – A bispecific TCE Antibody Targeting BCMA expressing B-cells and CD3 expressing T-cells

Cizutamig is a bispecific TCE antibody purposefully designed to bind BCMA which is expressed on B-cells including plasmablasts and plasma cells, with a lower affinity to CD3 on T cells to minimize cytokine release. Plasma cells are the primary source of pathogenic autoantibodies in autoimmune diseases. Unlike FcRn antagonists such as VYVGART®, which indirectly reduce autoantibodies by accelerating their clearance without eliminating the plasma cells producing them, cizutamig directly targets and depletes plasma cells, potentially achieving deeper and more durable reductions in pathogenic autoantibodies.

As of February 2, 2026, we have dosed 47 autoimmune patients with cizutamig intravenously across multiple ongoing Phase 1 clinical trials, IITs and through compassionate use via NPU. Evaluation was done in patients with gMG, SARD-ILD, SLE, SSc, RA, and other autoimmune diseases with cytokine release syndrome ("CRS") occurring in 13% of patients (11% Grade 1 and 2% Grade 2), and no cases of immune effector cell-associated neurotoxicity syndrome ("ICANS"), deaths, or dose limiting adverse events. Biopsies obtained post treatment with cizutamig show deep B-cell and plasma cell depletion in bone marrow and lymph nodes. In patients with gMG, clinical improvements were seen using standardized physician and patient disease activity indices. In patients with SARD-ILD, improvements in lung function as measured by increases in FVC and diffusing capacity of the lungs for carbon monoxide ("DLCO"). Three Phase 2 studies evaluating cizutamig in patients with gMG are being planned: (1) a global placebo-controlled low dose-ranging study expected to start in the middle of 2026, (2) a head-to-head study comparing cizutamig to VYVGART® expected to start in the middle of 2026 in China and (3) an immune reset study for cizutamig in the United States and/or Europe expected to start in the first half of 2027. For SARD-ILD, we are planning a global Phase 2 study comparing cizutamig to standard of care which is expected to start in the middle of 2026. All Phase 2 studies will have cizutamig administered intravenously with plans to transition to subcutaneous dosing in later clinical studies.

Prior to licensing cizutamig from EpimAb Biotherapeutics, cizutamig had been evaluated in patients with multiple myeloma ("MM"), where it demonstrated a 62% objective response rate in 13 patients with MM treated at 60-200 mg doses with a manageable safety and tolerability profile.

CND261 – A bispecific TCE Antibody targeting CD20-expressing B-cells and CD3-expressing T Cells

CND261 is a bispecific TCE antibody designed to bind CD20 on B-cells and CD3 on T cells. By engaging with T cells, CND261 is engineered with the goal of achieving deeper B-cell depletion in tissues compared to CD20-targeted mAbs such as Rituxan® or GAZYVA®. As of February 2, 2026, 26 autoimmune patients with RA, SLE, or ANCA vasculitis have been dosed with CND261. Clinical data shows CRS in 19% of patients (all Grade 1) and no cases of ICANS, deaths, or dose limiting adverse events. Biopsies obtained post treatment with CND261 have demonstrated deep CD20-positive B-cell depletion in lymph nodes. We are continuing clinical evaluation to characterize optimal dosing regimens and clinical activity across different autoimmune diseases.

CND319 – A trispecific TCE Antibody Targeting CD19- and/or CD20-expressing B-cells and CD3 expressing T Cells

CND319 is a trispecific TCE antibody designed to bind CD19 or CD20 on B-cells while engaging CD3 on T cells. Dual targeting of CD19 and CD20 could more thoroughly address B-cell subsets as CD19 or CD20 expression levels can vary, potentially allowing for more complete and durable depletion than single-target approaches. In non-human primate ("NHP") studies, CND319 demonstrated deep B-cell depletion in the spleen, bone marrow, and lymph nodes at single administered doses with minimal cytokine release. We expect to initiate first-in-human studies by the middle of 2026.

CND460 – A trispecific TCE Antibody Targeting BCMA or CD19 expressing B-cells and CD3 expressing T cells

CND460 is a trispecific TCE antibody designed to bind to BCMA and/or CD19 on B-cells or plasma cells, and CD3 on T cells. This dual-target strategy can address a potential limitation of CD19 or CD20-targeted therapies, which deplete B-cells but leave long-lived plasma cells intact which can continue autoantibody production. By achieving redundant and deep B-cells and plasma cells depletion in a single molecule, CND460 has the potential to achieve more profound and durable disease control. CND460 is currently undergoing IND-enabling studies with first-in-human trials planned for first half of 2027.

In addition to our development programs, we continue to have an active discovery effort to identify novel TCEs which can address various immunology and inflammatory diseases. We are collaborating with several research partners to leverage their antibody engineering and other expertise.

Market Opportunity

The pharmaceutical market for autoimmune diseases features several classes of drugs, each generating significant revenue and addressing diverse patient needs. Drugs targeting autoimmune diseases generated approximately $105 billion of revenue globally in 2023. Several antibody-based drugs, such as Dupixent®, Humira®, Rituxan®, GAZYVA®, Stelara®, and others are approved and widely prescribed to treat various autoimmune diseases. Humira® is a mAb drug against tumor necrosis factor (“TNF”) that is approved for treatment of nine autoimmune diseases. Humira® in addition to other anti-TNF drugs and drugs against other protein targets have been broadly adopted commercially for the treatment of autoimmune diseases.

While Humira® and other drugs for autoimmune diseases have been widely commercialized, they largely provide symptomatic relief and disease progression occurs in the majority of patients. Furthermore, currently approved therapies require chronic administration, which may result in increased risk of infections, cancer, and other morbidities over time. Therefore, we believe there are significant opportunities for new approaches, such as TCEs for B-cell and plasma cell depletion, to be developed to address the unmet medical need.

Our Strategy

We are focused and driven to develop a portfolio of TCE antibody drug candidates for B-cell depletion with a goal of becoming the first company to commercially launch this class of drugs for autoimmune diseases, assuming successful clinical development and approval. Key components of our strategy include:

- Initiate multiple Phase 2 studies for cizutamig in 2026 and demonstrate superiority of cizutamig over existing therapies where applicable. In 2026, we plan to initiate multiple Phase 2 studies with cizutamig in gMG and SARD-ILD to further evaluate dosing, safety, and clinical activity. Clinical data observed to date suggest the potential for meaningful differentiation from currently approved therapies across multiple indications.
- Leverage our global infrastructure to aggressively advance a portfolio of TCE drug candidates into clinical development for multiple autoimmune diseases. We believe that clinical data generated from our ongoing and planned trials with each drug candidate will best guide further development into later stages of clinical development. To accelerate this process, we are leveraging our global clinical infrastructure, inclusive of a clinical team in China, to conduct trials across multiple indications in parallel, enabling us to generate data more efficiently and inform development decisions across our portfolio on an expedited timeline.

- Evaluate immune reset and immune dimming profiles to cater to patient needs in specific autoimmune diseases. In our clinical trials, we are evaluating both immune reset and immune dimming dosing strategies. We believe the depth and durability of clinical benefit and overall tolerability correlates to the degree of cell depletion and can be tailored for specific indications. We expect the administered dose and dosing frequency will also vary depending on the degree of B-cell depletion desired.
- Conduct parallel clinical trials to identify the most suitable indications and optimal dosing strategy of cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460. We are conducting multiple clinical trials for each of the drug candidates in several autoimmune indications with the goal of allowing us to tap into a broader pool of patients for initial clinical evaluation. We believe this data driven approach provides the highest likelihood of success for each of the programs.
- Purposefully invest capital in activities to pursue further clinical data generation. We plan to deploy capital in those strategic aspects of the business key to our growth. We believe clinical data will best inform and guide us on how to prioritize further clinical development and indication prioritization. During development, we will look to balance investment amount and time to reach our planned milestones.

Background of Autoimmune Diseases

Autoimmune disease occurs when the immune system ends up attacking normal cells and tissues leading to inflammation and damage. Autoimmune diseases affect an estimated 300–500 million people worldwide and account for more than $100 billion in annual direct healthcare spending in the United States alone. Despite the availability of numerous drugs, the majority of autoimmune patients experience incomplete disease control with chronic symptoms and progressive organ damage. The scale of unmet need creates a substantial opportunity for disease-modifying therapies capable of delivering durable remission.

The autoimmune market features several large classes of drugs, each generating significant revenue and addressing diverse patient needs. Several antibody-based drugs, such as Dupixent®, Humira®, Rituxan®, GAZYVA®, Stelara®, and others are approved and widely prescribed to treat various autoimmune diseases. Humira® is a mAb drug against TNF approved to treat nine autoimmune diseases. As of 2023, it was the most commercially successful pharmaceutical product ever with approximately $220 billion in total cumulative sales.

While several drugs for autoimmune diseases have been widely commercialized, they largely provide symptomatic relief and disease progression occurs in the majority of patients. These therapies provide incremental improvements but share several fundamental challenges:

- Incomplete mechanistic reach limiting efficacy: Many therapies reduce inflammation or deplete subsets of B-cells but do not eliminate plasmablasts and plasma cells, which are major producers of pathogenic autoantibodies, the root cause of several autoimmune indications. Some therapies also have limited depletion of B-cells in tissues.
- Lack of durability: Most autoimmune patients require chronic therapy, often lifelong, resulting in high cumulative treatment costs, real-world adherence challenges and persistent risk of flare or progression
- Safety and tolerability constraints: Most approved therapies require chronic immunosuppression, which increases infection risk, steroid dependence and reduces quality of life.

Role of B-Cell Depletion in Autoimmune Diseases

B-cell Overview

B-cells are one type of immune system cells that have several functions. They can release cytokines, serve as antigen presentation cells to modulate other immune cells, such as T cells, and terminally differentiate into plasma cells and produce antibodies that target and neutralize pathogens. However, in autoimmune diseases, B-cells can malfunction and mistakenly produce antibodies against the body's own cells and tissues. In addition, B-cells can misguide immune response driven by complex interactions between B-cells and other immune cells, resulting in a chronic, self-perpetuating cycle of immune activation and tissue destruction. Abnormalities in B-cell regulation can cause or exacerbate autoimmunity, making them an attractive target for therapeutic interventions.

B-cells originate from bone marrow stem cells and undergo further transition and development in the bone marrow and peripheral blood. BCMA is expressed broadly from pre-B cells to the most mature B-cells which are termed plasma cells, the cell types responsible for producing antibodies. BCMA expression is higher on plasmablasts and plasma cells as compared to other B-cell subtypes. Other cell surface proteins such as CD19 and CD20 are expressed in earlier stages of B-cell development. Clinical experience with drugs targeting BCMA have shown deep B-cell depletion of all subtypes and not just plasmablasts and plasma cells. The depth of depletion of B-cell subset populations may vary depending on which cell surface protein of B-cells are targeted and this could lead to differential clinical effects across autoimmune diseases.

BCMA is also expressed on activated plasmacytoid dendritic cells, key producers of type I interferons that contribute to inflammatory signaling and support autoreactive B-cell survival in autoimmune diseases. Together, these findings support BCMA as a relevant therapeutic target with the potential to disrupt autoantibody production, inflammatory amplification, and pathogenic B-cell activity, providing a strong mechanistic rationale for BCMA-targeted therapies in autoimmune indications.

A study published by Dr. Joseph DeRisi and colleagues at the University of California, San Francisco, highlights the differential effects of targeting B-cells expressing various cell surface protein markers. Using a high throughput assay, it was found that all individuals, regardless of disease state, possess a distinct and complex set of autoreactive antibodies. This unique immunological fingerprint, or "autoreactome," was stable over years. Analyzing blood samples from cancer patients at baseline and after treatment with B-cell depleting therapies targeting CD20 (mAb), CD19 (CAR-T) or BCMA (CAR-T), showed that targeting BCMA was the only approach to have a statistically significant reduction in the autoreactome. We believe this data highlights the importance of targeting BCMA to maximize clinical benefit in patients with autoantibody driven autoimmune diseases.

Early clinical experience in patients with gMG highlights the potential difference in targeting BCMA or CD19. Using CAR-T therapy, one published study showed that BCMA CAR-T completely reduced autoantibodies associated with relapsed and refractory gMG in two patients and showed a near complete remission of disease based on the Quantitative Myasthenia Gravis ("QMG") score, a disease activity index for gMG. In a separate published case report, CD19 CAR-T reduced autoantibodies by 71% and showed an improvement but not remission of disease as measured by the QMG score. FcRn antagonist drugs approved to treat gMG work by reducing autoantibody IgG levels indirectly by binding to FcRn which then precludes it from binding to circulating IgG which in turn leads to faster elimination of IgG. These FcRn targeting drugs reduce IgG autoantibodies by approximately 57% but do not have any effect on other Ig antibody classes such as IgM, which can also contribute to disease pathology. FcRn antagonist drugs are administered chronically and are associated with long term immunosuppression.

Different modalities for deep B-cell depletion and the advantages of TCE antibodies

TCEs are typically antibody drugs that work by redirecting the body's own T cells to recognize and kill cells expressing a cell surface protein target of interest. Conventional B-cell targeted mAbs such as Rituxan® or GAZYVA® bind to B-cells of interest but do not recruit T-cells. TCEs directly engage with T-cells via the CD3 binding of the TCE and in turn, the T-cells are able to kill the target cell. We believe a TCE approach will lead to deeper B-cell depletion than mAbs which can translate to better clinical response.

TCEs are able to mimic the immune-engaging mechanism of CAR-T by binding a cell surface protein of interest on a target cell (e.g. BCMA on B-cells) and the CD3 protein on T-cells.

Figure 4: Illustrative example showing mechanism of CAR-T and TCE Mechanism of Action of CAR-T and Bispecific Antibody

Various modalities are being developed to achieve deep B-cell depletion, including autologous and allogeneic CAR-T therapies, NK-based approaches, in vivo CAR platforms, myeloid engagers, mRNA-based TCE, and TCE antibodies. These approaches differ across several key attributes, including depth of tissue depletion, predictability of pharmacologic effect, potential for prolonged lymphodepletion, scalability of manufacturing, and route of administration. Autologous and allogeneic CAR-based therapies have demonstrated the ability to achieve deep B-cell depletion but involve individualized or complex manufacturing processes and are typically administered intravenously. Emerging modalities, including NK- and mRNA-based approaches, remain under clinical evaluation with respect to durability, pharmacologic control, and scalability.

TCE antibodies are designed as off-the-shelf biologics and may offer a differentiated profile, including the potential for deep B-cell tissue depletion with titratable dosing and subcutaneous administration. TCEs allow for more predictable pharmacokinetics and treatment modulation. While each modality presents potential advantages and limitations, we believe TCE antibodies represent a preferred clinically and commercially viable approach for achieving controlled, deep B-cell depletion in autoimmune diseases, subject to continued clinical validation.

Initial clinical experience of TCEs in autoimmune disease

Clinical benefit of using TCEs to treat autoimmune diseases was initially published in the first half of 2024 by the FAU Erlangen group led by Dr. Georg Schett, the pioneer who used CAR-T for autoimmune diseases, and Dr. Ricardo Grieshaber-Bouyer. In this clinical case report series, six patients with RA who had failed a median of seven prior therapies were treated off-label with continuous intravenous infusion of Blincyto®, a CD19 targeting TCE currently approved to treat leukemia. In this study, lower and fewer doses of CD19 TCE as compared to the leukemia approved dose were used to treat patients. All patients with RA showed clinical improvement following treatment as well as peripheral B-cell depletion but incomplete B-cell depletion in lymph nodes. Radiographic imaging using ultrasound and PET-CT showed visual reductions in inflammation. As depicted in Figure 5, the number of tender and swollen joints decreased from a median of 9 and 9 down to 0.5 and 1.0, respectively, at 12 weeks follow-up. Patients also reported feeling better as measured by a global disease assessment scale, which improved from 60 to 10. There were no cases of ICANS and no cases of high grade CRS. Longer term follow-up showed most of the patients had rebound in their clinical improvement, which we believe may have been to suboptimal dosing with incomplete B-cell depletion in lymph nodes.

Following the clinical experience of using TCEs in patients with RA, the FAU Erlangen group published their clinical experience using Tecvayli®, a BCMA TCE approved for MM, in four patients with different autoimmune diseases (SSc, Sjögren's syndrome, inflammatory myositis, and RA). The BCMA TCE was administered as 2 step-up doses and the 3rd full dose within the first week of treatment followed by one additional full dose 4 weeks or 12 weeks later. Disease activity in all four patients improved with evidence of deep B-cell depletion and reductions in circulating IgG, IgA, and IgM antibody levels. There were no cases of ICANS and two cases of CRS, one Grade 1 and one Grade 2.

Figure 6: Tecvayli® BCMA TCE therapy decreases B-cells and IgG in peripheral blood in patients with autoimmune disease

Longer term follow-up from FAU Erlangen in ten patients treated with Tecvayli® were published in late 2025. The majority of patients achieved rapid clinical responses with disease free remission, and some patients showing durable response beyond one year. Of the five patients who had interstitial lung disease ("ILD"), four of them had improvements in lung diffusion capacity. Treatment with Tecvayli® was associated with eight cases of CRS of which four cases were Grade 2.

Another case series of five SSc patients treated with Tecvayli® was reported in Nature Medicine this year by a physician group in Dusseldorf. Of the three SSc patients with ILD who had follow-up to at least 6 months, two patients showed objective disease improvement as measured by increase in FVC. The patient who did not show improvement in their ILD had developed pulmonary carcinoma as well as pulmonary hypertension which complicated the interpretation of treatment efficacy. All five patients treated with Tecvayli® experienced CRS, with three patients having Grade 2 and one patient having a Grade 3 event.

Cizutamig – A bispecific TCE Antibody Targeting BCMA-expressing B-cells and CD3-expressing T-cells

Overview

Cizutamig is a bispecific TCE antibody purposefully designed to deplete BCMA-expressing B-cell populations, including plasmablasts and plasma cells, while also mitigating the release of cytokines. In patients with autoimmune disease as well as MM, it has shown low rates of CRS with no ICANS while demonstrating clinical signs of improvement. As of February 2, 2026, cizutamig has been administered in 47 patients across multiple autoimmune indications, using a range of dosing regimens spanning immune dimming to immune reset. Many of the treated patients had advanced, refractory disease and had exhausted approved therapies as well as investigational options. In this difficult-to-treat population, cizutamig treatment was associated with meaningful improvements in disease activity, and several patients have discontinued other autoimmune therapies and remain clinically stable or continue to improve at last follow-up.

Deep B-cell depletion in tissues supportive of immune reset profile

Tissue biopsy data from autoimmune disease patients treated with cizutamig provide mechanistic evidence consistent with an immune reset profile, and this finding has been demonstrated consistently across four patients with different autoimmune diseases.

Lymph node biopsies taken after the third weekly dose in the first treated patient—a 40-year-old with refractory RA—demonstrated deep depletion of B-cells including plasma cells in the lymph node, with marked reductions in CD19+, CD20+, and CD138+ cells relative to baseline as determined by immunohistochemistry (“IHC”). Bone marrow assessments corroborated these findings, showing near-complete elimination of CD19+ B-cells and CD138+ plasma cells. Peripheral B-cell reconstitution was observed at approximately four months post-treatment, with returning B-cells displaying a naïve phenotype (CD27-negative, IgD-positive), consistent with a reset of the pathogenic B-cell compartment.

Bone marrow and/or lymph node biopsies were subsequently obtained in three additional patients across different autoimmune indications, and deep B-cell depletion consistent with the immune reset profile was demonstrated. In two patients with SSc biopsied at 8 weeks (after 5 doses), bone marrow flow cytometry showed plasma cell reductions of greater than 99% and 98%, and mature B-cell reductions of 96% and 97%, respectively. Lymph node biopsies were not obtained from these two patients. In a patient with dermatomyositis biopsied at 7 weeks (after 5 doses), lymph node IHC demonstrated 100% reductions in B-cells including plasma cells. A bone marrow biopsy was not obtained from this patient. No CRS or ICANS was reported in any of the patients. The breadth and consistency of these findings across distinct autoimmune diseases support the potential of cizutamig to induce deep, compartment-wide B-cell, including plasma cell, depletion as a mechanism for potential durable disease remission.

Safety profile of cizutamig in autoimmune patients

As of February 2, 2026, 47 patients with various autoimmune diseases have been dosed intravenously with cizutamig in IND-sponsored studies, IITs, and compassionate use via NPU. Additionally, 16 healthy volunteers have been dosed in an ongoing Phase 1 clinical trial comparing intravenous and subcutaneous formulations of cizutamig. Safety data as of the February 2, 2026 cut off is presented on an aggregated basis and has been generated through ongoing Phase 1 clinical trials, IITs and compassionate use via NPU.

Cizutamig has demonstrated a favorable safety profile in clinical studies to date. Among the 47 patients with autoimmune disease, 13% experienced CRS of any grade: 11% Grade 1 and 2% Grade 2. The sole case of Grade 2 CRS was a transient, asymptomatic hypotensive event lasting less than 30 minutes and responsive to IV fluids. No CRS events were observed in healthy volunteers. No ICANS have been reported across any subjects treated with cizutamig. An analysis of serum cytokines (Interferon gamma, IL-6, TNF-alpha) shows that the first dose of cizutamig serves as a priming dose given a subsequent higher dose of cizutamig administered one week later did not induce a higher level of cytokines.

Treatment emergent adverse events ("TEAEs") have been manageable, with more than 92% of patients experiencing only Grade 1 or 2 events. The most frequently observed drug-related TEAEs were hypogammaglobulinemia (39% of patients), which was effectively mitigated with intravenous IG ("IVIg") therapy, and decreased lymphocyte count (23% of patients), consistent with expected T cell margination. Infections were generally mild, with upper respiratory tract infections occurring in 13% of patients. Three treatment-emergent serious adverse events were reported—one case of pneumonia and two cases of COVID-19—all of which were treated and resolved without sequelae.

To date, no deaths, suspected unexpected serious adverse reactions, or dose-limiting adverse events have been reported in patients treated with cizutamig.

Cizutamig for gMG

We are conducting an ongoing multi-center Phase 1 dose-escalation study of cizutamig in patients with refractory gMG in China. As of February 2, 2026, nine patients have been dosed across three cohorts. All nine patients had failed multiple prior therapies, including steroids, pyridostigmine, immunosuppressants, biologics (including FcRn antagonists in 56% and rituximab, or Rituxan®, in 11%), and acute interventions (high-dose IVIG or plasmapheresis in 56%).

Cizutamig demonstrated robust and consistent clinical activity across validated disease activity measures—QMG and MG activities of daily living (“MG-ADL”) which are physician and patient reported scores, respectively. In Dose Group 1 (n=3, evaluated at 16 weeks), patients achieved an average reduction of 19.3 points in QMG score (range: -7, -29) and 6.7 points in MG-ADL score (range: -4, -8). In Dose Group 2 (n=3, evaluated at 4 weeks and therefore unlikely to represent maximum benefit), patients achieved an average reduction of 9.3 points in QMG score (range: -7, -11) and 7.3 points in MG-ADL score (range: -6, -9). Dose Group 3 had been enrolled for less than 2 weeks at the time of data cut, with insufficient follow-up to assess clinical endpoints.

Clinical responses were observed as early as 2 weeks post-treatment and were sustained through the observation period across both evaluable dose groups. All patients with at least 4 weeks of follow-up exceeded the established thresholds for clinically meaningful improvement—a reduction of ≥3 points in QMG score and ≥2 points in MG-ADL score. The magnitude of improvement observed substantially exceeded these thresholds, with average QMG reductions of 19.3 and 9.3 points in Dose Groups 1 and 2, respectively. As Dose Group 2 had improvement measured at 4 weeks, we believe deeper responses would be seen with longer follow-up which is ongoing.

The consistency of response across a heavily pretreated, refractory population, the rapid onset of clinical benefit, and the durability of effect through 16 weeks of follow-up support the potential for cizutamig to deliver meaningful clinical benefit in this difficult-to-treat disease. We plan to share initial clinical data from all dose groups for cizutamig in the Phase 1 clinical trial in patients with refractory gMG in early 2027.

We plan to conduct three separate Phase 2 studies in patients with gMG. The first study is expected to initiate in the middle of 2026 in China and will evaluate cizutamig using immune dimming and immune reset dosing regimens versus VYVGART®, an approved FcRn antagonist therapy. The primary endpoints for this study will measure change from baseline in QMG and MG-ADL.

A second Phase 2 study in gMG is also planned to begin in the middle of 2026 as a global, placebo-controlled trial. This study will evaluate multiple low doses of cizutamig as monotherapy compared to placebo, with the same primary endpoints of change in QMG and MG-ADL scores. The dose-ranging design of this study is intended to identify optimal dosing regimens including an immune dimming dose regimen that balance efficacy with safety and tolerability.

A third Phase 2 study in gMG is expected to initiate in the first half of 2027 in the United States and/or Europe. This study will evaluate cizutamig at an immune reset dose regimen, with efficacy assessed through changes in QMG and MG-ADL scores. This study is designed to generate clinical data in Western patient populations that may support future regulatory submissions in these markets.

Background of MG

MG is a chronic autoimmune disease marked by varying degrees of muscle weakness and fatigue afflicting approximately 128,000 and 1.4 million people in the U.S. and globally, respectively. MG is generally classified into ocular MG, which only affects the eye, and gMG which has more systemic involvement and accounts for 85% of MG cases. Either MG condition arises when the immune system produces autoantibodies that attack the communication between nerves and muscles, primarily targeting acetylcholine receptors at the neuromuscular junction. In some cases, antibodies may also target other proteins, such as muscle-specific kinase. This disruption impairs the transmission of nerve impulses, leading to muscle weakness. While symptoms can be transient and may spontaneously remit in the early stages, they typically become more persistent as the disease progresses, with symptom-free intervals becoming less frequent.

Current therapeutic strategies for MG include steroids, immunosuppressants, and agents that block the complement pathway or inhibit FcRn. FcRn antagonist drugs work by reducing IgG levels indirectly by binding to FcRn which then precludes it from binding to circulating IgG which in turn leads to faster elimination of IgG. These treatments do not have any known effect on IgM antibodies which can also contribute to disease pathology. FcRn antagonist drugs are administered chronically and are associated with long term immunosuppression. VYVGART®, an FcRn antagonist therapy developed and commercialized by Argenx, is approved to treat MG and eclipsed $1 billion in annual sales in its second full year of commercialization. TCE drugs that target BCMA can deplete B-cells including plasmablasts and plasma cells which are responsible for producing IgG and IgM antibodies.

Cizutamig for SARD-ILD

We have provided compassionate use treatment to patients with SARD-ILD having SSs as their primary rheumatological disease. Two patients with advanced, treatment-refractory SARD-ILD were treated with cizutamig and followed for over six months. Both patients demonstrated clinical and radiographic improvement following treatment and were able to discontinue therapies for SSs.

- The first patient (Patient 1) experienced rapidly progressive SSs over approximately six months with multi-organ involvement and had previously been treated with methotrexate, corticosteroids, and cyclophosphamide. High-resolution computed tomography ("HRCT") showed improvement in ground glass opacities and pulmonary function tests ("PFTs") showed an increase in FVC as well as gas exchange as measured by DLCO. The patient also was able to improve their 6-minute walk test ("6MWT").
- The second patient (Patient 2) had chronic, progressive SSs with an extensive history of prior therapies, including methotrexate, cyclosporine, mycophenolate mofetil, tocilizumab, upadacitinib, nintedanib, sildenafil, and bosentan. HRCT showed improvement in ground glass opacities as well as reticular pattern changes. The patient also showed improvements in both FVC and DLCO as measured by PFTs.

The above two cases illustrate early radiographic and functional improvements in patients with severe, treatment-refractory SARD-ILD, including individuals with extensive prior therapy and advanced disease. Findings suggest potential disease-modifying activity. Improvements in lung function as measured by PFTs is also consistent with published case series of patients treated with Tecvayli®.

We plan to initiate a global Phase 2 study in the middle of 2026 evaluating cizutamig in patients with SARD-ILD. This global study will compare cizutamig at an immune reset dose regimen to standard of care therapy. The primary endpoint will measure change from baseline in FVC, a clinical endpoint that has been used for approval of other ILD drugs.

Background on SARD-ILD

SARD-ILD encompasses progressive pulmonary complications that occur in patients with systemic autoimmune rheumatic diseases, including SSc, RA, idiopathic inflammatory myopathies, Sjögren's syndrome, and SLE. ILD represents one of the most serious and life-threatening manifestations of these autoimmune conditions, characterized by inflammation and progressive fibrosis of the lung interstitium, leading to impaired gas exchange, declining lung function, and respiratory failure. The prevalence of ILD varies significantly across different diseases with 40-75%, 40-50%, 10-20%, and 3-10% of patients with SSc, idiopathic myopathy, Sjögren's syndrome, and SLE, respectively having concomitant ILD. B-cells and plasma cells are believed to play a central role in disease pathogenesis through production of autoantibodies, secretion of pro-inflammatory and pro-fibrotic cytokines, and aberrant immune cell activation. The progressive nature of SARD-ILD significantly impacts quality of life and carries substantial mortality risk in several patient populations.

Current treatment options for SARD-ILD remain extremely limited. For SSc-associated ILD specifically, three therapies have received regulatory approval: Ofev®, an oral antifibrotic agent approved by the FDA in 2019; Actemra®, an IL-6 inhibitor approved by the FDA in 2021; and mycophenolate mofetil, an immunosuppressive agent widely used based on clinical trial evidence and guideline recommendations. These approved therapies have demonstrated the ability to slow decline in lung function as measured by FVC but do not reverse disease progression in many patients, and are often limited by significant adverse effects including infections, gastrointestinal toxicity, and liver enzyme elevations. For other forms of SARD-ILD, including RA-ILD and inflammatory myopathy-associated ILD, there are currently no FDA-approved therapies with specific labeled indications, and treatment relies on off-label use of immunosuppressive agents including corticosteroids, cyclophosphamide, azathioprine, and rituximab. Despite available therapies, many patients continue to experience disease progression, and mortality rates remain unacceptably high. Given the central role of B-cells and plasma cells in SARD-ILD pathogenesis and the limitations of current therapies, novel treatments that achieve deep B-cell and plasma cell depletion, such as BCMA-targeted therapies, represent a promising therapeutic approach for this patient population with significant unmet medical need.

Additional clinical studies in autoimmune disease patients currently being explored with cizutamig

Beyond gMG and SARD-ILD, we are pursuing a broad exploratory program with cizutamig across additional autoimmune diseases through a combination of IND-enabled studies, IITs, and compassionate use via NPU. This multi-indication strategy reflects both the mechanistic versatility of BCMA-targeted B-cell, including plasma cell, depletion across autoimmune diseases and our ability to leverage a global clinical infrastructure to generate data in parallel across geographies. Current diseases in which we are or plan to treat patients include a Phase 1 study in SLE, a Phase 1 study in thyroid eye disease ("TED") and Graves' disease, a Phase 1 study in IgE-mediated allergy, as well as IIT studies in ulcerative colitis, IgA nephropathy ("IgAN"), RA, SSc, and Sjögren's syndrome. Compassionate use has been provided to patients with some of the aforementioned diseases as well as in autoimmune hepatitis, idiopathic inflammatory myopathies, and transplant alloantibodies.

In our ongoing Phase 1 multi-center SLE study in China, we have seen clinical improvements in disease activity as measured by the SLE Disease Activity Index 2000 ("SLEDAI-2K"). In addition, complement C3 and C4 levels increase with treatment which can be low during SLE disease flare activity.

These exploratory studies serve a dual purpose: they allow us to characterize the safety profile of cizutamig across distinct disease contexts while simultaneously providing early evidence of clinical activity to inform indication prioritization. Given the breadth of autoimmune diseases that may be amenable to deep B-cell depletion, this parallel, indication-agnostic approach is designed to efficiently identify the opportunities where cizutamig has the greatest potential for clinical impact and to direct resources toward the most promising indications for later-stage development.

We have also seen consistent reductions in disease associated autoantibodies in patients who have been treated with cizutamig. These reductions in autoantibodies are likely the result of the plasma cell depletion from treatment.

Background on SLE

SLE is a complex autoimmune disease-causing widespread inflammation and damage. Some patients with SLE also have lupus nephritis which is a disease affecting the kidneys. Approximately 204,000 and 3 million people in U.S. and globally, respectively have SLE. Various autoantibodies are associated with SLE.

Treatment options for SLE focus on managing symptoms and preventing flares, as there is currently no cure for the disease. Patients may be prescribed nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs for pain relief, corticosteroids to reduce inflammation, and immunosuppressive medications to decrease immune system activity. Antimalarial drugs, such as hydroxychloroquine, are also commonly used to manage skin and joint symptoms. GAZYVA® (obinutuzumab), a CD20 mAb, has shown clinical efficacy in patients with SLE and an ongoing clinical trial of LUNSUMIO® (mosunetuzumab), a CD20 TCE, in SLE is underway. B-cell depletion with CAR-T and TCE have also shown clinical response in patients with SLE who have failed multiple lines of therapy.

Cizutamig healthy volunteer study for evaluation of subcutaneous formulation

Clinical data in patients to date have been with cizutamig administered intravenously. We have developed a subcutaneous formulation of cizutamig and are currently evaluating its safety, tolerability, and pharmacokinetics in a Phase 1 healthy volunteer study in Australia. As of February 2, 2026, 16 healthy volunteers have been dosed, comparing intravenous to subcutaneous dosing. Preliminary data indicate that the subcutaneous formulation has been well tolerated to date, with no CRS or serious adverse events reported.

We expect to complete the healthy volunteer study in the first half of 2026. Subject to favorable results from this study and regulatory approval, we plan to begin evaluation of the subcutaneous formulation of cizutamig in patients with autoimmune disease in the second half of 2026. The subcutaneous formulation, if successful, may offer potential advantages in terms of patient convenience, treatment adherence, and broader clinical applicability compared to intravenous administration.

Cizutamig antibody design and pre-clinical data

Cizutamig was purposefully designed to have high affinity binding to BCMA and lower affinity binding to CD3, with each antibody molecule capable of binding two BCMA proteins and two CD3 proteins. Several published studies have shown that cytokine release due to CD3 binding can be reduced with lower CD3 affinity while preserving target cell killing by T-cells. The Fc portion of cizutamig is a human IgG1 sequence with specific mutations introduced to inhibit Fc binding to both FcγRs and complement component C1q, to enable reduction of antibody-dependent cellular cytotoxicity ("ADCC") and complement-dependent cytotoxicity ("CDC").

Figure 12: Structure of cizutamig showing two binding sites for BCMA on B-cells and two binding sites for CD3 on T-cells

In vitro studies were performed in cell-based assays comparing cizutamig to teclistamab, or Tecvayli®. In these studies, cizutamig showed comparable cytotoxicity to teclistamab while also demonstrating lower cytokine release both in terms of maximal levels as well as potency.

Further pre-clinical characterization was conducted in NHP studies and showed that cizutamig dosing led to B-cell depletion as well as IgG, IgA, and IgM antibody reductions.

Completed Phase 1 clinical trial in patients with MM

Prior to licensing cizutamig from EpimAb Biotherapeutics, EpimAb Biotherapeutics completed a Phase 1 clinical trial in patients with refractory MM in China and Australia. Clinical data as of the September 23, 2024 final data cut-off are summarized below. The median patient age was 65 years old with patients having had a median of 3 prior lines of therapy (range 2 to 6) and 55% having had prior transplantation. Cizutamig was administered once weekly by intravenous infusion, with flat dose levels ranging from 0.2 to 300 mg. Step-up dosing was applied to all dose levels of 2 mg and above prior to the first dosing cycle. A total of 40 patients had received at least 1 dose of cizutamig.

The objective response rate (“ORR”) for the 40 patients treated across all cizutamig doses was 38%. Of the 18 evaluable patients who received 60 mg and above, the ORR was 67%, and in the 13 evaluable patients who received 60 mg to 200 mg, the ORR was 62%.

CRS of any grade was observed in 25% of all patients treated, with Grade 1 and Grade 2 observed in 17.5 % and 7.5 %, respectively. No cases of Grade 3 or higher CRS were observed. For the 13 patients who received 60 mg to 200 mg, CRS of any grade was seen in 31% with 8% being Grade 2. All of the CRS events in this subgroup were at the 200 mg dose as no CRS occurred in patients receiving 60 mg or 120 mg. No cases of ICANS were reported of all patients treated. Treatment-related serious adverse events of 5% incidence or higher were pneumonia and CRS, which were seen in 10% and 7.5% of patients, respectively. There were 4 treatment emergent deaths, but none were considered to be treatment related. We do not plan to further develop cizutamig for MM.

CND261 – A bispecific TCE antibody targeting CD20-expressing B-cells and CD3-expressing T Cells

Overview

CND261 is a bispecific TCE antibody designed to deplete CD20 expressing B-cells, while minimizing the release of cytokines. CD20 targeting with approved mAbs such as Rituxan® and GAZYVA® have already demonstrated clinical efficacy and commercial adoption in multiple autoimmune diseases. We believe the addition of a CD3 binding effector function can lead to deeper B-cell depletion and in turn potentially demonstrate superior clinical outcomes for patients.

Deep B-cell depletion in tissues supportive of immune reset profile

We obtained lymph node biopsy data from four autoimmune patients treated with CND261 providing preliminary evidence of tissue B-cell depletion as determined by IHC. In two patients with RA, post-treatment lymph node biopsies were obtained without available baseline comparators. In the first RA patient, a biopsy obtained at 8 weeks—the only biopsy available for this patient—showed no evidence of B-cell reduction in the lymph nodes. Serum analysis showed anti-drug antibody (“ADA”) formation with confirmed lowering of drug exposure which we believe was likely a main contributing factor to lack of B-cell depletion. In the second RA patient, a biopsy at 6 weeks demonstrated full depletion of both CD19+ and CD20+ B-cells. In two SLE patients, lymph node biopsies at 4 weeks showed 100% depletion of CD20+ B-cells in both cases, with some residual CD19+ B-cells remaining, consistent with the selectivity of CD20-targeted depletion of CND261.

While these data are preliminary and based on a small number of patients without paired baseline biopsies in the RA cohort, the findings provide early directional evidence that CND261 can achieve meaningful tissue B-cell depletion in some patients. The ADA observation in one RA patient highlights the importance of ongoing pharmacokinetic and immunogenicity monitoring and the potential need for exploration of dosing strategies to mitigate ADA formation and any negative effects.

Safety profile of CND261 in patients with autoimmune disease

As of February 2, 2026, 26 autoimmune patients have been treated with CND261 across IND-enables studies, IITs, and compassionate use. CND261 has demonstrated a favorable tolerability profile with CRS observed in 19% of patients, all of which were Grade 1. No Grade 2 or higher CRS events were reported, and no cases of ICANS were observed in any patient treated with CND261.

When combined with the pharmacodynamic biopsy findings described above, the emerging profile of CND261—deep tissue CD20+ B-cell depletion with CRS limited to low-grade and no ICANS—is encouraging for continued development in autoimmune indications. These data are early and based on a limited patient population, and a more complete characterization of the clinical profile will emerge as the program advances.

Evaluation of CND261 in patients with autoimmune disease

We are evaluating CND261 in a Phase 1 dose escalation study in patients with refractory RA and a dose escalation IIT in patients with SLE. CND261 has also been provided for compassionate use in patients with ANCA vasculitis and RA.

Completed Phase 1 clinical trial in patients with lymphoma

Prior to licensing CND261 from Genor BioPharma, Genor BioPharma completed a Phase 1 clinical trial in patients with refractory lymphoma in China and Australia. Clinical data as of the January 30, 2024 final data cut-off is summarized below. The median patient age was 60 years old with patients having had a median of 3 prior lines of therapy (range 1 to 10) and 99% having had prior treatment with rituximab. CND261 was administered by intravenous infusion once weekly for up to the first two cycles followed by every three weeks at flat dose levels of 1, 3, 10, 30, 50, 100, 200 and 300 mg. Step-up dosing was applied to 30 mg doses and above for the first dosing cycle. A total of 93 non-Hodgkins lymphoma (“NHL”) patients had received at least 1 dose of CND261.

NHL patients with both follicular lymphoma (“FL”) and diffuse large B-cell lymphoma (“DLBCL”) were enrolled. Of the 51 efficacy evaluable DLBCL patients, doses of 3 to 300 mg were administered with an observed ORR of 51%. Of the 20 efficacy evaluable FL patients, doses of 10 to 300 mg were administered with an observed ORR of 90%.

CRS of any grade was noted in 19.4% of the 93 patients who had received at least 1 dose, with 12.9% Grade 1, 5.4% Grade 2, and 1.1% Grade 5. The single case of Grade 5 CRS occurred in a patient receiving 300 mg of CND261 who was diagnosed late and discharged prematurely from the clinical trial site without appropriate treatment. For DLBCL, there were 60 patients who had received 200 mg of CND261 or less. Among these patients, CRS of any grade was observed in 19% of patients, with 2% being Grade 2 or higher. No cases of ICANS were reported of all patients treated. Treatment related serious adverse events of 5% incidence or higher was pneumonia which was seen in 6.5% of patients. There were 6 treatment emergent deaths of which 2 were deemed to be treatment related due to one case of Grade 5 CRS for a patient receiving 300 mg of CND261 and one case of pneumonia co-infected with multiple viruses. We do not plan to further develop CND261 for lymphoma.

CND261 Ab design and pre-clinical data

CND261 is a bispecific TCE antibody that binds to CD20 on B-cells and CD3 on T-cells. CND261 has been engineered to have tight binding to one CD20 protein and lower affinity binding to one CD3 protein. The effector portion of the Fc region has been kept intact which allows for ADCC as well as CDC mechanisms for cytotoxicity.

In vitro studies were performed in cell-based assays comparing CND261 to odronextamab, a CD20 TCE that has progressed through Phase 3 clinical trials for oncology indications. In these studies, CND261 showed comparable cytotoxicity to odronextamab while also demonstrating lower cytokine release both in terms of maximal levels as well as potency.

Given the limited cross reactivity of CND261 to NHP CD3, assessment of B-cell depletion in NHP cannot be reliably assessed.

CND319 – A trispecific TCE Antibody Targeting CD19 or CD20-expressing B-cells and CD3-expressing T Cells

CND319 is a trispecific TCE that can bind to CD19 or CD20 on B-cells. By targeting both CD19 and CD20, CND319 increases the likelihood of engaging heterogeneous pathogenic B-cell populations compared with single-target approaches. The optimized architecture positions CD19 and CD20 binding domains on the B-cell side and a tuned CD3 binding domain on the T-cell side to promote stable immune synapse formation and T-cell-mediated cytotoxicity. An Fc-silenced IgG4 backbone and a CD3 domain with fast on/fast off kinetics are designed to preserve cytotoxic activity while limiting excessive T-cell activation and cytokine release, supporting a differentiated therapeutic approach for antibody-mediated autoimmune indications.

CND319 has demonstrated potent and selective B-cell depletion in preclinical studies. In tissue distribution studies conducted in NHPs, a single dose of CND319 resulted in near-complete depletion of CD20-positive B-cells in the spleen, bone marrow, and lymph nodes seven days post-administration. B-cell depletion was observed across all tested dose levels (0.5 mg/kg, 1.5 mg/kg, 5 mg/kg, and 15 mg/kg), with depletion exceeding 95% in target tissues at doses of 1.5 mg/kg and higher.

Additionally, CND319 demonstrated a favorable safety profile in these preclinical studies. Serum cytokine analysis conducted across the dose range showed minimal cytokine release, with levels of key inflammatory cytokines including IL-4, IL-5, IL-10, IL-13, and TNF remaining below the lower limits of quantification across all dose groups and time points evaluated. This lack of significant cytokine elevation suggests that CND319 may have the potential for minimal CRS in clinical development.

These preclinical findings support the continued development of CND319 as a potentially differentiated B-cell depleting therapy with potent efficacy combined with an improved safety profile. The demonstration of robust B-cell depletion without significant cytokine release in NHPs provides important proof-of-concept data as we advance CND319 toward clinical evaluation.

We are currently conducting IND-enabling activities for CND319, including CMC development, as well as required nonclinical studies to support initial clinical evaluation. These efforts are focused on establishing a scalable manufacturing process and generating the data necessary to support regulatory submissions. Subject to completion of these activities and regulatory clearance, we plan to initiate a Phase 1 first-in-human clinical study in the middle of 2026 to evaluate the safety, tolerability, and pharmacologic profile of CND319.

CND460 – A trispecific TCE Antibody Targeting BCMA or CD19 expressing B-cells and CD3 expressing T cells

CND460 is a trispecific TCE antibody designed to bind to BCMA and/or CD19 on B-cells or plasma cells, and CD3 on T cells. This dual-target strategy can address a potential limitation of CD19 or CD20-targeted therapies, which deplete B-cells but leave long-lived plasma cells intact which can continue autoantibody production. By achieving redundant and deep B-cells and plasma cells in a single molecule, CND460 has the potential to achieve more profound and durable disease control. CND460 is currently undergoing IND-enabling studies with first-in-human trials planned for first half of 2027.

Clinical Development Strategy and Disease Prioritization

Since our inception, Candid has pursued an innovative and comprehensive regulatory strategy designed to accelerate clinical development while generating robust safety and efficacy data across multiple geographies and patient populations. Our approach has been to leverage all available regulatory pathways to rapidly advance our product candidates and address significant unmet medical needs in autoimmune diseases.

To execute this strategy, we are leveraging our global clinical infrastructure to conduct trials across multiple indications in parallel, enabling us to generate data more efficiently and inform development decisions across our portfolio on an expedited timeline. We established a clinical team in China to access the country's deep clinical expertise and large, concentrated patient populations with limited treatment options. Through this presence, we have successfully generated clinical data in multiple patients utilizing both the IND and IIT pathway in China. These pathways have enabled us to conduct clinical studies efficiently while building important relationships with leading physicians and clinical researchers in the region.

In parallel, we have provided our drug candidates as part of compassionate use under NPU in Europe to treat patients with highly refractory autoimmune diseases who had exhausted available therapeutic options. This approach has allowed us to gather critical real-world evidence in severely ill patient populations while providing potential therapeutic benefit to individuals with few or no remaining treatment alternatives. The compassionate use experience has been particularly valuable in informing our understanding of the clinical profile for cizutamig and CND261 in advanced disease settings.

Through these multi-jurisdictional regulatory approaches, we have rapidly generated clinical data for both cizutamig and CND261 across various dose levels and administration schedules. Our clinical experience to date has provided us with important insights into optimal dosing strategies for cizutamig, including appropriate immune reset doses to achieve sustained therapeutic effect while maintaining favorable tolerability. As of February 2, 2026, we have established a safety database comprising 47 patients treated with cizutamig and 26 patients with CND261 across various autoimmune indications, which we believe represents one of the most comprehensive datasets for TCEs in autoimmune disease. Additionally, we have dosed 16 healthy volunteers in Australia with our subcutaneous formulation of cizutamig, expanding our understanding of alternative delivery methods.

We believe this diversified regulatory strategy has provided Candid with several important advantages, including accelerated clinical timelines, a robust and geographically diverse safety database, access to diverse patient populations and disease presentations, and valuable dose-finding and optimization data that will inform our future pivotal trials. As we advance toward later-stage clinical development, we intend to continue leveraging appropriate regulatory pathways in multiple jurisdictions while pursuing traditional regulatory approval routes in major markets including the United States and Europe. Our regulatory strategy is designed to maximize the speed and efficiency of our clinical programs while maintaining the highest standards of patient safety and data quality necessary for regulatory approval.

Disease indications of interest

Our clinical development strategy is focused on pursuing cizutamig and our other TCE drug candidates in autoimmune diseases that represent multibillion-dollar market opportunities. We are targeting two categories of indications: established commercial markets with validated therapeutic need, and high unmet need indications where current treatment options are inadequate or nonexistent.

In the established commercial market category, we are pursuing or planning to pursue clinical development in gMG, TED, Graves' disease, ulcerative colitis, IgAN, IgE-mediated allergy, and RA. These indications represent large, validated markets with existing approved therapies, but where significant unmet medical needs persist, including patients who are refractory to current treatment options, those who experience intolerable side effects, or those requiring more convenient administration or improved efficacy. The collective market opportunity for therapies in these established indications represents billions of dollars in annual global sales.

In the high unmet need category, we are focusing on indications where current treatment options are severely limited or where no approved therapies exist. These include ILD, SSc, Sjögren's disease, and SLE. Additionally, we see clinical rationale and market expansion opportunities in autoimmune hepatitis, ANCA vasculitis, idiopathic inflammatory myopathies, and transplant alloantibodies. These indications are characterized by serious, progressive, and often life-threatening disease courses, with many patients experiencing inadequate responses to available immunosuppressive therapies or suffering significant treatment-related adverse events.

We believe that TCEs can become the next major drug class to treat autoimmune diseases and that clinical data will guide the most appropriate indications in which B-cell depletion can have the most significant impact. Our strategy of pursuing both established markets and high unmet need indications is designed to maximize the commercial potential of our product candidates while addressing the most serious unmet medical needs in autoimmune disease. The breadth of our target indications reflects the central role that plasma cells and autoantibodies play in autoimmune disease pathogenesis and the potential applicability of cizutamig's unique mechanism across a wide range of antibody-mediated autoimmune conditions.

Target Product Profile for TCEs—Immune Reset and Immune Dimming

We see an opportunity for our programs to be developed with different target product profiles ("TPPs") which are not mutually exclusive. At the core of each TPP, is the depth of desired B-cell depletion, which we believe correlates to depth and durability of clinical benefit as well as the need for interim management of increased infection risk due to immunosuppression. We believe TCEs have now shown the same level of deep B-cell depletion and clinical response seen with CAR-T in autoimmune patients. We refer to this TPP as an “immune reset”. The goal with immune reset is to provide one cycle of therapy for durable benefit lasting years. As the immune system is resetting, prophylaxis with intravenous immunoglobulins and antibiotics to prevent serious infections is likely needed. In contrast to “immune reset”, one can also target partial B-cell depletion with the aim of demonstrating clinical improvement over existing standard of care in autoimmune diseases. We refer to this TPP as “immune dimming”. As only partial B-cell depletion is targeted, underlying pre-existing immunity could be preserved resulting in minimal to no infection risk. With immune dimming, we expect intermittent dosing of TCEs is needed to maintain clinical benefit. With cizutamig, Candid’s lead program, we have dosed patients with both immune reset and immune dimming dosing regimens and observed initial promising clinical results to continue further studies.

Discovery Programs

We have ongoing discovery effort to identify novel TCEs which can address various immunology and inflammatory diseases. We are collaborating with several research partners to leverage their antibody engineering and other discovery expertise.

Manufacturing and Supply

We do not own or operate, and currently have no plans to establish, any manufacturing facilities. We rely on third-party contract development and manufacturing organizations (“CDMOs”) for the supply of our drug candidates for use in our preclinical studies and clinical trials. We have made significant investments in CMC activities to support the development of our product candidates and to establish robust, scalable manufacturing processes.

We have engaged multiple third-party CDMOs for biologics development and manufacturing services and are continuously evaluating additional CDMOs to further diversify and strengthen our supply chain. This multi-sourcing strategy is designed to mitigate supply chain risk and deliver continuity of drug supply as our programs advance through clinical development. We expect to have sufficient drug supply for our product candidates to conduct our planned clinical trials.

A key component of our CMC investment has been the development of subcutaneous formulations for our lead product candidates. We have successfully developed subcutaneous formulations for cizutamig, CND261, and CND319. We plan to incorporate subcutaneous formulations into our clinical development programs for our product candidates as data from ongoing studies become available.

Our CMC development efforts have focused on establishing robust, scalable manufacturing processes that can support both clinical development and potential commercial production. This includes optimization of cell line development, upstream and downstream processing, formulation development, and analytical methods to deliver product quality, consistency, and stability. We have invested in process characterization and comparability studies to support manufacturing transfers between CDMOs and to enable regulatory filings.

If any of our drug candidates receives marketing approval, we intend to rely on third-party CDMOs for commercial manufacturing. As our drug candidates advance through development, we expect to enter into longer-term commercial supply agreements to fulfill and secure our production needs. We will seek to establish relationships with multiple qualified manufacturers to provide redundancy and supply chain resilience for commercial production. Our manufacturing strategy is designed to deliver adequate supply to meet anticipated commercial demand while maintaining flexibility to respond to market dynamics and potential supply chain disruptions.

Sales and Marketing

Given our stage of development, we have not yet established a commercial organization or distribution capabilities. We intend to build a commercial infrastructure to support sales of any of our approved future drugs. We expect to manage sales, marketing and distribution through internal resources and third-party relationships. In addition, we plan to opportunistically explore commercialization partnerships, particularly with entities that have strong capabilities in geographies outside the United States. As our current and future drug candidates progress through clinical development, our commercial plans may change. Clinical data, the size of the development programs, the size of our target markets, the size of the requisite commercial infrastructure and manufacturing needs may all influence our commercialization strategies.

Competition

The biotechnology and pharmaceutical industries are characterized by the rapid evolution of technologies and understanding of disease etiology, intense competition and a strong emphasis on intellectual property. We face substantial competition from many different sources, including major pharmaceutical, specialty pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies, academic research institutions and governmental agencies and public and private research institutions.

Our competition for B-cell depletion includes mAbs, bispecifics which include TCEs, IgG degraders, and various forms of cell therapy from several pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies, including AbbVie Inc., Amgen, Argenx, Artiva Biotherapeutics, Inc., Biohaven Ltd., Bristol-Myers Squibb Company, Cabaletta Bio, Inc., Cartesian Therapeutics, Inc., Cullinan Therapeutics, Inc., Fate Therapeutics, Inc., GSK plc, Immunovant, Inc., Johnson & Johnson, Kyverna Therapeutics, Inc., Merck & Co., Inc., Otsuka Pharmaceutical, Pfizer, Inc., Roche Holding AG, among others.

Many of our current or potential competitors, either alone or with their collaboration partners, have significantly greater financial resources and expertise in research and development, manufacturing, preclinical testing, conducting clinical trials, obtaining regulatory approvals and marketing approved products than we do. Mergers and acquisitions in the pharmaceutical and biotechnology industries may result in even more resources being concentrated among a smaller number of our competitors. Smaller or early-stage companies may also prove to be significant competitors, particularly through collaborative arrangements with large and established companies. These competitors also compete with us in recruiting and retaining qualified scientific and management personnel and establishing clinical trial sites and patient enrollment in clinical trials, as well as in acquiring technologies complementary to, or necessary for, our programs.

We could see a reduction or elimination in our commercial opportunity if our competitors develop and commercialize drugs that are safer, more effective, have fewer or less severe side effects, are more convenient to administer, are less expensive or with a more favorable label than our drug candidates. Our competitors also may obtain FDA or other regulatory approval for their drugs more rapidly than we may obtain approval for ours, which could result in our competitors establishing a strong market position before we are able to enter the market. The key competitive factors affecting the success of all of our drug candidates, if approved, are likely to be efficacy, safety, convenience, price, availability of the relevant isotope, the effectiveness of imaging diagnostics, the level of generic competition and the availability of reimbursement from government and other third-party payors.

Intellectual Property

We strive to protect and enhance the proprietary technology, inventions and improvements that are commercially important to our business, including seeking, maintaining and defending patent rights, whether developed internally or licensed from third parties. Our intellectual property strategy includes seeking to protect our proprietary position by, amongst other methods, striving to obtain issued patents by filing and prosecuting patent applications in the United States and in jurisdictions outside of the United States, directed to our proprietary technology, inventions, improvements, and drug candidates that are important to the development and implementation of our business. We also rely on trade secrets and know-how relating to our proprietary technology and drug candidates, continued innovation, and in-licensing opportunities to develop, strengthen and maintain our proprietary position in the field of immunotherapy. We also plan to rely on data exclusivity, market exclusivity and patent term extensions when available. Our commercial success will depend in part on our ability to obtain and maintain patent and other proprietary protection for our technology, inventions and improvements; to preserve the confidentiality of our trade secrets and know-how; to obtain and maintain licenses to use intellectual property owned by third parties; to defend and enforce our proprietary rights, including any patents that we may own in the future; and to operate without infringing on the valid and enforceable patents and other proprietary rights of third parties.

As of February 26, 2026, we own one U.S. provisional patent application that discloses treatment of certain indications by cizutamig and one U.S. provisional patent application that discloses cizutamig dosing strategies. We have exclusively in-licensed 12 foreign patent applications that disclose cizutamig sequences and have non-exclusively in-licensed one U.S. non-provisional patent application, ten foreign patent applications, and two foreign patents that disclose cizutamig anti-CD3 antibody sequences, and two U.S. patents, two foreign patent applications, and 23 foreign patents that disclose cizutamig antibody formats. Absent any patent term extension, patent term adjustments, and terminal disclaimers, the Candid-owned and Genor in-licensed patents and patents that issue from these pending applications are expected to expire between 2038 and 2045. We own one U.S. provisional patent application, one PCT patent application, and two foreign patent applications that disclose treatment of certain indications by CND319. We have exclusively in-licensed one PCT patent application, and two foreign patent applications that disclose CND319 sequences, and one PCT patent application that discloses treatment of certain indications by CND319. We have non-exclusively in-licensed two U.S. non-provisional patent applications, one U.S. patent, one PCT patent application, 30 foreign patent applications, and 13 foreign patents that disclose antibody formats and platform sequences used in CND319, and one U.S. non-provisional patent application, three U.S. patents, 15 foreign patent applications, and 15 foreign patents that disclose CND319 anti-CD3 antibody sequences, and one U.S. patent, 12 foreign patent applications, and 12 foreign patents that disclose CND319 anti-CD19 antibody sequences. All of the in-licensed patents and patent applications related to CND319 are licensed from WuXi Biologics together with its Affiliates and are licensed worldwide. Absent any patent term extension, patent term adjustments, and terminal disclaimers, the Candid-owned and WuXi Biologics in-licensed patents and patents that issue from these pending applications are expected to expire between 2038 and 2046. In addition, we own, two PCT patent applications and two U.S. provisional patent applications that disclose aspects of our technology related to other antibody compositions and methods. Absent any patent term extension, patent term adjustments, and terminal disclaimers, patents that issue from these pending applications are expected to expire in 2046.

With respect to our drug candidates and processes, we intend to develop and commercialize in the normal course of business, and we intend to pursue patent protection directed to, when possible, compositions, methods of use, methods of making, dosing and formulations. We may also pursue patent protection with respect to manufacturing, therapeutic development processes and technologies, and therapeutic delivery technologies.

Issued patents can provide protection for varying periods of time, depending upon the date of filing of the patent application, the date of patent issuance and the legal term of patents in the countries in which they are obtained. In general, patents issued for applications filed in the United States can provide exclusionary rights for 20 years from the earliest effective filing date excluding U.S. provisional applications. In addition, in certain instances, the term of an issued U.S. patent that is directed to or claims an FDA approved product can be extended to recapture a portion of the term effectively lost as a result of the FDA regulatory review period, which is called patent term extension. The restoration period cannot be longer than five years and the total patent term, including the restoration period, must not exceed 14 years following FDA approval. The term of patents outside of the United States varies in accordance with the laws of the foreign jurisdiction but typically is also 20 years from the earliest effective filing date excluding U.S. provisional applications. However, the actual protection afforded by a patent varies on a product-by-product basis, from country-to-country and depends upon many factors, including the type of patent, the scope of its claims, the availability of regulatory-related extensions, the availability of legal remedies in a particular country, and the validity and enforceability of the patent.

The patent positions of companies like ours are generally uncertain and involve complex legal and factual questions. No consistent policy regarding the scope of claims allowable in patents in the field of immunotherapy has emerged in the United States. The relevant patent laws and their interpretation outside of the United States are also uncertain. Changes in either the patent laws or their interpretation in the United States and other countries may diminish our ability to protect our technology or drug candidates and enforce the patent rights that we have licensed or may license and could affect the value of such intellectual property. In particular, our ability to stop third parties from making, using, selling, offering to sell, or importing products that infringe our intellectual property will depend in part on our success in obtaining and enforcing patent claims that cover our technology, inventions and improvements. With respect to company-owned or licensed intellectual property that we currently have or may have in the future, we cannot guarantee that patents will be granted with respect to any of our pending patent applications or with respect to any patent applications we or our licensors may file in the future, nor can we be sure that any patents that may be granted to us or our licensors in the future will be commercially useful in protecting our products, the methods of use or manufacture of those products. Moreover, even the issued patents that we license do not guarantee us the right to practice our technology in relation to the commercialization of our products. Patents and other intellectual property rights in the pharmaceutical and biotechnology space are evolving and involve many risks and uncertainties. For example, third parties may have blocking patents that could be used to prevent us from commercializing our drug candidates and practicing our proprietary technology, and the issued patents that we in-license or may in-license and those that may issue in the future may be challenged, invalidated, or circumvented, which could limit our ability to stop competitors from marketing related products or could limit the term of patent protection that otherwise may exist for our drug candidates. In addition, the scope of the rights granted under any issued patents may not provide us with protection or competitive advantages against competitors with similar technology. Furthermore, our competitors may independently develop similar technologies that are outside the scope of the rights granted under any issued patents that we may own or that we exclusively in-license. For these reasons, we may face competition with respect to our drug candidates. Moreover, because of the extensive time required for development, testing and regulatory review of a potential product, it is possible that, before any particular drug candidate can be commercialized, any patent protection for such product may expire or remain in force for only a short period following commercialization, thereby reducing the commercial advantage the patent provides. A comprehensive discussion on risks relating to our intellectual property is provided under the section of this proxy statement/prospectus titled “Risk Factors—Risks Related to Candid—Risks Related to Candid’s Intellectual Property.”

License and Collaboration Agreements

License and Collaboration Agreement with Shanghai EpimAb Biotherapeutics Co., Ltd.

In August 2024, we entered into a license and collaboration agreement (the “EpimAb License Agreement”) with Shanghai EpimAb Biotherapeutics Co., Ltd. (“EpimAb”).

Under the EpimAb License Agreement, we received a royalty-bearing, sublicensable license, under certain know-how and patent rights controlled by EpimAb relating to BCMA/CD3 bispecific antibodies, to research, develop, manufacture, use, sell, offer for sale, import and otherwise commercialize cizutamig and certain derivatives of cizutamig that are also BCMA/CD3 bispecific antibodies, and products containing cizutamig or such derivatives ("CND106 Licensed Products") everywhere in the world except for Greater China (which includes Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan) (the "Cizutamig Licensed Territory") for the diagnosis, treatment or prevention of all human and non-human diseases (the "Cizutamig Field"). Our license is exclusive with respect to certain licensed patents and claims of certain other licensed patents that specifically cover any BCMA/CD3 bispecific antibody as a whole or that cover certain binding sequences and licensed know-how that is related to such licensed patents or licensed patent claims; it is non-exclusive with respect to all other licensed patent claims and licensed know-how. We also have a non-exclusive license from EpimAb (a) to manufacture cizutamig and Cizutamig Licensed Products in Greater China (including Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan) (the "EpimAb Territory") solely for use in the Cizutamig Licensed Territory and (b) to research and develop CND106 Licensed Products in the CND106 Field in the EpimAb Territory solely for the purpose of obtaining regulatory approval of CND106 Licensed Products in the Cizutamig Licensed Territory.

We are responsible, at our cost, for the development, manufacture and commercialization of CND106 Licensed Products in the CND106 Field in the CND106 Licensed Territory. We are obligated to use commercially reasonable efforts to develop at least one CND106 Licensed Product in the CND106 Field in the CND106 Licensed Territory; provided, however, that this obligation will expire upon achievement of a certain development milestone, or upon our election to make a certain milestone payment early.

EpimAb received total upfront cash consideration of $30.0 million under the EpimAb License Agreement. In addition, we also issued to EpimAb's parent company and its shareholders a total of 30.0 million shares of our Series A-1 convertible preferred stock. We are obligated to pay EpimAb up to $95.0 million in development and regulatory milestone payments, up to $480.0 million in commercial milestone payments and tiered single-digit royalties on net sales of CND106 Licensed Products. The royalty payments are subject to reduction under certain customary circumstances. On a CND106 Licensed Product-by-Cizutamig Licensed Product and country-by-country basis, our obligation to pay EpimAb royalties commences on the first commercial sale of such CND106 Licensed Product in the applicable country until the latest to occur of (a) the last-to-expire valid claim within the licensed patents covering such CND106 Licensed Product in the applicable country, (b) the expiration of the last-to-expire regulatory exclusivity for such CND106 Licensed Product in the applicable country and (c) 12 years after the first commercial sale of such CND106 Licensed Product in the applicable country.

The EpimAb License Agreement will remain in effect on a Cizutamig Licensed Product-by-CND106 Licensed Product and country-by-country basis until expiration of all royalty payment obligations, unless it is earlier terminated. Following expiration of the EpimAb License Agreement, the licenses granted to us become non-exclusive, perpetual, irrevocable and fully paid-up. We may terminate the EpimAb License Agreement for convenience upon advance written notice to EpimAb. Either party may terminate the EpimAb License Agreement for the other party's uncured material breach; provided, however, that this termination right will not be available to either party after achievement of a certain development milestone, or upon our election to make a certain milestone payment early. Either party may terminate the EpimAb License Agreement in connection with the insolvency of the other party. EpimAb may terminate the EpimAb License Agreement if we challenge a licensed patent, subject to a specified notice and cure period. Upon termination of the EpimAb License Agreement, we are subject to certain post-termination obligations to enable EpimAb to be able to exploit Cizutamig Licensed Products in the Cizutamig Field on a worldwide basis.

License Agreement with Genor Biopharma Co. Ltd.

We entered into a license agreement with Genor Biopharma Co. Ltd. ("Genor") in August 2024 and an amendment to this agreement in March 2025 (the "Genor License Agreement").

Under the Genor License Agreement, we received an exclusive, royalty-bearing, sublicensable license under certain know-how and patent rights controlled by Genor (including certain intellectual property in-licensed by Genor) relating to bispecific antibodies and heteromultimeric proteins ("Licensed IP") to develop, use, manufacture, commercialize and otherwise exploit CND261 (formerly known as GB261), certain derivatives of CND261 that are also CD20xCD3 bispecific antibodies, and products containing CND261 or such derivatives ("CND261 Licensed Products") everywhere in the world except for Mainland China, Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan (the "CND261 Licensed Territory") for the diagnosis, treatment or prevention of disease in humans and animals (the "CND261 Field"). We also received a non-exclusive, sublicensable license under the Licensed IP in Mainland China, Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan (the "Genor Territory") to manufacture CND261 Licensed Products in the Genor Territory and to conduct non-clinical and certain clinical development of CND261 Licensed Products in the Genor Territory in the CND261 Field, solely for the purposes of supporting exploitation of CND261 Licensed Products in the CND261 Field in the CND261 Licensed Territory. In addition, we have a right of first negotiation if Genor decides to commence negotiations with one or more third parties to grant a license to develop, use, manufacture, commercialize or otherwise exploit CND261 Licensed Products in the CND261 Field in the Genor Territory.

We are responsible, at our cost, for the development, manufacture and commercialization of CND261 Licensed Products in the CND261 Field in the CND261 Licensed Territory. We are obligated to use commercially reasonable efforts to develop and obtain regulatory approval for at least one CND261 Licensed Product in the CND261 Field in the United States and in at least one of Canada, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Spain or Italy ("Major Market Countries"). We are also obligated to use commercially reasonable efforts to commercialize at least one CND261 Licensed Product in the United States or any Major Market Country in which regulatory approval has been obtained for such product. We are also obligated to use commercially reasonable efforts to conduct IIT(s) and Phase I clinical trial(s) of a CND261 Licensed Product in the Genor Territory for the indication of autoimmune and inflammatory diseases.

Genor received total upfront cash consideration of $16.0 million and received an additional $4.5 million and $2.0 million upon the achievement of milestones specified in and pursuant to the Genor License Agreement during the year ended December 31, 2025 and the period from May 1, 2024 (inception) to December 31, 2024, respectively. In addition, we issued an aggregate of 12,499,997 shares of our common stock to an affiliate of Genor pursuant to a stock purchase agreement. We are also obligated to pay Genor up to $138.5 million in development and regulatory milestone payments, up to $300.0 million in commercial milestone payments, tiered mid single-digit to low double-digit percentage royalties on net sales of CND261 Licensed Products, and mid single-digit to low double-digit percentage of income that we receive from our sublicensees if we sublicense our rights to CND261 Licensed Products. The royalty payments are subject to reduction under certain customary circumstances. On a CND261 Licensed Product-by-CND261 Licensed Product and country-by-country basis, our obligation to pay Genor royalties commences on the first commercial sale of such CND261 Licensed Product in the applicable country until the latest to occur of (a) the last-to-expire valid claim within the patents licensed to us by Genor covering such CND261 Licensed Product in the applicable country, (b) the expiration of the last-to-expire regulatory exclusivity for such CND261 Licensed Product in the applicable country and (c) ten years after the first commercial sale of such CND261 Licensed Product in the applicable country.

The Genor License Agreement will remain in effect on a CND261 Licensed Product-by-CND261 Licensed Product and country-by-country basis until expiration of all royalty payment obligations, unless it is earlier terminated. Following expiration of the Genor License Agreement, the licenses granted to us become non-exclusive, perpetual, irrevocable and fully paid-up. Either party may terminate the Genor License Agreement for the other party's uncured material breach or insolvency, subject to certain notice and cure periods. Genor may terminate the Genor License Agreement if we challenge any of the patents licensed to us, subject to a specified notice and cure period. We may terminate the Genor License Agreement in its entirety, or on a country-by-country or CND261 Licensed Product-by-CND261 Licensed Product basis for convenience upon advance written notice to Genor. Upon termination of the Genor License Agreement, we are subject to certain post-termination obligations to enable Genor to be able to exploit the CND261 Licensed Products on a worldwide basis, or if the Genor License Agreement is not terminated in its entirety, in the applicable terminated countries.

License Agreement with WuXi Biologics

In January 2025, we entered into a license agreement (the "WuXi License Agreement") with WuXi Biologics (Shanghai) Co., Ltd. ("WuXi Biologics").

Under the WuXi License Agreement, we received an exclusive, royalty-bearing license, with the right to grant sublicenses, under certain know-how and patent rights controlled by WuXi Biologics, to develop, have developed, manufacture, have manufactured, sell, offer for sale, have sold, import and have imported, export and have exported, and otherwise commercialize CND319, certain other CD19xCD20xCD3 trispecific antibodies, and products containing CND319 or such CD19xCD20xCD3 trispecific antibodies ("CND319 Licensed Products") for all human and non-human use, including for all research, diagnostic and therapeutic purposes (the "CND319 Field"), throughout the world.

We are responsible, at our cost, for the global development, manufacture and commercialization of CND319 Licensed Products in the CND319 Field. Until completion of the first Phase I clinical trial of a CND319 Licensed Product, we are obligated to use commercially reasonable efforts to develop a CND319 Licensed Product in the CND319 Field.

WuXi Biologics received total upfront cash consideration of $25.0 million. We are also obligated to pay WuXi Biologics up to $150.0 million in development and regulatory milestone payments, up to $750.0 million in commercial milestone payments, and tiered low to mid single-digit percentage royalties on annual net sales of each CND319 Licensed Product. The royalty payments are subject to reduction under certain customary circumstances. On a CND319 Licensed Product-by-CND319 Licensed Product and country-by-country basis, our obligation to pay WuXi Biologics royalties commences on the first commercial sale of such CND319 Licensed Product in the applicable country and continues until the last to occur of (a) 12 years after the first commercial sale of such CND319 Licensed Product in the applicable country, (b) the last-to-expire valid claim within certain patents licensed to us by WuXi Biologics covering the composition of matter of such CND319 Licensed Product in a trispecific format in the applicable country, and (c) expiration of regulatory exclusivity for such CND319 Licensed Product in the applicable country. In addition, if we sublicense our rights to CND319 Products, we are obligated to pay to WuXi Biologics a percentage of certain income that we receive from our sublicensees; such percentage will be between a high single-digit to low double-digit, depending upon when the sublicense is granted.

The WuXi License Agreement will remain in effect on a CND319 Licensed Product-by-CND319 Licensed Product and country-by-country basis until expiration of all royalty payment obligations for such CND319 Licensed Product in the applicable country, unless it is earlier terminated. Following expiration of the WuXi License Agreement, the license granted to us becomes fully paid-up, perpetual, and irrevocable. We may terminate the WuXi License Agreement in its entirety, or on a country-by-country basis, for convenience upon advance written notice to WuXi Biologics. Either party may terminate the WuXi License Agreement for the other party's uncured material breach or insolvency, subject to certain notice and cure periods. WuXi Biologics may terminate the WuXi License Agreement if we or our sublicensees challenge any of the patents licensed to us, subject to a specified notice and cure period.

Government Regulation and Product Approval

Government authorities in the United States, at the federal, state and local levels, and in other countries extensively regulate, among other things, the research, development, testing, manufacturing, quality control, approval, licensure, labeling, packaging, storage, record-keeping, promotion, advertising, distribution, post-approval monitoring and reporting, marketing and export and import of biological products such as those we are developing. Our drug candidates must be approved or licensed by the FDA before they may be legally marketed in the United States and by the appropriate foreign regulatory authorities before they may be legally marketed in foreign countries. Generally, our activities in other countries will be subject to regulation that is similar in nature and scope as that imposed in the United States, although there can be important differences. Additionally, some significant aspects of regulation in the European Union ("EU") are addressed in a centralized way, but country-specific regulation remains essential in many respects. The process for obtaining regulatory marketing approvals and the subsequent compliance with appropriate federal, state, local and foreign statutes and regulations require the expenditure of substantial time and financial resources.

Regulation of Biological Products in the United States

In the United States, the FDA regulates biological products under the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act ("FDCA"), the Public Health Service Act ("PHSA") and their implementing regulations. The process of obtaining regulatory approvals and the subsequent compliance with appropriate federal, state, local and foreign statutes and regulations require the expenditure of substantial time and financial resources. Failure to comply with the applicable U.S. requirements at any time during the product development process, approval process or after approval, may subject an applicant to administrative or judicial sanctions. FDA sanctions could include, among other actions, refusal to approve pending applications, withdrawal of an approval, a clinical hold, warning letters, product recalls or withdrawals from the market, product seizures, total or partial suspension of production or distribution injunctions, finances, refusals of government contracts, restitution, disgorgement or civil or criminal penalties. The process required by the FDA before a biological product may be marketed in the United States generally involves the following:

- completion of nonclinical laboratory tests and certain nonclinical animal studies according to good laboratory practices ("GLPs") and other applicable requirements;
- submission to the FDA of an IND, which must become effective before human clinical trials may begin and must be updated annually;
- approval by an independent Institutional Review Board ("IRB") or ethics committee representing each clinical site before the trial is commenced;
- performance of adequate and well-controlled human clinical trials according to the FDA's regulations commonly referred to as good clinical practices ("GCPs"), and any additional requirements for the protection of human research patients and their health information, to establish the safety, purity and potency of the proposed biological product for its intended use;
- preparation of and submission to the FDA of a biologics license application ("BLA") requesting approval for one or more proposed indications;
- a determination by the FDA within 60 days of its receipt of a BLA to file the application for review;
- satisfactory completion of one or more FDA pre-approval inspections of the manufacturing facility or facilities where the proposed biological product is produced to assess compliance with current good manufacturing practices ("cGMPs"), to assure that the facilities, methods and controls are adequate to preserve the drug candidate's identity, strength, quality and purity;
- potential FDA audits of the nonclinical studies and clinical trial sites that generated the data in support of the BLA;
- satisfactory completion of an FDA Advisory Committee review, if applicable;
- payment of user fees under the Prescription Drug User Fee Act ("PDUFA"), unless exempted; and
- FDA review and approval of the BLA.

Nonclinical Studies and Investigational New Drug Application

Before testing any biological drug candidate in humans, the drug candidate must undergo rigorous preclinical testing. Preclinical tests, also referred to as nonclinical studies, include laboratory evaluations of product chemistry, toxicity and formulation, as well as animal studies to assess the potential safety and activity of the drug candidate. The conduct of preclinical tests must comply with federal regulations and requirements, including GLPs for certain studies. The clinical trial sponsor must submit the results of the preclinical tests, together with manufacturing information, analytical data, any available clinical data or literature and a proposed clinical protocol, to the FDA as part of the IND, which is a request for authorization from the FDA to administer an investigational biological product to humans in clinical trials. Some preclinical testing may continue even after the IND is submitted.

An IND must become effective before human clinical trials may begin. The IND automatically becomes effective 30 days after receipt by the FDA, unless the FDA raises concerns or questions regarding the proposed clinical trials and places the trial on a clinical hold within that 30-day time period. In such a case, the IND sponsor and the FDA must resolve any outstanding concerns before the clinical trial can begin. The FDA may also impose clinical holds on a biological drug candidate at any time before or during clinical trials due to safety concerns or non-compliance. If the FDA imposes a clinical hold, trials may not initiate or resume under the IND without FDA authorization and then only under terms authorized by the FDA.

Clinical Trials in Support of a BLA

Clinical trials involve the administration of the biological drug candidate to human subjects under the supervision of qualified investigators in accordance with GCPs, which include, among other things, the requirement that all research subjects provide their informed consent for their participation in any clinical trial. Clinical trials are conducted under protocols detailing, among other things, the objectives of the clinical trial, dosing procedures, subject selection and exclusion criteria and the parameters to be used to monitor subject safety, including stopping rules that assure a clinical trial will be stopped if certain adverse events should occur. Each protocol and any amendments to the protocol must be submitted to the FDA as part of the IND. Further, each clinical trial must be reviewed and approved by an independent IRB or ethics committee at or servicing each institution at which the clinical trial will be conducted. An IRB is charged with protecting the welfare and rights of trial participants and considers such items as whether the risks to individuals participating in the clinical trials are minimized and are reasonable in relation to anticipated benefits. The IRB also approves the form and content of the informed consent that must be signed by each clinical trial subject or his or her legal representative and must monitor the clinical trial until completed. Some studies also include oversight by an independent group of qualified experts organized by the clinical study sponsor, known as a data safety monitoring board ("DSMB"), which provides authorization for whether or not a study may move forward at designated check points based on access to certain data from the study and may halt the clinical trial if it determines that there is an unacceptable safety risk for subjects or other grounds, such as no demonstration of efficacy.

There are also requirements governing the reporting of ongoing clinical studies and clinical study results to public registries.

Human clinical trials are typically conducted in three sequential phases that may overlap or be combined:

- Phase 1. The biological drug candidate is initially introduced into healthy human subjects and tested for safety. In the case of some products for severe or life-threatening diseases, especially when the product may be too inherently toxic to ethically administer to healthy volunteers, the initial human testing is often conducted in patients. These trials are designed to evaluate the safety, dosage tolerance, metabolism and pharmacologic actions of the biological drug candidate in humans, the side effects associated with increasing doses, and if possible, to gain early evidence on effectiveness.
- Phase 2. The biological drug candidate is evaluated in a limited patient population to identify possible adverse effects and safety risks, to preliminarily evaluate the efficacy of the drug candidate for specific targeted diseases and to determine dosage tolerance, optimal dosage and dosing schedule.
- Phase 3. Clinical trials are undertaken to further evaluate dosage, clinical efficacy, potency and safety of the biological drug candidate in an expanded patient population at geographically dispersed clinical trial sites. These clinical trials are intended to establish the overall risk to benefit ratio of the product and provide an adequate basis for product labeling.

Post-approval trials, sometimes referred to as Phase 4 studies, may be conducted after initial marketing approval. These trials are used to gain additional experience from the treatment of patients in the intended therapeutic indication. In certain instances, the FDA may mandate the performance of Phase 4 clinical trials as a condition of approval of an NDA or BLA.

During all phases of clinical development, regulatory authorities require extensive monitoring and auditing of all clinical activities, clinical data and clinical trial investigators. Annual progress reports detailing the results of the clinical trials must be submitted to the FDA. Written IND safety reports must be promptly submitted to the FDA, and the investigators for serious and unexpected adverse events, any findings from other studies, tests in laboratory animals or in vitro testing that suggest a significant risk for human patients, or any clinically important increase in the rate of a serious suspected adverse reaction over that listed in the protocol or investigator brochure. The sponsor must submit an IND safety report within 15 calendar days after the sponsor determines that the information qualifies for reporting. The sponsor also must notify the FDA of any unexpected fatal or life-threatening suspected adverse reaction within seven calendar days after the sponsor's initial receipt of the information. Phase 1, Phase 2 and Phase 3 clinical trials may not be completed successfully within any specified period, if at all. The FDA or the sponsor or its DSMB may suspend or terminate a clinical trial at any time on various grounds, including a finding that the research patients are being exposed to an unacceptable health risk. Similarly, an IRB can suspend or terminate approval of a clinical trial at its institution if the clinical trial is not being conducted in accordance with the IRB's requirements or if the biological product has been associated with unexpected serious harm to patients.

Concurrently with clinical trials, companies usually complete additional studies and must also develop additional information about the physical characteristics of the biological product as well as finalize a process for manufacturing the product in commercial quantities in accordance with cGMP requirements. To help reduce the risk of the introduction of adventitious agents with use of biological products, the PHSA emphasizes the importance of manufacturing control for products whose attributes cannot be precisely defined. The manufacturing process must be capable of consistently producing quality batches of the drug candidate and, among other things, the sponsor must develop methods for testing the identity, strength, quality, potency and purity of the final biological product.

Additionally, appropriate packaging must be selected and tested, and stability studies must be conducted to demonstrate that the biological drug candidate does not undergo unacceptable deterioration over its shelf life.

Submission, Review and Approval of a BLA to FDA

After the completion of clinical trials of a biological product, FDA approval of a BLA must be obtained before commercial marketing of the biological product. The BLA submission must include results of product development, including results from laboratory and animal studies, human trials, information on the manufacture and composition of the product, proposed labeling and other relevant information.

Under the PDUFA, as amended, each BLA must be accompanied by a significant user fee. The FDA adjusts the PDUFA user fees on an annual basis. PDUFA also imposes an annual program fee for biological products. Fee waivers or reductions are available in certain circumstances, including a waiver of the application fee for the first application filed by a small business. Additionally, no user fees are assessed on BLAs for products designated as orphan drugs, unless the product also includes a non-orphan indication.

Within 60 days following submission of the application, the FDA reviews a BLA submitted to determine if it is substantially complete before the FDA accepts it for filing. The FDA may refuse to file any BLA that it deems incomplete or not properly reviewable at the time of submission and may request additional information. In this event, the BLA must be resubmitted with the additional information. The resubmitted application also is subject to review before the FDA accepts it for filing. Once the submission is accepted for filing, the FDA begins an in-depth substantive review of the BLA. The FDA reviews the BLA to determine, among other things, whether the proposed product is safe, potent, and/or effective for its intended use, and has an acceptable purity profile, and whether the product is being manufactured in accordance with cGMP to assure and preserve the product's identity, safety, strength, quality, potency and purity. Under the PDUFA guidelines that are currently in effect, the FDA has a goal to complete a standard review of an original BLA within ten months after the filing date, or, if the application qualifies for priority review, within six months after the filing date.

The FDA may refer applications for novel biological products or biological products that present difficult questions of safety or efficacy to an advisory committee, typically a panel that includes clinicians and other experts, for review, evaluation and a recommendation as to whether the application should be approved and under what conditions. The FDA is not bound by the recommendations of an advisory committee, but it considers such recommendations carefully when making decisions.

During the biological product approval process, the FDA also will determine whether a Risk Evaluation and Mitigation Strategy ("REMS"), is necessary to assure the safe use of the biological product. A REMS is a safety strategy to manage a known or potential serious risk associated with a medicine and to enable patients to have continued access to such medicines by managing their safe use and could include medication guides, physician communication plans, or elements to assure safe use, such as restricted distribution methods, patient registries and other risk minimization tools. If the FDA concludes a REMS is needed, the sponsor of the BLA must submit a proposed REMS. The FDA will not approve a BLA without a REMS, if required.

Before approving a BLA, the FDA will inspect the facilities at which the product is manufactured. The FDA will not approve the product unless it determines that the manufacturing processes and facilities are in compliance with cGMP requirements and adequate to assure consistent production of the product within required specifications.

Additionally, before approving a BLA, the FDA may also inspect one or more clinical sites to assure that the clinical trials were conducted in compliance with IND trial requirements and GCP requirements.

After the FDA evaluates a BLA and conducts any inspections of manufacturing facilities where the investigational product and/or its drug substance will be produced, the FDA may issue an approval letter or a Complete Response Letter ("CRL"). An approval letter authorizes commercial marketing of the drug with prescribing information for specific indications. A CRL indicates that the review cycle of the application is complete, and the application will not be approved in its present form. A CRL typically describes all of the specific deficiencies in the BLA identified by the FDA. The deficiencies identified may be minor, for example, requiring labeling changes, or major, for example, requiring additional clinical trials. Additionally, the CRL may include recommended actions that the applicant might take to place a resubmitted application in a condition for approval. If a CRL is issued, the applicant may either resubmit the BLA, addressing all of the deficiencies identified in the letter, or withdraw the application.

If a product receives regulatory approval, the approval may be limited to specific diseases and dosages or the indications for use may otherwise be limited, which could restrict the commercial value of the product. Further, the FDA may require that certain contraindications, warnings or precautions be included in the product labeling. The FDA may impose restrictions and conditions on product distribution, prescribing, or dispensing in the form of a risk management plan or otherwise limit the scope of any approval. In addition, the FDA may require post marketing clinical trials or studies designed to further assess the biological product, as well as testing and surveillance programs to monitor the safety of approved products that have been commercialized and may limit further marketing of the product based on the results of these post-marketing studies.

Pediatric Trials

Under the Pediatric Research Equity Act ("PREA"), as amended, a BLA or supplement to a BLA must contain data to assess the safety and effectiveness of the product for the claimed indications in all relevant pediatric subpopulations and to support dosing and administration for each pediatric subpopulation for which the product is safe and effective. The FDCA requires that a sponsor of a biological product or drug that includes a new active ingredient, new indication, new dosage form, new dosing regimen or new route of administration submit an initial pediatric study plan ("PSP") to the FDA not later than 60 days after the end-of-Phase 2 meeting or as may be agreed between the sponsor and FDA. The initial PSP must include an outline of the pediatric study or studies that the sponsor plans to conduct, including study objectives and design, age groups, relevant endpoints and statistical approach, or a justification for not including such detailed information and any request for a deferral of pediatric assessments or a full or partial waiver of the requirement to provide data from pediatric studies along with supporting information. Generally, development program candidates designated as orphan drugs are exempt from the above requirements. FDA and the sponsor must reach agreement on the PSP. A sponsor can submit amendments to an agreed upon initial PSP at any time if changes to the pediatric plan need to be considered based on data collected from nonclinical studies, early phase clinical trials, and/or other clinical development programs.

The FDA may, on its own initiative or at the request of the applicant, grant deferrals for submission of some or all pediatric data until after approval of the product for use in adults, or full or partial waivers from the pediatric data requirements. The FDA may send a non-compliance letter to any sponsor that fails to submit the required assessment, keep a deferral current or fails to submit a request for approval of a pediatric formulation.

Expedited Development and Review Programs

The FDA has a fast track program that is intended to expedite or facilitate the process for reviewing drug candidates that meet certain criteria. Specifically, drug candidates are eligible for fast track designation if they are intended to treat a serious or life-threatening disease or condition and demonstrate the potential to address unmet medical needs for the disease or condition. Fast track designation applies to the combination of the product and the specific indication for which it is being studied. The sponsor of a fast track drug candidate has opportunities for more frequent interactions with the applicable FDA review team during product development and, once an NDA or BLA is submitted, the application may be eligible for priority review with respect to a fast track drug candidate, the FDA may consider for review sections of the BLA on a rolling basis before the complete application is submitted, if the sponsor provides a schedule for the submission of the sections of the BLA, the FDA agrees to accept sections of the BLA and determines that the schedule is acceptable, and the sponsor pays any required user fees upon submission of the first section of the BLA.

A drug candidate intended to treat a serious or life-threatening disease or condition may also be eligible for breakthrough therapy designation to expedite its development and review. A drug candidate can receive breakthrough therapy designation if preliminary clinical evidence indicates that the drug candidate, alone or in combination with one or more other drugs or biologics, may demonstrate substantial improvement over existing therapies on one or more clinically significant endpoints, such as substantial treatment effects observed early in clinical development. The designation includes all of the fast track program features, as well as more intensive FDA interaction and guidance beginning as early as Phase 1 and an organizational commitment to expedite the development and review of the product candidate, including involvement of senior managers.

Any drug candidate, submitted to the FDA for approval, including a drug with a fast track or breakthrough designation, may also be eligible for other types of FDA programs intended to expedite development and review, such as priority review. A BLA for a drug candidate is eligible for priority review if the drug candidate is designed to treat a serious condition, and if approved would provide a significant improvement in the treatment, diagnosis or prevention of a disease compared to available therapies. The FDA will attempt to direct additional resources to the evaluation of an application for a new product designated for priority review in an effort to facilitate the review. The FDA endeavors to review applications with priority review designations within six months of the filing date as compared to ten months for review of original BLAs under its current PDUFA review goals.

Additionally, depending on the design of the applicable clinical studies, a product may be eligible for accelerated approval. In particular, products studied for their safety and effectiveness in treating serious or life-threatening diseases or conditions may receive accelerated approval upon a determination that the product has an effect on a surrogate endpoint that is reasonably likely to predict clinical benefit, or on a clinical endpoint that can be measured earlier than irreversible morbidity or mortality, that is reasonably likely to predict an effect on irreversible morbidity or mortality or other clinical benefit, taking into account the severity, rarity, or prevalence of the condition and the availability or lack of alternative treatments. As a condition of approval, the FDA generally requires that a sponsor of a drug or biological product receiving accelerated approval perform adequate and well-controlled confirmatory clinical studies and may require such confirmatory studies to be underway prior to granting any accelerated approval. Biologics receiving accelerated approval may be subject to expedited withdrawal procedures if the sponsor fails to conduct the required confirmatory trials in a timely manner or if such trials fail to verify the predicted clinical benefit. In addition, the FDA currently requires as a condition for accelerated approval pre-approval of promotional materials, which could adversely impact the timing of the commercial launch of the product.

Breakthrough therapy designation comes with all of the benefits of fast track designation, which means that the sponsor may submit sections of the BLA for review on a rolling basis if certain conditions are satisfied, including an agreement with FDA on the proposed schedule for submission of portions of the application and the payment of applicable user fees before the FDA may initiate a review. The breakthrough therapy designation is a distinct status from both accelerated approval and priority review, which can also be granted to the same product if relevant criteria are met. If a product is designated as breakthrough therapy, FDA will expedite the development and review of such product. Fast Track designation, priority review and breakthrough therapy designation do not change the standards for approval but may expedite the development or approval process.

Orphan Drug Designation

Under the Orphan Drug Act, the FDA may grant orphan designation to a drug or biologic intended to treat a rare disease or condition, defined as a disease or condition with a patient population of fewer than 200,000 in the United States, or a patient population greater than 200,000 in the United States when there is no reasonable expectation that the cost of developing and making available the drug or biologic in the United States will be recovered from sales in the United States for that drug or biologic. Orphan drug designation must be requested before submitting a BLA. After the FDA grants orphan drug designation, the generic identity of the therapeutic agent and its potential orphan use are disclosed publicly by the FDA. The orphan drug designation does not convey any advantage in, or shorten the duration of, the regulatory review or approval process.

If a product that has orphan drug designation subsequently receives the first FDA approval for the disease for which it has such designation, the product is entitled to orphan product exclusivity, which means that the FDA may not approve any other applications, including a full BLA, to market the "same biologic," as defined by the FDA, for the same indication for seven years, except in limited circumstances, such as a showing of clinical superiority to the product with orphan drug exclusivity. Orphan drug exclusivity does not prevent FDA from approving a different drug or biologic for the same disease or condition, or the same drug or biologic for a different disease or condition. Among the other benefits of orphan drug designation are tax credits for certain research and a waiver of the BLA application user fee.

A designated orphan drug may not receive orphan drug exclusivity if it is approved for a use that is broader than the indication for which it received orphan designation. In addition, exclusive marketing rights in the United States may be lost if the FDA later determines that the request for designation was materially defective or if the manufacturer is unable to assure sufficient quantities of the product to meet the needs of patients with the rare disease or condition.

U.S. Patent Term Extension and Marketing Exclusivity

In the United States, a patent claiming a new biological product, its method of use or its method of manufacture may be eligible for a limited patent term extension under the Hatch-Waxman Act, which permits a patent extension of up to five years for patent term lost during product development and FDA regulatory review. The extension period is typically one-half the time between the effective date of the IND and the submission date of the BLA, plus the time between the submission date of the BLA and the ultimate approval date, except that the review period is reduced by any time during which the applicant failed to exercise due diligence. Patent term extension cannot be used to extend the remaining term of a patent past a total of 14 years from the product's approval date in the United States. Only one patent applicable to an approved product is eligible for the extension, and the application for the extension must be submitted prior to the expiration of the patent for which extension is sought. A patent that covers multiple products for which approval is sought can only be extended in connection with one of the approvals. The United States Patent and Trademark Office ("USPTO") reviews and approves the application for any patent term extension in consultation with the FDA.

Biosimilars and Exclusivity

The Biologics Price Competition and Innovation Act ("BPCIA") amended the PHSA to authorize the FDA to approve similar versions of innovative biologics, commonly known as biosimilars, as well as interchangeable biosimilars. A biosimilar is a biological product that is highly similar to an already FDA-licensed biological product, called the "reference product." In order for the FDA to approve a biosimilar product, it must find that there are no clinically meaningful differences between the reference product and proposed biosimilar product in terms of safety, purity and potency. For the FDA to approve a biosimilar product as interchangeable with a reference product, the FDA must find that the biosimilar product can be expected to produce the same clinical results as the reference product, and (for products administered multiple times) that the biosimilar product and the reference product may be switched without increasing safety risks or risks of diminished efficacy relative to exclusive use of the reference biologic. A product shown to be biosimilar or interchangeable with an FDA-approved reference biological product may rely in part on the FDA's previous determination of safety and effectiveness for the reference product for approval, which can potentially reduce the cost and time required to obtain approval to market the product.

Under the BPCIA, an application for a biosimilar product may not be submitted to the FDA until four years following the date of approval of the reference product. The FDA may not approve a biosimilar product until 12 years from the date on which the reference product was approved. Even if a product is considered to be a reference product eligible for exclusivity, another company could market a competing version of that product if the FDA approves a full BLA for such product containing the sponsor's own preclinical data and data from adequate and well-controlled clinical trials to demonstrate the safety, purity and potency of their product. The BPCIA also created certain exclusivity periods for biosimilars approved as interchangeable products, which may be substituted by pharmacies for the reference product, subject to state pharmacy law.

Pediatric Exclusivity

Pediatric exclusivity is another type of non-patent exclusivity in the U.S. and, if granted for a biologic, provides for the attachment of an additional six months of marketing protection to the term of any existing patent term or non-patent regulatory exclusivity for all formulations, dosage forms and indications of the biologic, including orphan exclusivity and reference product exclusivity. This six-month exclusivity may be granted if a BLA sponsor submits pediatric data that fairly respond to a "written request" from the FDA for such data, provided that at the time pediatric exclusivity is granted there is not less than nine months of term remaining. The data do not need to show the product to be effective in the pediatric population studied; rather, if the clinical trial is deemed to fairly respond to the FDA's request, the additional protection is granted. If reports of FDA-requested pediatric trials are submitted to and accepted by the FDA within the statutory time limits, any existing period of non-patent regulatory exclusivity or patent protection covering the product is extended by six months. As applied to patent terms, pediatric exclusivity is not a patent term extension, but it effectively extends the regulatory period during which the FDA cannot accept or approve another application relying on the BLA sponsor's data.

Post-Approval Regulation

If regulatory approval for a product or new indication for an existing product is obtained, the sponsor will be required to comply with all generally applicable post-approval regulatory requirements as well as any specific post-approval requirements that the FDA may impose as part of the approval process. The sponsor will be required to report certain adverse reactions and production problems to the FDA, provide updated safety and efficacy information and comply with advertising and promotional labeling requirements and record-keeping requirements. Manufacturers and certain of their subcontractors must register their establishments with the FDA and certain state agencies and are subject to periodic unannounced inspections by the FDA and certain state agencies for compliance with ongoing regulatory requirements, including cGMP regulations. Accordingly, the sponsor and its third-party manufacturers must continue to expend time, money and effort to maintain compliance with cGMP regulations and other regulatory requirements.

Once an approval is granted, the FDA may withdraw the approval if compliance with regulatory requirements and standards is not maintained or if problems occur after the product reaches the market. Later discovery of previously unknown problems with a product, including adverse events of unanticipated severity or frequency, or with manufacturing processes, or failure to comply with regulatory requirements, may result in revisions to the approved labeling to add new safety information, imposition of post-market studies or clinical trials to assess new safety risks, or imposition of distribution or other restrictions under a REMS program. Other potential consequences include, among other things:

- restrictions on the marketing or manufacturing of the product;
- fines, warning letters or holds on clinical trials;
- refusal of the FDA to approve pending applications or supplements to approved applications, or suspension or revocation of product licenses;
- product recall, seizure or detention, or refusal to permit the import or export of products;
- mandated modification of promotional materials and labeling and the issuance of corrective information;
- issuance of safety alerts, Dear Healthcare Provider letters, press releases and other communications containing warnings or other safety information about the product;
- withdrawal of the product from the market; or
- injunctions or the imposition of civil or criminal penalties.

The FDA strictly regulates the marketing, labeling, advertising and promotion of prescription biological products placed on the market. This regulation includes, among other things, standards and regulations for direct-to-consumer advertising, communications regarding unapproved uses, industry-sponsored scientific and educational activities and promotional activities involving the internet and social media. Promotional claims about a product's safety or effectiveness are prohibited before it is approved. After approval, a product generally may be promoted for uses or patient populations consistent with the product's prescribing information. In the United States, healthcare professionals are generally permitted to prescribe products for uses that are not approved by the FDA (sometimes called "off-label use") because the FDA does not regulate the practice of medicine. However, FDA regulations restrict manufacturers' communications about off-label uses. Promotional materials for approved biological products generally must be submitted to the FDA in conjunction with their first use.

Other U.S. Healthcare Laws and Compliance Requirements

In the United States, our activities are potentially subject to regulation by various federal, state and local authorities in addition to the FDA, including but not limited to, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services ("CMS"), other divisions of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS"), for example, the Office of Inspector General, the U.S. Department of Justice ("DOJ") and individual U.S. Attorney offices within the DOJ, and state and local governments. For example, our business practices, including our research and any future sales, marketing and scientific/educational grant programs may be required to comply with federal anti-kickback and fraud and abuse laws, the false claims laws, the data privacy and security provisions of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act ("HIPAA"), federal transparency requirements and similar state laws, each as amended.

The federal Anti-Kickback Statute prohibits, among other things, any person or entity, from knowingly and willfully offering, paying, soliciting or receiving any remuneration, including any kickback, bribe or rebate, directly or indirectly, overtly or covertly, in cash or in kind, to induce or in return for, either the referral of an individual for, or the purchasing, leasing, ordering or arranging for the purchase, lease or order of any item or service reimbursable, in whole or in part, under Medicare, Medicaid or other federal healthcare programs. The term remuneration has been interpreted broadly to include anything of value. The federal Anti-Kickback Statute has been interpreted to apply to arrangements between pharmaceutical manufacturers on one hand and prescribers, purchasers and formulary managers on the other. Additionally, a person or entity does not need to have actual knowledge of the statute or specific intent to violate it in order to have committed a violation. Rather, if "one purpose" of the remuneration is to induce referrals, the federal Anti-Kickback Statute is violated. There are a number of statutory exceptions and regulatory safe harbors protecting some common activities from prosecution. The exceptions and safe harbors are drawn narrowly and require strict compliance in order to offer protection. Practices that involve remuneration that may be alleged to be intended to induce prescribing, purchasing or recommending may be subject to scrutiny if they do not qualify for an exception or safe harbor. Failure to meet all of the requirements of a particular applicable statutory exception or regulatory safe harbor does not make the conduct per se illegal under the federal Anti-Kickback Statute. Instead, the legality of the arrangement will be evaluated on a case-by-case basis based on a cumulative review of all of its facts and circumstances. Our practices may not in all cases meet all of the criteria for protection under a statutory exception or regulatory safe harbor.

The federal civil monetary penalties statute imposes penalties against any person or entity who, among other things, is determined to have knowingly presented or caused to be presented a false or fraudulent claim to, among others, a federal healthcare program that the person knows or should know is for an item or service that was not provided as claimed or is false or fraudulent.

The federal civil False Claims Act ("FCA") prohibits, among other things, any person or entity from knowingly presenting, or causing to be presented, a false claim for payment to, or approval by, the federal government or knowingly making, using, or causing to be made or used a false record or statement material to a false or fraudulent claim to the federal government in order to avoid, decrease or conceal an obligation to pay money to the federal government. As a result of a modification made by the Fraud Enforcement and Recovery Act of 2009, a claim includes "any request or demand" for money or property presented to the federal government. Pharmaceutical and other healthcare companies are being investigated or, in the past, have been prosecuted under these laws for, among other things, allegedly providing free product to customers with the expectation that the customers would bill federal programs for the product. In addition, pharmaceutical and other healthcare companies also have been prosecuted for causing false claims to be submitted because of the companies' marketing of the product for unapproved, and thus non-reimbursable uses. Moreover, a claim that includes items or services resulting from a violation of the federal Anti-Kickback Statute constitutes a false or fraudulent claim for purposes of the FCA.

HIPAA created additional federal criminal statutes that prohibit knowingly and willfully executing, or attempting to execute, a scheme or artifice to defraud or to obtain, by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises, any money or property owned by, or under the control or custody of, any healthcare benefit program, including private third-party payors and knowingly and willfully falsifying, concealing or covering up by trick, scheme or device, a material fact or making any materially false, fictitious or fraudulent statement in connection with the delivery of or payment for healthcare benefits, items or services. Similar to the federal Anti-Kickback Statute, a person or entity does not need to have actual knowledge of the statute or specific intent to violate it in order to have committed a violation.

We may be subject to data privacy and security regulations by both the federal government and the states in which we conduct our business. For example, HIPAA, as amended by the Health Information Technology for Economic and Clinical Health Act of 2009 ("HITECH"), and their implementing regulations, imposes requirements on certain types of individuals and entities, including covered entities, for example, certain healthcare providers, health plans and healthcare clearinghouses, and their respective business associates that create, receive, maintain or transmit individually identifiable health information for or on behalf of a covered entity and their subcontractors that use, disclose, access, or otherwise process individually identifiable protected health information, relating to the privacy, security and transmission of individually identifiable health information. In addition, state laws govern the privacy and security of health information in specified circumstances, many of which differ from each other in significant ways and may not have the same effect, thus complicating compliance efforts.

The federal Physician Payments Sunshine Act and its implementing regulations, require that certain manufacturers of drugs, devices, biological and medical supplies for which payment is available under Medicare, Medicaid or the Children's Health Insurance Program, with certain exceptions, annually report information to CMS related to certain payments or other transfers of value made or distributed to physicians (defined to include doctors, dentists, optometrists, podiatrists and chiropractors), certain non-physician practitioners (physician assistants, nurse practitioners, clinical nurse specialists, certified registered nurse anesthetists, anesthesiologist assistants, and certified nurse midwives) and teaching hospitals, or to entities or individuals at the request of, or designated on behalf of, the physicians and teaching hospitals and to report annually certain ownership and investment interests held by physicians and their immediate family members.

Also, many states have similar fraud and abuse statutes or regulations similar to the aforementioned federal laws that apply to items and services reimbursed under Medicaid and other state programs, or, in several states, apply regardless of the payor. In order to manufacture or distribute products commercially, we must comply with state laws that require the registration of manufacturers and wholesale distributors of drug and biological products in a state, including, in certain states, manufacturers and distributors who ship products into the state even if such manufacturers or distributors have no place of business within the state. Some states also impose requirements on manufacturers and distributors to establish the pedigree of product in the chain of distribution, including some states that require manufacturers and others to adopt new technology capable of tracking and tracing product as it moves through the distribution chain. Several states and local jurisdictions have enacted legislation requiring pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies to establish marketing compliance programs and comply with the pharmaceutical industry's voluntary compliance guidelines and the relevant compliance guidance promulgated by the federal government, file periodic reports with the state, make periodic public disclosures on sales, marketing, pricing, clinical trials and other activities and/or register their sales representatives, as well as to prohibit pharmacies and other healthcare entities from providing certain physician prescribing data to pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies for use in sales and marketing, and to prohibit certain other sales and marketing practices. All of our activities are potentially subject to federal and state consumer protection and unfair competition laws.

If our operations are found to be in violation of any of the federal and state healthcare laws described above or any other governmental regulations that apply to us, we may be subject to significant penalties, including without limitation, civil, criminal and/or administrative penalties, damages, fines, disgorgement, imprisonment, exclusion from participation in government programs, such as Medicare and Medicaid, injunctions, contractual damages, reputational harm, administrative burdens, diminished profits and future earnings, additional reporting requirements and/or oversight if we become subject to a corporate integrity agreement or similar agreement to resolve allegations of non-compliance with these laws, and the curtailment or restructuring of our operations, any of which could adversely affect our ability to operate our business and our results of operations.

Data Privacy and Security Laws

In the ordinary course of business, we collect, receive, store, process, generate, use, transfer, disclose, make accessible, protect, secure, dispose of, transmit, and share (collectively, "process") personal data (including health- related information) and other sensitive information, including proprietary and confidential business information and information we collect about trial participants in connection with clinical trials (collectively, "sensitive information"). Accordingly, we are subject to numerous state, federal and foreign laws and regulations; contractual obligations; industry standards; policies and other obligations related to data privacy and security. For example, in the United States, numerous federal and state laws and regulations, including data breach notification laws, health information privacy and security laws and consumer protection laws govern the processing of sensitive information and these laws are increasingly stringent and reflect the evolving regulatory frameworks related to personal data processing that increase our compliance obligations and exposure for any actual or perceived noncompliance.

In addition, certain foreign laws also govern the privacy, security and processing of sensitive information and apply to our operations. For example, China has enacted the Personal Information Protection Law (the "PIPL"), Data Security Law (the "DSL"), the Cybersecurity Law (the "CSL") and other implementing regulations to govern data privacy and security. The PIPL took effect on November 1, 2021 and creates a comprehensive data protection framework that applies to the processing of personal information both in China and outside of China where such processing is for purposes of providing products and services to, or analyzing and evaluating the behavior of, individuals in China.

Under the PIPL, entities conducting cross-border transfers of personal information are required to meet certain conditions, including satisfaction of the security assessments conducted by competent government authority, signing and filing of standard contracts or obtaining certifications from qualified institutions, and fulfillment of notice and consent requirements. The DSL came into effect on September 1, 2021 and mandates entities processing "important data" to comply with specific data security obligations. The CSL, enacted in November 2016 and revised on October 28, 2025, with the amendment taking effect on January 1, 2026, requires network operators to follow the principles of legality, legitimacy, and necessity when collecting and using personal information, to publicly disclose rules governing such collection and use, to clearly specify the purpose, method, and the scope of the collection and use, and to obtain the consent of the individuals whose personal information is collected and used. Further, certain industry-specific Chinese laws and regulations apply to the collection and processing of trial participants' data and human genetic resources, such as China's Biosecurity Law and Regulations on the Administration of Human Genetic Resources.

Data privacy and security laws, regulations and other obligations are constantly evolving, may conflict with each other, increase our compliance efforts and can result in investigations, proceedings, actions or other adverse consequences including those that involve significant civil and/or criminal penalties and restrictions on data processing.

Coverage, Pricing and Reimbursement

Significant uncertainty exists as to the coverage and reimbursement status of any drug candidates for which we obtain regulatory approval. In the United States and certain markets in other countries, sales of any products for which we receive regulatory approval for commercial sale will depend, in part, on the extent to which third-party payors provide coverage, and establish adequate reimbursement levels for such products. No uniform policy for coverage and reimbursement exists in the United States, and coverage and reimbursement can differ significantly from payor to payor. As a result, the coverage determination process is often time-consuming and costly.

In the United States, third-party payors include federal and state healthcare programs, private managed care providers, health insurers and other organizations. The process for determining whether a third-party payor will provide coverage for a product may be separate from the process for setting the price of a product or from establishing the reimbursement rate that such a payor will pay for the product. Third-party payors may limit coverage to specific products on an approved list, also known as a formulary, which might not include all of the FDA-approved products for a particular indication. Third-party payors are increasingly challenging the price, examining the medical necessity and reviewing the cost-effectiveness of medical products, therapies and services, in addition to questioning their safety and efficacy. We may need to conduct expensive pharmacoeconomic studies in order to demonstrate the medical necessity and cost-effectiveness of our products, in addition to the costs required to obtain the FDA approvals. Our drug candidates may not be considered medically necessary or cost-effective. A payor's decision to provide coverage for a product does not imply that an adequate reimbursement rate will be approved. Further, one payor's determination to provide coverage for a product does not assure that other payors will also provide coverage for the product. Adequate third-party reimbursement may not be available to enable us to maintain price levels sufficient to realize an appropriate return on our investment in product development. Additionally, any companion diagnostic test that we develop will be required to obtain coverage and reimbursement separate and apart from the coverage and reimbursement we seek for our drug candidates, if approved.

Further, the United States government and foreign governments have continued implementing cost-containment measures. For example, HHS imposes rebates on many Medicare Part B and Medicare Part D products to penalize price increases that outpace inflation on an annual basis. HHS has also been empowered to negotiate the price of certain single-source biologics that have been on the market for at least eleven (11) years covered under Medicare as part of the Medicare Drug Price Negotiation Program. Each year up to twenty (20) products will be selected by HHS for the Medicare Drug Price Negotiation Program. Products subject to the Medicare Drug Price Negotiation Program are expected to experience a significant reduction in reimbursement from the Medicare program on a per unit basis.

The marketability of any drug candidates for which we receive regulatory approval for commercial sale may suffer if the government and third-party payors fail to provide adequate coverage and reimbursement. In addition, emphasis on managed care in the United States has increased and we expect will continue to increase the pressure on healthcare pricing. Coverage policies and third-party reimbursement rates may change at any time. Even if favorable coverage and reimbursement status is attained for one or more products for which we receive regulatory approval, less favorable coverage policies and reimbursement rates may be implemented in the future.

Healthcare Reform

In the United States and some foreign jurisdictions, there have been, and continue to be, several legislative and regulatory changes and proposed changes regarding the healthcare system that could prevent or delay marketing approval of drug candidates, restrict or regulate post-approval activities, and affect the ability to profitably sell drug candidates for which marketing approval is obtained. Among policy makers and payors in the United States and elsewhere, there is significant interest in promoting changes in healthcare systems with the stated goals of containing healthcare costs, improving quality and/or expanding access. In the United States, the pharmaceutical industry has been a particular focus of these efforts and has been significantly affected by major legislative initiatives.

For example, the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act as amended by the Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act (the "Affordable Care Act") has substantially changed healthcare financing and delivery by both governmental and private insurers.

Since its enactment, there have been executive, judicial and political challenges to certain aspects of the Affordable Care Act. For example, on July 4, 2025, the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (the "OBBBBA") was signed into law, which narrowed access to Affordable Care Act marketplace exchange enrollment and declined to extend the Affordable Care Act enhanced advanced premium tax credits that expired at the end of 2025, which, among other provisions in the law, are anticipated to reduce the number of Americans with health insurance. The OBBBBA also is expected to reduce Medicaid spending and enrollment by implementing work requirements for some beneficiaries, capping state-directed payments, reducing federal funding, and limiting provider taxes used to fund the program. Congress is considering proposed legislation intended to further reduce healthcare costs with alternatives to replace the expired Affordable Care Act subsidies.

Other legislative changes have been proposed and adopted since the Affordable Care Act was enacted, including aggregate reductions to Medicare payments to providers, which went into effect beginning on April 1, 2013, and, due to subsequent legislative amendments to the statute will stay in effect through 2032, unless additional Congressional action is taken.

The current administration is pursuing policies to reduce regulations and expenditures across government agencies including at HHS, the FDA, CMS and related agencies. These actions, presently directed by executive orders or memoranda from the Office of Management and Budget, may propose policy changes that create additional uncertainty for our business. For example, the current administration has announced agreements with several pharmaceutical companies that require the drug manufacturers to offer, through a direct-to-consumer platform (TrumpRx) U.S. patients and Medicaid programs prescription drug Most-Favored Nation pricing equal to or lower than those paid in other developed nations, with additional mandates for direct-to-patient discounts and repatriation of foreign revenues. Other recent actions, for example, include (1) directing agencies to reduce agency workforce and cut programs; (2) directing HHS and other agencies to lower prescription drug costs through a variety of initiatives; (3) imposing tariffs on imported pharmaceutical products; and (4) as part of the Make America Healthy Again Commission's Strategy Report released in September 2025, working across government agencies to increase enforcement on direct-to-consumer pharmaceutical advertising. Additionally, the current administration recently called on Congress to enact "The Great Healthcare Plan," to codify and expand Most-Favored Nation pricing, lower government subsidies to private insurance companies, increase healthcare price transparency, expand pharmaceutical drugs available for over-the-counter purchase, and enact restrictions on pharmacy benefit manager payment methodologies, among other things. These actions and policies may significantly reduce U.S. drug prices, potentially impacting manufacturers' global pricing strategies and profitability, while increasing their operational costs and compliance risks. In June 2024, the U.S. Supreme Court's Loper Bright decision greatly reduced judicial deference to regulatory agencies, which could increase successful legal challenges to federal regulations affecting our operations. Congress may introduce and ultimately pass health care related legislation that could impact the drug approval process and make changes to the Medicare Drug Price Negotiation Program.

Individual states in the United States have also become increasingly active in passing legislation and implementing regulations designed to control pharmaceutical and biological product pricing, including price or patient reimbursement constraints, discounts, restrictions on certain product access and marketing cost disclosure and transparency measures, and, in some cases, designed to encourage importation from other countries and bulk purchasing.

Additional state and federal healthcare reform measures likely will be adopted in the future.

The Foreign Corrupt Practices Act

The Foreign Corrupt Practices Act ("FCPA"), prohibits any U.S. individual, business, or its representatives and agents, from paying, offering, or authorizing payment or offering of anything of value, directly or indirectly, to any foreign official, political party or candidate for the purpose of influencing any act or decision of a foreign entity in order to assist the individual or business in obtaining or retaining business. The FCPA also obligates companies whose securities are listed in the United States to comply with accounting provisions requiring the company to maintain books and records that accurately and fairly reflect all transactions of the corporation, including international subsidiaries, and to devise and maintain an adequate system of internal accounting controls for international operations.

Additional Regulation

In addition to the foregoing, state and federal laws regarding environmental protection and hazardous substances, including the Occupational Safety and Health Act, the Resource Conservancy and Recovery Act and the Toxic Substances Control Act, affect our business. These and other laws govern our use, handling and disposal of various biological, chemical and radioactive substances used in, and wastes generated by, our operations. If our operations result in contamination of the environment or expose individuals to hazardous substances, we could be liable for damages and governmental fines. We believe that we are in material compliance with applicable environmental laws and that continued compliance therewith will not have a material adverse effect on our business. We cannot predict, however, how changes in these laws may affect our future operations.

Europe / Rest of World Government Regulation

In addition to regulations in the United States, we will be subject to a variety of regulations in other jurisdictions. Whether or not we obtain FDA approval of a product, we must obtain the requisite approvals from regulatory authorities in foreign countries prior to the commencement of clinical trials or marketing of the product in those countries. Certain countries outside of the United States have a similar process that requires the submission of a clinical trial application much like the IND prior to the commencement of human clinical trials.

For other countries outside of the EU, such as countries in Eastern Europe, Latin America or Asia, the requirements governing the conduct of clinical trials, product licensing, pricing and reimbursement vary from country to country. In all cases, the clinical trials must be conducted in accordance with GCP and the applicable regulatory requirements and the ethical principles that have their origin in the Declaration of Helsinki.

If we or our potential collaborators fail to comply with applicable foreign regulatory requirements, we may be subject to, among other things, fines, suspension, variation or withdrawal of regulatory approvals, product recalls, seizure of products, operating restrictions and criminal prosecution.

Clinical Trials in the EU

Similarly to the United States, the various phases of non-clinical and clinical research in the EU are subject to significant regulatory controls. In the EU, clinical trials are governed by the Clinical Trials Regulation (EU) No 536/2014 ("CTR"), which entered into application on January 31, 2022 repealing and replacing the CTD. The CTR foresaw a three-year transition period that ended on January 31, 2025. Since this date, all new or ongoing trials are subject to the provisions of the CTR.

The CTR is intended to harmonize and streamline clinical trial authorizations, simplify adverse-event reporting procedures, improve the supervision of clinical trials and increase transparency. Specifically, the Regulation, which is directly applicable in all EU Member States, introduces a streamlined application procedure through a single-entry point, the "EU portal", the Clinical Trials Information System ("CTIS"); a single set of documents to be prepared and submitted for the application; as well as simplified reporting procedures for clinical trial sponsors. A harmonized procedure for the assessment of applications for clinical trials has been introduced and is divided into two parts.

Part I assessment is led by the competent authorities of a reference EU Member State selected by the trial sponsor and relates to clinical trial aspects that are considered to be scientifically harmonized across EU Member States. This assessment is then submitted to the competent authorities of all concerned EU Member States in which the trial is to be conducted for their review. Part II is assessed separately by the competent authorities and Ethics Committees in each concerned EU Member State. Individual EU Member States retain the power to authorize the conduct of clinical trials on their territory.

In all cases, clinical trials must be conducted in accordance with GCP and the applicable regulatory requirements and the ethical principles that have their origin in the Declaration of Helsinki. Medicines used in clinical trials, must be manufactured in accordance with the guidelines on cGMP and in a GMP licensed facility, which can be subject to GMP inspections.

EU Review and Approval Process of Medicinal Products

In the EU, medicinal products can only be commercialized after a related marketing authorization ("MA") has been granted. To obtain an MA for a product in the EU, an applicant must submit a Marketing Authorization Application ("MAA") either under a centralized procedure administered by the European Medicines Agency ("EMA"), or one of the procedures administered by the competent authorities of EU Member States (decentralized procedure, national procedure or mutual recognition procedure). An MA may be granted only to an applicant established in the EU.

The centralized procedure provides for the grant of a single MA by the European Commission that is valid throughout the EEA (which is comprised of the 27 EU Member States plus Norway, Iceland and Liechtenstein). Pursuant to Regulation (EC) No 726/2004, the centralized procedure is compulsory for specific products, including for (i) medicinal products derived from biotechnological processes, (ii) products designated as orphan medicinal products, (iii) advanced therapy medicinal products ("ATMPs") and (iv) products with a new active substance indicated for the treatment of HIV/AIDS, cancer, neurodegenerative diseases, diabetes, auto-immune and other immune dysfunctions and viral diseases. For products with a new active substance indicated for the treatment of other diseases and products that are highly innovative or for which a centralized process is in the interest of patients, authorization through the centralized procedure is optional on related approval.

Under the centralized procedure, the EMA's Committee for Medicinal Products for Human Use ("CHMP") conducts the initial assessment of a product. The CHMP is also responsible for several post-authorization and maintenance activities, such as the assessment of modifications or extensions to an existing MA. The maximum timeframe for the evaluation of an MAA under the centralized procedure is 210 days, excluding clock stops when additional information or written or oral explanation is to be provided by the applicant in response to questions of the CHMP. Accelerated assessment may be granted by the CHMP in exceptional cases, when a medicinal product targeting an unmet medical need is expected to be of major interest from the point of view of public health and, in particular, from the viewpoint of therapeutic innovation. If the CHMP accepts a request for accelerated assessment, the time limit of 210 days will be reduced to 150 days (excluding clock stops). The CHMP can, however, revert to the standard time limit for the centralized procedure if it considers that it is no longer appropriate to conduct an accelerated assessment.

Unlike the centralized authorization procedure, the decentralized MA procedure requires a separate application to, and leads to separate approval by, the competent authorities of each EU Member State in which the product is to be marketed. This application is identical to the application that would be submitted to the EMA for authorization through the centralized procedure. The reference EU Member State prepares a draft assessment and drafts of the related materials within 120 days after receipt of a valid application. The resulting assessment report is submitted to the concerned EU Member States who, within 90 days of receipt, must decide whether to approve the assessment report and related materials. If a concerned EU Member State cannot approve the assessment report and related materials due to concerns relating to a potential serious risk to public health, disputed elements may be referred to the Heads of Medicines Agencies' Coordination Group for Mutual Recognition and Decentralised Procedures— Human ("CMDh") for review. If the CMDh fails to reach a consensus, the matter escalates to the European Commission whose decision is binding on all EU Member States.

The mutual recognition procedure allows companies that have a medicinal product already authorized in one EU Member State to apply for this authorization to be recognized by the competent authorities in other EU Member States. Like the decentralized procedure, the mutual recognition procedure is based on the acceptance by the competent authorities of the EU Member States of the MA of a medicinal product by the competent authorities of other EU Member States. The holder of a national MA may submit an application to the competent authority of an EU Member State requesting that this authority recognize the MA delivered by the competent authority of another EU Member State.

An MA has, in principle, an initial validity of five years. The MA may be renewed after five years on the basis of a re-evaluation of the risk-benefit balance by the EMA or by the competent authority of the EU Member State in which the original MA was granted. To support the application, the MA holder must provide the EMA or the competent authority with a consolidated version of the Common Technical Document providing up-to-date data concerning the quality, safety and efficacy of the product, including all variations introduced since the MA was granted, at least nine months before the MA ceases to be valid. The European Commission or the competent authorities of the EU Member States may decide on justified grounds relating to pharmacovigilance, to proceed with one further five-year renewal period for the MA. Once subsequently definitively renewed, the MA shall be valid for an unlimited period.

Any authorization which is not followed by the actual placing of the medicinal product on the EU market (for a centralized MA) or on the market of the authorizing EU Member State within three years after authorization ceases to be valid (the so-called sunset clause).

Accelerated and Alternative Marketing Authorization Mechanisms

Innovative products that target an unmet medical need and are expected to be of major public health interest may be eligible for a number of expedited development and review programs, such as the Priority Medicines ("PRIME") scheme, which provides incentives similar to the breakthrough therapy designation in the U.S. PRIME is a voluntary scheme aimed at enhancing the EMA's support for the development of medicinal products that target unmet medical needs. Eligible products must target conditions for which there is an unmet medical need (there is no satisfactory method of diagnosis, prevention or treatment in the EU or, if there is, the new medicinal product will bring a major therapeutic advantage) and they must demonstrate the potential to address the unmet medical need by introducing new methods of therapy or improving existing ones. Benefits accrue to sponsors of drug candidates with PRIME designation, including but not limited to, early and proactive regulatory dialogue with the EMA, frequent discussions on clinical trial designs and other development program elements, and potentially accelerated MAA assessment once a dossier has been submitted. A dedicated contact and rapporteur from the EMA's Committee for Human Medicinal Products, or CHMP, are appointed early in the PRIME scheme facilitating increased understanding of the product at EMA's Committee level. A kick-off meeting initiates these relationships and includes a team of multidisciplinary experts at the EMA to provide guidance on the overall development and regulatory strategies. Where, during the course of development, a medicine no longer meets the eligibility criteria, support under the PRIME scheme may be withdrawn.

In the EU, a "conditional" MA may be granted in cases where all the required safety and efficacy data are not yet available. The European Commission may grant a conditional MA for a medicinal product if it is demonstrated that all of the following criteria are met: (i) the benefit-risk balance of the medicinal product is positive; (ii) it is likely that the applicant will be able to provide comprehensive data post-authorization; (iii) the medicinal product fulfils an unmet medical need; and (iv) the benefit of the immediate availability to patients of the medicinal product is greater than the risk inherent in the fact that additional data are still required. The conditional MA is subject to conditions to be fulfilled for generating the missing data or ensuring increased safety measures. It is valid for one year and must be renewed annually until all related conditions have been fulfilled. Once any pending studies are provided, the conditional MA can be converted into a traditional MA. However, if the conditions are not fulfilled within the timeframe set by the EMA and approved by the European Commission, the MA will cease to be renewed.

An MA may also be granted "under exceptional circumstances" where the applicant can show that it is unable to provide comprehensive data on efficacy and safety under normal conditions of use even after the product has been authorized and subject to specific procedures being introduced. These circumstances may arise in particular when the intended indications are very rare and, in the state of scientific knowledge at that time, it is not possible to provide comprehensive information, or when generating data may be contrary to generally accepted ethical principles. Like a conditional MA, an MA granted in exceptional circumstances is reserved to medicinal products intended to be authorized for treatment of rare diseases or unmet medical needs for which the applicant does not hold a complete data set that is required for the grant of a standard MA. However, unlike the conditional MA, an applicant for authorization in exceptional circumstances is not subsequently required to provide the missing data.

Although the MA “under exceptional circumstances” is granted definitively, the risk-benefit balance of the medicinal product is reviewed annually, and the MA will be withdrawn if the risk-benefit ratio is no longer favorable.

Pediatric Development in the EU

In the EU, Regulation (EC) No. 1901/2006 provides that all MAAs for new medicinal products have to include the results of trials conducted in the pediatric population, in compliance with a pediatric investigation plan (“PIP”), agreed with the EMA’s Pediatric Committee (“PDCO”). The PIP sets out the timing and measures proposed to generate data to support a pediatric indication of the medicinal product for which MA is being sought. The PDCO can grant a deferral of the obligation to implement some or all of the measures provided in the PIP until there are sufficient data to demonstrate the efficacy and safety of the product in adults. Further, the obligation to provide pediatric clinical trial data can be waived by the PDCO when these data are not needed or appropriate because the product is likely to be ineffective or unsafe in children, the disease or condition for which the product is intended occurs only in adult populations, or when the product does not represent a significant therapeutic benefit over existing treatments for pediatric patients. Once the MA is obtained in all EU Member States and study results are included in the product information, even when negative, the product is eligible for a six-month extension to the Supplementary Protection Certificate (“SPC”), if any is in effect at the time of authorization or, in the case of orphan medicinal products, a two-year extension of orphan market exclusivity.

Manufacturing Regulation in the EU

In addition to an MA, various other requirements apply to the manufacturing and placing on the EU market of medicinal products. The manufacturing of medicinal products in the EU requires a manufacturing authorization and import of medicinal products into the EU requires a manufacturing authorization allowing for import. The manufacturing authorization holder must comply with various requirements set out in the applicable EU laws, regulations and guidance, including EU cGMP standards. Similarly, the distribution of medicinal products within the EU is subject to compliance with the applicable EU laws, regulations and guidelines, including the requirement to hold appropriate authorizations for distribution granted by the competent authorities of EU Member States.

MA holders and/or manufacturing and import authorization, or MA holders and/or distribution authorization holders may be subject to civil, criminal or administrative sanctions, including suspension of manufacturing authorization, in case of non-compliance with the EU or EU Member States’ requirements applicable to the manufacturing of medicinal products.

Data and Market Exclusivity in the EU

The EU provides opportunities for data and market exclusivity related to MAs. Upon receiving an MA, innovative medicinal products are generally entitled to receive eight years of data exclusivity and ten years of market exclusivity. Data exclusivity, if granted, prevents regulatory authorities in the EU from referencing the innovator’s data to assess a generic application or biosimilar application for eight years from the date of authorization of the innovative product, after which a generic or biosimilar MAA can be submitted, and the innovator’s data may be referenced. The market exclusivity period prevents a successful generic or biosimilar applicant from commercializing its product in the EU until ten years have elapsed from the initial MA of the reference product in the EU. The overall ten-year period may, occasionally, be extended for a further year to a maximum of 11 years if, during the first eight years of those ten years, the MA holder obtains an authorization for one or more new therapeutic indications which, during the scientific evaluation prior to their authorization, are held to bring a significant clinical benefit in comparison with existing therapies. However, there is no guarantee that a product will be considered by the EU’s regulatory authorities to be a new chemical/biological entity and products may not qualify for data exclusivity.

In the EU, there is a special regime for biosimilars, or biological medicinal products that are similar to a reference medicinal product but that do not meet the definition of a generic medicinal product. For such products, the results of appropriate preclinical or clinical trials must be provided in support of an application for MA. Guidelines from the EMA detail the type of quantity of supplementary data to be provided for different types of biological product.

Orphan Designation in the EU

In the EU, Regulation (EC) No. 141/2000, as implemented by Regulation (EC) No. 847/2000 provides that a medicinal product can be designated as an orphan medicinal product by the European Commission if its sponsor can establish that: (i) the product is intended for the diagnosis, prevention or treatment of life-threatening or chronically debilitating conditions; (ii) either (a) such conditions affect not more than five in 10,000 persons in the EU when the application is made, or (b) the product without the benefits derived from orphan status, would not generate sufficient return in the EU to justify the necessary investment in developing the medicinal product; and (iii) there exists no satisfactory authorized method of diagnosis, prevention, or treatment of the condition that has been authorized in the EU, or even if such method exists, the product will be of significant benefit to those affected by that condition.

Regulation (EC) No. 847/2000 sets out further provisions for implementation of the criteria for designation of a medicinal product as an orphan medicinal product. An application for the designation of a medicinal product as an orphan medicinal product must be submitted at any stage of development of the medicinal product but before filing of an MAA. An MA for an orphan medicinal product may only include indications designated as orphan. For non-orphan indications treated with the same active pharmaceutical ingredient, a separate MA has to be sought.

Orphan medicinal product designation entitles an applicant to incentives such fee reductions or fee waivers, protocol assistance and access to the centralized MA procedure. Upon grant of an MA, orphan medicinal products are entitled to a ten-year period of market exclusivity for the approved therapeutic indication, which means that the EMA cannot accept another MAA or accept an application to extend for a similar product and the European Commission cannot grant a MA for the same indication for a period of ten years. The period of market exclusivity is extended by two years for orphan medicinal products that have also complied with an agreed PIP. No extension to any supplementary protection certificate can be granted on the basis of pediatric studies for orphan indications. Orphan medicinal product designation does not convey any advantage in, or shorten the duration of, the regulatory review and approval process.

The period of market exclusivity may, however, be reduced to six years if, at the end of the fifth year, it is established that the product no longer meets the criteria on the basis of which it received orphan medicinal product designation, including where it can be demonstrated on the basis of available evidence that the original orphan medicinal product is sufficiently profitable not to justify maintenance of market exclusivity or where the prevalence of the condition has increased above the threshold. Additionally, an MA may be granted to a similar medicinal product with the same orphan indication during the ten-year period if: (i) if the applicant consents to a second original orphan medicinal product application, (ii) if the manufacturer of the original orphan medicinal product is unable to supply sufficient quantities; or (iii) if the second applicant can establish that its product, although similar, is safer, more effective or otherwise clinically superior to the original orphan medicinal product. A company may voluntarily remove a product from the register of orphan products.

Post-authorization Requirements in the EU

Where an MA is granted in relation to a medicinal product in the EU, the holder of the MA is required to comply with a range of regulatory requirements applicable to the manufacturing, marketing, promotion and sale of medicinal products. Similar to the United States, both MA holders and manufacturers of medicinal products are subject to comprehensive regulatory oversight by the EMA, the European Commission and/or the competent regulatory authorities of the individual EU Member States. The holder of an MA must establish and maintain a pharmacovigilance system and appoint an individual qualified person for pharmacovigilance who is responsible for oversight of that system. Key obligations include expedited reporting of suspected serious adverse reactions and submission of periodic safety update reports ("PSURs").

All new MAAs must include a risk management plan describing the risk management system that the company will put in place and documenting measures to prevent or minimize the risks associated with the product. The regulatory authorities may also impose specific obligations as a condition of the MA. Such risk-minimization measures or post-authorization obligations may include additional safety monitoring, more frequent submission of PSURs, or the conduct of additional clinical trials or post-authorization safety studies.

Pricing, Coverage and Reimbursement in the EU

In the EU, pricing and reimbursement schemes vary widely from country to country.

For example, some EU Member States may restrict the range of products for which their national health insurance systems provide reimbursement. Other countries may control the prices of medicinal products for human use or allow companies to fix their own prices for products but monitor and control prescription volumes and issue guidance to physicians to limit prescriptions. Such pricing negotiations with governmental authorities can take considerable time after receipt of marketing approval for a product. Political, economic and regulatory developments may further complicate pricing negotiations.

In addition, EU Member States often require the completion of additional health technology assessments that compare the cost-effectiveness of a particular product candidate to currently available therapies. This Health Technology Assessment ("HTA") process is the procedure according to which the assessment of the public health impact, therapeutic impact and the economic and societal impact of use of a given medicinal product in the national healthcare systems of the individual country is conducted. The outcome of HTA regarding specific medicinal products will often influence the pricing and reimbursement status granted to these medicinal products by the competent authorities of individual EU Member States. At the EU level, on January 12, 2025, Regulation No 2021/2282 on Health Technology Assessment ("HTA Regulation"), entered into application through a phased implementation. The Regulation initially applies to new active substances for oncology and ATMPs. It will be expanded to orphan medicinal products in January 2028, and to all centrally authorized medicinal products as of 2030. Select high-risk medical devices also came into scope in 2026. The HTA Regulation is intended to boost cooperation among Member States in assessing health technologies, including new medicinal products. The Regulation establishes a framework for EU-level joint clinical assessments, joint scientific consultations, and the early identification of emerging health technologies. The Regulation permits EU Member States to use common tools, methodologies, and procedures and requires them to rely on EU-level joint clinical assessment reports for the clinical components of their national HTA evaluations. Individual EU Member States will continue to be responsible for assessing non-clinical (e.g., economic, social, ethical) aspects of health technologies, and making decisions on pricing and reimbursement.

Other Compliance Requirements in the EU

In the EU, the advertising and promotion of medicinal products are subject to both EU and EU Member States' laws governing promotion of medicinal products, interactions with physicians and other healthcare professionals, misleading and comparative advertising and unfair commercial practices. General requirements for advertising and promotion of medicinal products, such as direct-to-consumer advertising of prescription medicinal products are established in EU law. However, the details are governed by regulations in individual EU Member States and can differ from one country to another. For example, applicable laws require that promotional materials and advertising in relation to medicinal products comply with the product's Summary of Product Characteristic ("SmPC"), which may require approval by the competent national authorities in connection with an MA. The SmPC is the document that provides information to physicians concerning the safe and effective use of the product. Promotional activity that does not comply with the SmPC is considered off-label and is prohibited in the EU.

Much like the Anti-Kickback Statute prohibition in the United States, as described below, the provision of benefits or advantages to physicians and other health care professionals to induce or encourage the prescription, recommendation, endorsement, purchase, supply, order or use of medicinal products is also prohibited in the EU. Interactions between pharmaceutical companies and health care professionals are governed by strict laws, such as national anti-bribery laws of European countries, national sunshine rules, regulations, industry self-regulation codes of conduct and physicians' codes of professional conduct. Failure to comply with these requirements could result in reputational risk, public reprimands, administrative penalties, fines or imprisonment. Infringement of related laws could result in substantial fines and imprisonment.

Payments made to physicians and other health care professionals in certain EU Member States must be publicly disclosed. Moreover, agreements with health care professionals may require prior notification or approval by the health care professional's employer, his or her competent professional organization and/or the regulatory authorities of the individual EU Member States. Failure to comply with these requirements could result in reputational risk, public reprimands, administrative penalties, fines or imprisonment.

Facilities

Our principal executive offices are located in San Diego, California, where we lease 8,355 square feet of office space pursuant to a lease agreement that expires in September 2028 with an option to extend the lease for an additional two years. We also lease 5,748 square feet of office space in Shanghai, China pursuant to a lease agreement that expires in January 2029. We believe our existing facilities meet our current needs. We will need additional space in the future as we continue to build our development, commercial and support teams. We believe we can find suitable additional space in the future on commercially reasonable terms.

Employees and Human Capital Resources

As of December 31, 2025, we had 48 employees, 40 of whom were primarily engaged in research and development activities. None of our employees are represented by a labor union or party to a collective bargaining agreement. We consider our relationship with our employees to be good.

Our human capital resources objectives include, as applicable, identifying, recruiting, retaining, incentivizing and integrating our existing and additional employees. The principal purposes of our equity incentive plans are to attract, retain and motivate selected employees, consultants and directors through the granting of stock-based compensation awards and cash-based performance bonus awards.

Legal Proceedings

We are not currently a party to any legal proceedings. From time to time, we may, however, in the ordinary course of business face various claims brought by third parties, and we may, from time to time, make claims or take legal actions to assert our rights, including intellectual property rights as well as claims relating to employment matters and the safety or efficacy of our products. Any of these claims could subject us to costly litigation, and, while we generally believe that we have adequate insurance to cover many different types of liabilities, our insurance carriers may deny coverage, may be inadequately capitalized to pay on valid claims, or our policy limits may be inadequate to fully satisfy any damage awards or settlements. If this were to happen, the payment of any such awards could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations and prospects. Additionally, any such claims, whether or not successful, could damage our reputation and business.

Our Business

We are a clinical-stage biotechnology company comprised of experienced biopharma industry leaders with extensive research, development, and rare disease expertise with a mission to develop and commercialize life-transforming therapies for patients with severe and rare diseases. Our lead program, RLYB116, is a differentiated complement C5 inhibitor with the potential to treat diseases of complement dysregulation. In addition, RLYB332, a long-acting MTP-2 antibody for the treatment of diseases of iron overload is currently in preclinical development.

Recent Developments

On March 1, 2026, we entered into the Merger Agreement with Candid, a clinical-stage biotechnology company advancing a leading portfolio of TCE therapeutics for autoimmune diseases, and Merger Sub, a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio. Upon the terms and subject to the satisfaction of the conditions described in the Merger Agreement, Merger Sub will be merged with and into Candid, with Candid surviving as a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio (the "Merger" and, together with all of the other Contemplated Transactions. The Merger is intended to qualify as a tax-free reorganization for U.S. federal income tax purposes.

Concurrently with the execution and delivery of the Merger Agreement, certain investors entered into a Subscription Agreement with Candid, pursuant to which such investors have agreed to purchase, immediately prior to the Merger, shares of Candid Common Stock representing an aggregate commitment of approximately $505.5 million in the Concurrent Financing. The shares of Candid Common Stock that are issued in the Concurrent Financing will be or will have the right to be, respectively, converted into shares of Rallybio Common Stock in the Merger.

Subject to the terms and conditions of the Merger Agreement, at the Effective Time, (a) each then-outstanding share of common stock or preferred stock of Candid (each such share, a "Candid Share") (excluding any share described in clauses (b) or (c) below and Candid Capital Stock held by stockholders who have exercised and perfected appraisal rights for such shares) will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock, calculated in accordance with the Exchange Ratio as set forth in the Merger Agreement, (b) each Candid Share issued in the Concurrent Financing will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock calculated in accordance with the Merger Agreement, (c) any Candid Capital Stock held as treasury shares or held or owned by Rallybio, Merger Sub or any subsidiary of Rallybio or Candid immediately prior to the Effective Time will be canceled and shall cease to exist, and no consideration shall be delivered in exchange therefor. Each then-outstanding option to purchase Candid Capital Stock will be converted into an option to purchase Rallybio Common Stock, subject to adjustment as set forth in the Merger Agreement.

Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equityholders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments, including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at the Closing.

Immediately prior to the Effective Time, Rallybio and a rights agent are expected to enter into a CVR Agreement, pursuant to which holders of record of certain Rallybio securities as of the close of business on the last business day prior to the day on which the Effective Time occurs will receive one CVR for each outstanding share of Rallybio Common Stock, prefunded warrant, Rallybio restricted stock unit or In the Money Parent Option (as defined in the CVR Agreement) held as of such date. Pursuant to the CVR Agreement, each CVR holder will be entitled to receive their pro rata share of (i) all of the net proceeds (including cash the value of stock to the extent listed on a national exchange, at the time of disposition), if any, received by Rallybio as a result of payments made to Rallybio of any upfront, milestone, royalty and other payments received under any disposition agreement related to Rallybio's Legacy Assets, and (ii) any cash proceeds received from Recursion under the Membership Interest Purchase Agreement, dated July 8, 2025, by and among Recursion, Exscientia Ventures I, Inc., Rallybio Corporation and Rallybio IPB, LLC. For a period of one year after the Closing Date, Rallybio will use commercially reasonable efforts to effect the disposition of the Legacy Assets. Such net proceeds will be subject to certain permitted deductions, including for applicable tax payments, certain expenses incurred or other liabilities borne by Rallybio or its affiliates in respect of the Legacy Assets, and losses incurred by Rallybio or its affiliates due to a third-party proceeding in connection with such disposition.

We completed a confirmatory PK and PD study of RLYB116 in healthy volunteers in 2025 and reported data in the first quarter of 2026.

In July 2025, we entered into a Membership Interest Purchase Agreement (the "ENPP1 Purchase Agreement") with Recursion Exscientia Ventures I, Inc., an indirect wholly-owned subsidiary of Recursion ("Buyer") and Rallybio IPB, LLC, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Rallybio Corporation to sell our interest in REV102, an ENPP1 inhibitor in preclinical development for the treatment of patients with HPP, to Buyer (a subsidiary of our joint venture partner Recursion) (the "JV Sale"). In connection with the JV Sale, we received a total of $20.0 million in the third quarter of 2025 including $7.5 million from an upfront payment and $12.5 million from a milestone payment related to the initiation of additional preclinical studies. We are eligible to receive a $5.0 million milestone payment in connection with the initiation of dosing in a Phase 1 clinical study, as defined in the ENPP1 Purchase Agreement and low single-digit royalties on all future net sales by Recursion of products comprising or incorporating certain compounds developed by REV-1. We may also be eligible to receive certain payments in the event of Recursion's sale of the REV102 program.

In April 2025, we announced the discontinuation of our RLYB212 program for the prevention of FNAIT based on PK data from the Phase 2 clinical trial that demonstrated an inability of the RLYB212 dose regimen to achieve predicted target concentrations, as well as the minimum target concentration required for efficacy.

Complement Dysregulation

RLYB116 is an innovative, once-weekly, small volume, subcutaneously injected inhibitor of C5 in development for the treatment of patients with complement-related diseases. We have completed two Phase 1 clinical trials in healthy participants that included the study of RLYB116 as both a SAD and a MAD. After the first Phase 1 clinical trial, we completed manufacturing process enhancements that were designed to improve the tolerability of RLYB116. In 2025, we completed the confirmatory Phase 1 clinical trial evaluating the PK/PD properties of RLYB116. The confirmatory trial achieved its two key objectives including: a significant improvement in the tolerability of RLYB116 and demonstration of complete and sustained inhibition of terminal complement. These results support the study of RLYB116 as a potential best-in-class therapeutic for multiple complement mediated diseases.

Hematological Disorders

In May 2022, we obtained worldwide exclusive rights to RLYB331, a preclinical, monoclonal antibody that is designed to inhibit MTP-2. The inhibition of MTP-2 significantly increases levels of hepcidin, decreases iron load and treats ineffective erythropoiesis. In 2024, we re-engineered RLYB331 to extend its half-life and completed non-clinical studies that demonstrated favorable tolerability, dose-dependent PK, and sustained PD effects with RLYB332, a long-acting version of RLYB331. These findings, which were presented in a poster at the 66th annual meeting of the ASH, support the continued development of RLYB332 as a potentially best-in-class therapeutic for treating diseases of iron overload.

In December 2022, we entered into a strategic alliance to discover, develop, and commercialize novel antibody-based therapeutics for rare diseases. This multi-year, multi-target collaboration combined AbCellera Biologics Inc.'s ("AbCellera's") antibody discovery engine with our clinical and commercial expertise in rare diseases to identify optimal clinical candidates with a goal of delivering therapies to patients.

Our Operations

Since inception, we have devoted substantially all of our resources to raising capital, organizing and staffing the Company, business planning, conducting discovery and research activities, acquiring or discovering product candidates, establishing and protecting our intellectual property portfolio, developing and progressing our product candidates, preparing for and conducting clinical trials and establishing arrangements with third parties for the manufacture of our product candidates and component materials, including activities relating to our preclinical development and manufacturing activities for each of our programs. We do not have any product candidates approved for sale and have not generated any revenue from product sales.

Since our inception, we have funded our operations primarily through equity financings. From our inception and prior to our initial public offering ("IPO"), we received proceeds of approximately $182.5 million from equity financings. In August 2021, we closed our IPO and issued and sold 891,250 shares of common stock, inclusive of 116,250 shares sold pursuant to the full exercise of the underwriters' option to purchase additional shares, at a public offering price of $104.00 per share. We received net proceeds of approximately $83.0 million, after deducting underwriting discounts and commissions and other offering costs.

In November 2022, we completed a follow-on offering of approximately $54.8 million pursuant to which we issued 725,456 shares of common stock, inclusive of 100,456 shares of common stock sold pursuant to the partial exercise of the underwriters' option to purchase additional shares at a price of $48.00 per share and to certain investors in lieu of common stock, pre-funded warrants to purchase up to an aggregate of 416,673 shares of common stock at a price of $47.9992, which represents the per share public offering price for the shares less the $0.0008 per share exercise price for each pre-funded warrant. The net proceeds from the November 2022 follow-on offering were approximately $50.8 million, after deducting underwriting discounts and commissions and other offering costs.

In April 2024, we entered into a securities purchase agreement (the "JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement") with Johnson & Johnson Innovation —JJDC, Inc. ("JJDC"), pursuant to which we sold to JJDC, in an unregistered offering, 454,545 shares of our common stock at a price of $14.56 per share, which represented a 10% premium on our closing stock price on April 9, 2024, for aggregate gross proceeds of approximately $6.6 million, before deducting offering expenses. We agreed, among other things, to file with the SEC a registration statement covering the resale of the shares, which we filed on May 10, 2024.

In July 2025, we announced that we had entered into the ENPP1 Purchase Agreement to sell our interest in REV102, an ENPP1 inhibitor in preclinical development for the treatment of patients with HPP, to Buyer (a subsidiary of our joint venture partner Recursion). In connection with the JV Sale, we received a total of $20.0 million in the third quarter of 2025 including $7.5 million from an upfront payment and $12.5 million from a milestone payment related to the initiation of additional preclinical studies. We are eligible to receive a $5.0 million milestone cash payment in connection with the initiation of dosing in a Phase 1 clinical study, as defined in the ENPP1 Purchase Agreement and low single-digit royalties on all future net sales by Recursion of products comprising or incorporating certain compounds developed by REV-I. We may also be eligible to receive certain payments in the event of Recursion's sale of the REV102 program.

As of December 31, 2025, we had cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities of $54.7 million. We believe that our existing cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities will be sufficient to fund our operating expenses and capital expenditure requirements into 2028, although we anticipate that the proposed merger with Candid will be completed in 2026. See “—Liquidity and Capital Resources.”

We have incurred significant operating losses since inception, including net losses of $9.0 million and $57.8 million for the years ended December 31, 2025 and 2024, respectively. Our loss for the year ended December 31, 2025 included a $23.0 million gain in connection with the JV Sale in 2025. As of December 31, 2025, we had an accumulated deficit of $302.0 million. These losses have resulted primarily from costs incurred in connection with research and development activities and general and administrative costs associated with our operations. We have not commercialized any products and have never generated revenue from the commercialization of any product. If we are unable to complete the proposed transaction with Candid, we may need to raise additional capital. There can be no assurances, however, that additional funding will be available on terms acceptable to us, or at all.

Components of Results of Operations

Revenue

We do not have any product candidates approved for sale and have not generated any revenue from product sales. In April 2024, we entered into a two-year collaboration agreement (the “J&J Collaboration Agreement”) with Johnson & Johnson, through its wholly-owned subsidiary, Momenta Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (“J&J”). Our collaboration and license revenue to date is related to data collection and data submission performance obligations pursuant to the two-year J&J Collaboration Agreement to facilitate the advancement of research into products to address unmet needs relating to FNAIT. Pursuant to the J&J Collaboration Agreement, we received an upfront payment of $0.5 million from J&J for the information dissemination and data provision services under the agreement. We were also eligible to receive additional payments upon certain triggers related to the companies’ FNAIT studies, however, in connection with our decision in April 2025 to discontinue development of RLYB212, we do not expect payments regarding the achievement of certain enrollment-related events.

We determined there were performance obligations as follows:

- (1) Data collection and submission revenue – derived from Rallybio’s ongoing management of the studies including the maintenance of a minimum site footprint, the license to utilize, and timely, semi-annual submission of the anonymized data, in the required formats.
- (2) Dissemination of J&J materials & participant revenue – derived from Rallybio’s dissemination of content, information or materials related to the J&J-Sponsored Studies that are developed by J&J and are provided by Rallybio for the purpose of disseminating such content, information, or materials to staff at Rallybio study sites to provide to potential eligible participants regarding J&J’s independent study.

In April 2024, we also entered into the JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement. Under the terms of the JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement, JJDC made an equity investment purchasing 454,545 shares of common stock with a par value of $0.0001 per share for a share purchase price of $14.56 per share which includes a 10% premium for an aggregate purchase price of $6.6 million. The JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement contains provisions related to the registration of the shares and the restriction on the sale or transfer of the shares for a period of time. We determined the J&J Collaboration Agreement and JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement represented combined agreements. In accordance with Accounting Standards Codification 606, Revenue Recognition and Accounting Standards Codification Topic 820, Fair Value Measurement, total consideration of $1.2 million for the shares of common stock from the JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement, which represents the premium of $0.7 million and discount for lack of marketability of $0.5 million, has been allocated to revenue and will be recognized over the two year expected performance period.

Operating Expenses

Research and Development Expenses

Research and development expenses consist of costs incurred in connection with our research and development activities, including our drug discovery efforts and the development of our product candidates. We expense research and development costs as incurred, which include:

- # external research and development expenses incurred under agreements with third parties, such as contract research organizations ("CROs") as well as investigative sites and consultants that conduct our clinical trials and other scientific development services;
- costs related to manufacturing material for our clinical trials, including expenses related to the manufacturing scale-up and fees paid to contract manufacturing organizations ("CMOs");
- employee-related expenses, including salaries, bonuses, benefits, share-based compensation and other related costs for those employees involved in research and development efforts;
- costs of outside consultants, including their fees, and related travel expenses;
- expenses to acquire technologies, such as intellectual property, to be used in research and development including in-process research and development ("IPR&D") that has no alternative future use at the time of asset acquisitions;
- costs related to compliance with quality and regulatory requirements; and
- facilities, depreciation and other indirect costs allocated to employees and activities supporting our research and development efforts.

Costs for certain activities are recognized based on an evaluation of the progress to completion of each specific contract using information and data provided to us by our vendors and analyzing the progress of our research studies or other services performed. Significant judgments and estimates are made in determining the expenses incurred at the end of any reporting period.

Our direct, external research and development expenses consist primarily of fees paid to outside consultants, CROs, CMOs and research laboratories in connection with our process development, manufacturing and clinical development activities. Our direct external research and development expenses also include fees incurred under license and intellectual property purchase agreements. We track these external research and development costs on a program-by-program basis.

We do not allocate employee costs, facility costs, including depreciation, or other indirect costs, to specific programs because these costs are deployed across multiple programs and, as such, are not separately classified. We use internal resources and third-party consultants primarily to conduct our research and development activities as well as for managing our process development, manufacturing and clinical development activities.

The successful development of any product candidate is highly uncertain. If we are unable to complete the proposed transaction with Candid, we will need to raise substantial additional capital in the future to fund the future development of our current programs. We intend to focus our near term research and development efforts on completing the ongoing activities and preparing our programs for a potential transaction or sale.

General and Administrative Expenses

General and administrative expenses consist primarily of salaries, benefits and share-based compensation for our personnel in executive, legal, business development, finance and accounting, and other administrative functions. General and administrative expenses also include legal fees relating to intellectual property and corporate matters, professional fees paid for accounting, auditing, tax and consulting services, insurance costs, travel expenses and direct and allocated facility costs not otherwise included in research and development expenses. We expect our general and administrative expenses to increase in the short term in connection with activities to support the completion of the potential transaction with Candid.

Total Other Income, Net

Total other income, net, includes interest income earned on cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities, and income and expense items, including income related to the proceeds from the JV Sale.

Loss on Investment in Joint Venture

We recognize the pro-rata share of losses in the joint venture with Recursion (as successor in interest to Exscientia) on the consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss within the loss on investment in joint venture line item, with a corresponding change to the joint venture investment asset on the consolidated balance sheets for equity method investments for which we do not have a controlling interest in. In July 2025, we sold our interest in REV102 to Recursion.

Comparison of the years ended December 31, 2025 and 2024

The following table summarizes our results of operations:

(in thousands)	FOR THE YEAR ENDED DECEMBER 31,		CHANGE

Revenue

Collaboration and license revenue was $0.9 million for the year ended December 31, 2025, compared to $0.6 million for the year ended December 31, 2024. The increase of $0.2 million in 2025 as compared to 2024 was due to our entrance into the J&J Collaboration Agreement in the second quarter of 2024 and the recognition of revenue related to the collaboration performance obligations.

Operating Expenses

Research and Development Expenses

The following table summarizes our research and development costs for each of the periods presented:

(in thousands)	FOR THE YEAR ENDED DECEMBER 31,		CHANGE
	2025	2024
Direct research and development by program
RLYB212	$ 6,291	$ 21,287	$ (14,996)
RLYB116	3,786	4,841	(1,055)
Other program candidates	(29)	1,901	(1,930)
Other unallocated research and development costs
Personnel expenses (including share-based compensation)	8,798	12,488	(3,690)
Other expenses	751	990	(239)
Total research and development expenses	$ 19,597	$ 41,507	$ (21,910)

Research and development expenses were $19.6 million for the year ended December 31, 2025, compared to $41.5 million for the year ended December 31, 2024. The decrease of $21.9 million was primarily due to:

- a $15.0 million decrease in costs related to the development of RLYB212, primarily related to a decrease in clinical development costs, manufacturing costs and other related development costs as a result of our discontinuation of the FNAIT program in April 2025;
- a $1.1 million decrease in costs related to the development of RLYB116, primarily related to a decrease in manufacturing costs; which were partially offset by an increase in clinical development costs and other related development costs;
- a $1.9 million decrease in costs related to the development of other program candidates, primarily related to RLYB332 manufacturing costs and other related development costs; and
- a $3.7 million decrease in payroll and personnel-related expenses, primarily due to lower ongoing headcount during the year ended December 31, 2025 as compared to the same period in 2024; offset by an increase in personnel-related expenses due to the severance expense recognized in the second quarter of 2025 in connection with the workforce reduction, effective May 2, 2025.

General and Administrative Expenses

General and administrative expenses were $14.3 million for the year ended December 31, 2025, compared to $19.6 million for the year ended December 31, 2024. The decrease of $5.3 million was primarily due to:

- a $4.7 million decrease in personnel-related expenses, primarily related to lower ongoing headcount during the year ended December 31, 2025 as compared to the same period in 2024; offset by an increase in personnel-related expenses due to severance expense recognized in the second quarter of 2025 in connection with the workforce reduction, effective May 2, 2025; and
- a $0.6 million decrease primarily related to professional fees and other related general and administrative expenses; offset by an increase in legal fees.

Total Other Income, Net

Total other income, net, for the year ended December 31, 2025 was $25.0 million compared to $5.0 million for the year ended December 31, 2024. The increase in total other income of $20.0 million was primarily related to an increase in other income related to the JV Sale; offset by a decrease in interest income from marketable securities due to a lower excess cash balance.

Loss on Investment in Joint Venture

Loss on investment in joint venture for the year ended December 31, 2025 was $0.9 million compared to $2.2 million for the year ended December 31, 2024. The change was primarily due to the sale of our interest in REV102 in July 2025.

Liquidity and Capital Resources

Sources of Liquidity

On February 6, 2026, we executed a reverse stock split of our issued and outstanding common stock, par value $0.0001, at a ratio of 1-for-8 with a record date of December 30, 2025 (the "Reverse Stock Split"). All common stock, per share and related information included below have been adjusted retroactively, where applicable, to reflect the Reverse Stock Split.

Since our inception, we have funded our operations primarily through equity financings. From our inception and prior to our IPO, we received proceeds of approximately $182.5 million from equity financings. In August 2021, we closed our IPO and issued and sold 891,250 shares of common stock, inclusive of 116,250 shares sold pursuant to the full exercise of the underwriters' option to purchase additional shares, at a public offering price of $104.00 per share. We received net proceeds of approximately $83.0 million, after deducting underwriting discounts and commissions and other offering costs.

In August 2022, we filed a registration statement on Form S-3 (the "Shelf") with the SEC in relation to the registration and potential future issuance of common stock, preferred stock, debt securities, warrants and/or units of any combination thereof in the aggregate amount of up to $300.0 million. The Shelf was declared effective on August 15, 2022. Pursuant to General Instruction I.B.6 to Form S-3 ("Instruction I.B.6"), a company with a public float of less than $75.0 million measured at certain time periods may not issue securities under registration statements on Form S-3 in excess of one-third of its public float in a 12-month period. We are subject to the limitations of Instruction I.B.6, which may limit the amount of funds we can raise using the Shelf or any other registration statement on Form S-3. In connection with the Shelf, we also simultaneously entered into a Sales Agreement with TD Securities (USA) LLC (f/k/a Cowen and Company, LLC) ("TD Cowen"), which was amended on March 13, 2025 (as amended, the "Sales Agreement"). In accordance with the terms of the Sales Agreement, we may offer and sell shares of our common stock having an aggregate offering price of up to $9.55 million from time to time at prices through TD Cowen acting as our agent. Pursuant to the Sales Agreement, sales of our common stock, if any, will be made in sales deemed to be "at the market offerings" as defined in Rule 415(a)(4) promulgated under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (the "Securities Act"). Under the Sales Agreement, TD Cowen will be entitled to compensation equal to 3.0% of the gross proceeds of any shares of common stock sold under the Sales Agreement. As of December 31, 2025, we had not sold any shares of common stock pursuant to the Sales Agreement.

In November 2022, we completed a follow-on offering of approximately $54.8 million consisting of 725,456 shares of common stock, inclusive of 100,456 shares of common stock sold pursuant to the partial exercise of the underwriters' option to purchase additional shares at the price of $48.00 per share, and to certain investors in lieu of common stock, pre-funded warrants to purchase up to an aggregate of 416,673 shares of common stock at a price of $47.9992, which represents the per share public offering price for the shares less the $0.0008 per share exercise price for each pre-funded warrant. The net proceeds from the November 2022 follow-on offering were approximately $50.8 million, after deducting underwriting discounts and commissions and other offering costs.

In April 2024, we entered into the JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement, pursuant to which we sold to JJDC in an unregistered offering, 454,545 shares of our common stock at a price of $14.56 per share, which represented a 10% premium on our closing stock price on April 9, 2024, for aggregate gross proceeds of approximately $6.6 million, before deducting offering expenses. We agreed, among other things, to file with the SEC a registration statement covering the resale of the shares within 120 days following the closing of the offering. We filed this registration statement on May 10, 2024.

In July 2025, we announced that we had entered into the ENPP1 Purchase Agreement to sell our interest in REV102, an ENPP1 inhibitor in preclinical development for the treatment of patients with HPP, to Buyer (a subsidiary of our joint venture partner, Recursion). In the third quarter of 2025, we received a total of $20.0 million in connection with the JV Sale, including $7.5 million from an upfront payment and $12.5 million from a milestone payment related to the initiation of additional preclinical studies. We are eligible to receive a $5.0 million milestone cash payment in connection with the initiation of dosing in a Phase 1 clinical study, as defined in the ENPP1 Purchase Agreement and low single-digit royalties on all future net sales by Recursion of products comprising or incorporating certain compounds developed by REV-I. We may also be eligible to receive certain payments in the event of Recursion's sale of the REV102 program.

As of December 31, 2025, we had $54.7 million of cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities.

Uses of Liquidity

We currently have no ongoing material financing commitments, such as lines of credit or guarantees, that are expected to affect our liquidity over the next five years. See "Contractual Obligations".

Funding Requirements

We believe that our existing cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities will be sufficient to fund our operating expenses and capital expenditure requirements for at least 12 months of the filing of this proxy statement/prospectus and we anticipate that the proposed merger with Candid will be completed in 2026.

Because of the numerous risks and uncertainties, length of time and scope of activities associated with research, development and commercialization of pharmaceutical product candidates, we are unable to estimate the actual amount of funds we will require for development, approval and any approved marketing and commercialization activities. Our future capital requirements will depend primarily on our ability to complete the proposed transaction with Candid.

If we do not complete the proposed transaction with Candid and until such time, if ever, as we generate significant revenue from product sales, we expect to finance our operations through the sale of equity, debt financings, marketing and distribution arrangements and collaborations, strategic alliances and licensing arrangements or other sources. We currently have no credit facility or committed sources of capital. Any future sales of equity will result in dilution to our existing stockholders. If we raise additional funds through debt financing, we may be subject to covenants limiting or restricting our ability to take specific actions, such as incurring additional debt, making capital expenditures or declaring dividends, and we may need to dedicate a substantial additional portion of any operating cash flows to the payment of principal and interest on such indebtedness. If we raise additional funds through collaborations, strategic alliances or marketing, distribution or licensing arrangements with third parties, we may be required to relinquish valuable rights to our technologies, intellectual property, future revenue streams or product candidates or grant licenses on terms that may not be favorable to us. If we are unable to raise additional funds when needed, we may be required to delay, limit, reduce or terminate product candidate development or future commercialization efforts.

Cash Flows

The following table summarizes our cash flows for each of the periods presented:

(in thousands)	FOR THE YEAR ENDED DECEMBER 31,
	2025	2024
Net cash used in operating activities	$ (29,813)	$ (49,282)
Net cash provided by investing activities	47,268	33,492
Net cash provided by financing activities	16	5,199
Net increase (decrease) in cash and cash equivalents	$ 17,471	$ (10,591)

Operating Activities

During the year ended December 31, 2025, net cash used in operating activities was $29.8 million as compared to $49.3 million for the year ended December 31, 2024. The decrease in net cash used in operating activities was primarily related to a decrease in research and development and general and administrative activities and changes in working capital.

Investing Activities

Net cash provided by investing activities was $47.3 million for the year ended December 31, 2025 as compared to $33.5 million for the year ended December 31, 2024. The increase of $13.8 million in net cash provided by investing activities was primarily related to proceeds of $46.5 million from maturities of highly-rated debt securities, in addition to an increase of $18.5 million primarily related to the $20.0 million in proceeds from the JV Sale, partially offset by purchases of highly-rated debt securities of $17.7 million during the year ended December 31, 2025, as compared to proceeds from maturities of highly-rated debt securities of $84.4 million, partially offset by purchases of highly-rated debt securities of $48.9 million during the year ended December 31, 2024.

Financing Activities

Net cash provided by financing activities for the year ended December 31, 2025 was $16 thousand, representing proceeds from the issuance of common stock under the stock purchase plan. Net cash provided by financing activities for the year ended December 31, 2024 was $5.2 million, primarily representing proceeds from the issuance of common stock pursuant to the JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement, after deducting offering costs and accounting for the total consideration allocation related to the J&J Collaboration Agreement of $1.2 million.

Contractual Obligations

The following table summarizes our contractual obligations as of December 31, 2025:

(in thousands)	PAYMENTS DUE BY PERIOD
	TOTAL	LESS THAN 1 YEAR	1-3 YEARS	3-5 YEARS	MORE THAN 5 YEARS
Operating lease obligations	$ 190	$ 106	$ 84	$ —	$ —

The contractual obligation amounts in the table above are associated with contracts that are enforceable and legally binding and that specify all significant terms, including fixed or minimum services to be used, fixed, minimum or variable price provisions and the approximate timing of the actions under the contracts.

Purchase and Other Obligations

We enter contracts in the normal course of business with CROs and other third-party vendors for clinical trials and testing and manufacturing services. Aside from those included in the table above, most contracts do not contain minimum purchase commitments and are cancellable by us upon written notice. Payments that may be due upon cancellation consist of payments for services provided or expenses incurred. These payments are not included in the table above as the amount and timing of such payments are not known.

We may incur contingent payments upon our achievement of clinical, regulatory and commercial milestones, as applicable under agreements we have entered into with various third-party entities pursuant to which we have acquired or in-licensed intellectual property. Due to the uncertainty of the achievement and timing of the events that require payment under these agreements, the amounts to be paid by us are not fixed or determinable at this time and have not been included in the table above. See "Rallybio's Business—License Agreements" and "Rallybio's Business—Asset Purchase Agreements" included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus for a description of these agreements.

Critical Accounting Estimates

Our consolidated financial statements are prepared in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America. The preparation of our consolidated financial statements and related disclosures requires us to make estimates and judgments that affect the reported amounts of assets, liabilities, costs and expenses, and the disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities in our consolidated financial statements. We base our estimates on historical experience, known trends and events and various other factors that we believe are reasonable under the circumstances, the results of which form the basis for making judgments about the carrying values of assets and liabilities that are not readily apparent from other sources. We evaluate our estimates and assumptions on an ongoing basis. Our actual results may differ from these estimates under different assumptions or conditions.

While our significant accounting policies are described in more detail in Note 2 "Summary of Significant Accounting Policies Basis of Presentation and Principles of Consolidation" to our consolidated financial statements included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus, we believe that the following accounting policies are those most critical to the judgments and estimates used in the preparation of our consolidated financial statements.

Research and Development Expenses

As part of the process of preparing our consolidated financial statements, we are required to estimate our research and development expenses that are incurred as of each reporting period. This process involves reviewing open contracts and purchase orders, communicating with our personnel and with vendors to identify services that have been performed on our behalf and estimating the level of service performed and the associated cost incurred for the service when we have not yet been invoiced or otherwise notified of the actual cost. The majority of our service providers invoice us monthly in arrears for services performed or when contractual milestones are met. We make estimates of our accrued expenses as of each balance sheet date based on facts and circumstances known to us at that time. We periodically confirm the accuracy of our estimates with the service providers and make adjustments if necessary.

We base our expenses related to research and development activities on our estimates of the services received and efforts expended pursuant to quotes and contracts with vendors that conduct research and development on our behalf. The financial terms of these agreements are subject to negotiation, vary from contract to contract and may result in uneven payment flows. There may be instances in which payments made to our vendors will exceed the level of services provided and result in a prepayment of the research and development expense. In accruing service fees, we estimate the time period over which services will be performed and the level of effort to be expended in each period. If the actual timing of the performance of services or the level of effort varies from our estimate, we adjust the accrual or prepaid balance accordingly. Non-refundable advance payments for goods and services that will be used in future research and development activities are expensed when the activity has been performed or when the goods have been received rather than when the payment is made.

Although we do not expect our estimates to be materially different from amounts incurred, if our estimates of the status and timing of services performed differ from the actual status and timing of services performed, it could result in us reporting amounts that are too high or too low in any particular period.

Share-Based Compensation

We account for share-based compensation in accordance with the Accounting Standards Codification 718, Compensation—Stock Compensation. Generally, share-based compensation is measured at the grant date for all equity-based awards made to employees based on the fair value of the awards and is recognized over the requisite service period, which is generally the vesting period. Share-based compensation for awards with performance conditions are recognized over the service period when achievement of the performance condition is probable. We have elected to recognize the actual forfeitures by reducing the share-based compensation in the same period as the forfeitures occur. We classify share-based compensation in the consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss in the same manner in which the award recipients' payroll costs are classified.

The Black-Scholes option-pricing model uses as inputs the fair value of our common stock and assumptions we make for the volatility of our common stock, the expected term of our common stock options, the risk-free interest rate for a period that approximates the expected term of our common stock options, and our expected dividend yield. See Note 2 "Summary of Significant Accounting Policies Basis of Presentation and Principles of Consolidation" of our consolidated financial statements for additional information on the assumptions utilized in the Black-Scholes option-pricing model.

Emerging Growth Company and Smaller Reporting Company

As an EGC under the JOBS Act, we may delay the adoption of certain accounting standards until such time as those standards apply to private companies. Other exemptions and reduced reporting requirements under the JOBS Act, for EGCs include presentation of only two years of audited financial statements in a registration statement for an IPO, an exemption from the requirement to provide an auditor's report on internal controls over financial reporting pursuant to Section 404(b) of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, an exemption from any requirement that may be adopted by the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board regarding mandatory audit firm rotation, and less extensive disclosure about our executive compensation arrangements. Additionally, the JOBS Act provides that an EGC can take advantage of an extended transition period for complying with new or revised accounting standards. This allows an EGC to delay the adoption of certain accounting standards until those standards would otherwise apply to private companies. We have elected not to "opt out" of such extended transition period, which means that when a standard is issued or revised and it has different application dates for public or private companies, we will adopt the new or revised standard at the time private companies adopt the new or revised standard and will do so until such time that we either (i) irrevocably elect to "opt out" of such extended transition period or (ii) no longer qualify as an EGC. We may choose to early adopt any new or revised accounting standards whenever such early adoption is permitted for private companies. Therefore, the reported results of operations contained in our consolidated financial statements may not be directly comparable to those of other public companies.

We are also a "smaller reporting company" meaning that the market value of our stock held by non-affiliates is less than $700.0 million and our annual revenue was less than $100.0 million during the most recently completed fiscal year. We may continue to be a smaller reporting company if either (i) the market value of our stock held by non-affiliates is less than $250.0 million or (ii) our annual revenue was less than $100.0 million during the most recently completed fiscal year and the market value of our stock held by non-affiliates is less than $700.0 million. If we are a smaller reporting company at the time we cease to be an EGC, we may continue to rely on exemptions from certain disclosure requirements that are available to smaller reporting companies. Specifically, as a smaller reporting company we may choose to present only the two most recent fiscal years of audited financial statements in our Annual Report on Form 10-K and, similar to emerging growth companies, smaller reporting companies have reduced disclosure obligations regarding executive compensation.

Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements

As of December 31, 2025 and 2024, we did not have any off-balance sheet arrangements, as defined in Item 303(a)(4)(ii) of Regulation S-K.

Recently Issued Accounting Pronouncements

A description of recently issued accounting pronouncements that may potentially impact our financial position, results of operations and footnote disclosures is disclosed in Note 2 “Summary of Significant Accounting Policies Basis of Presentation and Principles of Consolidation” to our consolidated financial statements for the year ended December 31, 2025 appearing elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

Overview

Candid is a global clinical-stage biotechnology company focused on building the leading portfolio of TCE therapeutics to treat autoimmune diseases, which affect an estimated 5-10% of the global population. Despite available treatments, many patients experience persistent disease activity, progressive organ damage, and lifelong dependence on immunosuppressive therapies that provide incomplete disease control and cause significant adverse events. Cizutamig, which targets BCMA, is Candid's lead clinical-stage TCE program and is advancing into global Phase 2 studies in gMG and SARD-ILD. TCEs harness a patient's own T cells to deplete pathogenic B-cells, with the potential to deliver either deep depletion of B-cells, which could provide durable disease remission ("immune reset"), or partial depletion of B-cells, which could provide for controlled, sustained disease management ("immune dimming").

Candid has built a diversified pipeline of four wholly-owned TCE programs in development targeting distinct B-cell antigens—BCMA, CD20, and CD19. Candid's most advanced clinical stage program, cizutamig, is a BCMA TCE that is being investigated in multiple Phase 1 dose-escalation trials in patients with gMG and SLE as well as in IITs in SARD-ILD, SSc, and other diseases. Biopsies obtained post treatment with cizutamig show deep B-cell depletion, including in plasma cells, bone marrow and lymph nodes. In patients with gMG, Candid has seen clinical improvements with standardized physician and patient disease activity indices. In patients with SARD-ILD, Candid has seen improvements in lung function as measured by increases in FVC. Cizutamig has demonstrated a favorable tolerability profile in patients with autoimmune disease with low rates of adverse events related to cytokine release and no deaths or dose-limiting adverse events. Candid plans to initiate global Phase 2 clinical trials in gMG and SARD-ILD by the middle of 2026. In gMG, Candid plans to conduct a head-to-head study comparing cizutamig to VYVGART®, a FcRn antagonist therapy.

Candid's second clinical-stage program, CND261, is a CD20 TCE that is being investigated in Phase 1 dose-escalation studies in patients with RA, SLE, as well as an IIT in ANCA-associated vasculitis. CND261 was engineered with the goal of achieving deeper B-cell depletion than approved CD20-targeted mAbs such as Rituxan® or GAZYVA®. Lymph node biopsies post treatment with CND261 in patients with autoimmune disease shows deep depletion of CD20 positive B-cells. CND261 has demonstrated a favorable tolerability profile in patients with autoimmune disease with low rates of adverse events related to cytokine release and no deaths or dose-limiting adverse events. Beyond these two clinical programs, Candid has built a pipeline of next-generation trispecific TCEs, each designed to target two different antigens expressed on B-cells. CND319 is a TCE that targets CD19 and CD20 for B-cell depletion. In non-human primate studies, single doses of CND319 show deep tissue B-cell depletion with minimal cytokine release. Candid expects to initiate first-in-human studies for CND319 in the middle of 2026. CND460 is a TCE that targets CD19 and BCMA and is currently undergoing IND-enabling studies with first-in-human trials planned for the first half of 2027.

Since its incorporation in May 2024, Candid has devoted substantially all of its resources and efforts to organizing and staffing its company, business planning, raising capital, identifying assets, engaging in strategic transactions and licensing arrangements, establishing and protecting its intellectual property portfolio preparing for and conducting its planned preclinical studies and clinical trials, advancing arrangements with third parties for the manufacture of its drug candidates and component materials, and providing general and administrative support for these operations.

On August 19, 2024, Candid entered into an agreement and plan of merger and reorganization (the “2024 Merger Agreement”) with Vignette Bio, Inc. (“Vignette”) and TRC 2004, Inc. (“TRC”, and together with Vignette, “Predecessors”). Upon the consummation of the merger pursuant to the 2024 Merger Agreement (the “2024 Merger”), Vignette and TRC became wholly owned subsidiaries of Candid. In December 2024, Vignette and TRC were merged with and into Candid. As more fully described in Note 5 to Candid’s consolidated financial statements included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus, the total consideration transferred by Candid in the 2024 Merger primarily consisted of 105,000,000 shares of Candid’s Series A-1 convertible preferred stock, 89,999,985 shares of Candid’s Series A-2 convertible preferred stock and 69,999,985 shares of Candid’s common stock with an aggregate fair value of $271.1 million (including transaction costs). In exchange for the consideration given, Candid received $116.9 million of cash, other working capital of $0.8 million and in-process research and development (“IPR&D”) with a fair value of $153.4 million.

On January 22, 2025, Candid established Shanghai Tandī Biotechnology Co., Ltd. (“Tandī”), a Shanghai Limited Liability Company, as a wholly owned foreign subsidiary located in Shanghai, China, formed for the primary purpose of conducting clinical trials in China. Candid’s consolidated financial statements, included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus, include the accounts of Candid for all periods presented, and the accounts of Vignette and TRC from August 19, 2024 through December 27, 2024, and the accounts of Tandī from formation through December 31, 2025. All intercompany balances were eliminated in consolidation. The financial statements of the Predecessors, for the period from January 1, 2024 through August 19, 2024 (the 2024 Merger date), are included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

On March 1, 2026, Rallybio entered into the Merger Agreement with Candid and Merger Sub. Upon the terms and subject to the satisfaction of the conditions described in the Merger Agreement, Merger Sub will be merged with and into Candid, with Candid surviving as a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio. The Merger is intended to qualify as a tax-free reorganization for U.S. federal income tax purposes. In connection with the Merger, Rallybio will change its name to “Candid Therapeutics, Inc.” Candid following the Merger is referred to herein as the “combined company.” The combined company is expected to be led by Candid’s management team and will focus on advancing a leading portfolio of TCE therapeutics for autoimmune diseases. Concurrently with entering into the Merger Agreement, Candid entered into the Subscription Agreement with the Investors. Pursuant to the Subscription Agreement, Candid agreed to sell, and the Investors agreed to purchase, immediately prior to the Effective Time, shares of Candid Common Stock for an aggregate purchase price of $505.5 million. Shares of Candid Common Stock issued pursuant to the Concurrent Financing will be converted into shares of Rallybio Common Stock in accordance with the Merger Agreement.

Since its inception, Candid has funded its operations primarily through the issuance of shares of its convertible preferred stock, the issuance of shares of its capital stock in connection with the 2024 Merger, and interest income on its investment portfolio. To date, in addition to the net cash it received in the 2024 Merger, Candid has received gross proceeds of approximately $206.2 million from the sale of shares of its convertible preferred stock (including cash proceeds from convertible debt converted in the financing). As of December 31, 2025, Candid had cash and cash equivalents and short-term investments of $223.3 million. Based on its current operating plan, Candid estimates that its existing cash, cash equivalents and short-term investments as of the date of this proxy statement/prospectus, together with the estimated net proceeds from the Merger and the Concurrent Financing, will be sufficient to fund its operating expenses and capital expenditures through 2030. However, Candid’s forecast of the period of time through which its financial resources will be adequate to support its operations is a forward-looking statement that involves risks and uncertainties, and actual results could differ materially. Candid has based this estimate on assumptions that may prove to be wrong, and Candid could use its capital resources sooner than it currently expects.

Candid has incurred net losses since its inception. Candid’s net losses for the year ended December 31, 2025 and the period from May 1, 2024 (inception) to December 31, 2024 were $92.2 million and $174.3 million respectively. Of such net losses, $31.3 million and $162.0 million, respectively, related to acquired IPR&D. As of December 31, 2025, Candid had an accumulated deficit of $266.5 million. Candid's operating results may fluctuate significantly from quarter-to-quarter and year-to-year, depending on the timing and level of expense related to current or future development of its clinical and preclinical trials and its expenditures on other research and development and other activities. Excluding Candid's acquired IPR&D, Candid expects its expenses and operating losses will increase substantially as cizutamig and CND261 and any other future drug candidates advance through preclinical and clinical trials, as Candid expands its clinical, regulatory, quality and manufacturing capabilities, hires additional personnel, protects its intellectual property, and as Candid incurs significant commercialization expenses for marketing, sales, manufacturing and distribution, in anticipation of receiving marketing approval for one or more of its drug candidates, which it may not receive. Furthermore, upon the Closing, Candid expects to incur additional costs associated with operating as a public company.

Candid does not have any drug candidates approved for sale and has not generated any revenue from drug sales. Candid does not expect to generate any revenues from drug sales unless and until it successfully completes development and obtains regulatory approval for one or more drug candidates, which will not be for at least a number of years, if ever. Accordingly, until such time as Candid can generate significant revenue from sales of its drug candidates, if ever, Candid expects to finance its cash needs through public or private equity or debt financings, or other sources, potentially including collaborations and other strategic arrangements with third parties. However, Candid may be unable to raise additional funds or enter into such other arrangements when needed on favorable terms or at all. Candid's failure to raise capital or enter into such other arrangements when needed would have a negative impact on its financial condition and could force it to delay, limit, reduce or terminate clinical trials, research and development programs or other operations, or lead it to grant rights to third parties to develop and market drug candidates that it would otherwise prefer to develop and market itself.

Candid does not own or operate, and currently has no plans to establish, any manufacturing facilities. Candid has engaged, and currently relies on third party CDMOs, for the supply of its drug candidates for use in its ongoing and planned preclinical studies and planned clinical trials.

Candid relies on third party CDMOs for biologics development and manufacturing services. Candid is evaluating third party CDMOs to further diversify and strengthen its supply chain. Additionally, Candid is establishing processes to help enable it to scale up production for late-stage clinical trials as well as commercial use. Candid is also developing subcutaneous formulations for both of cizutamig and CND261. Candid expects to start evaluation of the subcutaneous formulation for cizutamig in clinical development in the second half of 2026. If any of its drug candidates receive marketing approval, Candid intends to rely on third-party CDMOs for commercial manufacturing. As its drug candidates advance through development, Candid expects to enter into longer-term commercial supply agreements to fulfill and secure its production needs.

License and Collaboration Agreements

As a result of the 2024 Merger, Candid assumed certain license and collaboration agreements with EpimAb relating to cizutamig and with Genor relating to CND261. In January 2025, Candid and WuXi Biologics entered into a license agreement relating to certain tri-specific antibodies. As its drug candidates progress through development and toward commercialization, Candid will need to make milestone payments to the licensors from whom it has in-licensed its drug candidates. See the section titled "Contractual Obligations and Commitments" below, "Candid's Business—License and Collaboration Agreements" and the notes to Candid's consolidated financial statements included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus for additional information on these agreements.

Financial Operations Overview

Operating Expenses

The descriptions below reflect the composition of the operating expenses for Candid and the Predecessors. Not all listed expenses are applicable to each entity. See "Results of Operations for Candid" below for descriptions of the operating expenses by period applicable to each of Candid, Vignette and TRC.

Operating expenses consist of (i) research and development expenses, (ii) in-process research and development, and (iii) general and administrative expenses.

Research and Development

Research and development expenses primarily consist of external and internal expenses related primarily to the discovery and development of its drug candidates. Research and development expenses are recognized as incurred and payments made prior to the receipt of goods or services to be used in research and development are capitalized until the goods or services are received. IPR&D expenses, which represent a significant portion of operating expenses, are classified separately from research and development expenses.

Research and development expenses include:

External:

- external research and development expenses incurred under agreements with CROs, investigative sites, consultants and other third parties to perform research services, and conduct and support preclinical studies, toxicology and clinical trials;
- laboratory supplies; and
- costs related to manufacturing drug candidates for preclinical studies and clinical trials.

Internal:

- personnel and related expenses, including salaries, bonuses, payroll taxes and employee benefits for personnel involved in research and development efforts; and
- facilities and other expenses, including direct and allocated expenses for rent, maintenance of facilities, insurance, equipment, depreciation and other supplies and services.

Candid does not track its internal research and development expenses on a program-by-program basis because these expenses are deployed across multiple programs.

Candid anticipates that its research and development expenses will increase substantially for the foreseeable future as it continues the development of cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460, as well as the discovery of and development of new drug candidates. Candid cannot determine with certainty the timing of initiation, the duration or the completion costs of current or future preclinical studies and clinical trials of cizutamig, CND261, CND319 and CND460, its current development candidates, or any future drug candidates due to the inherently unpredictable nature of preclinical and clinical development. Preclinical and clinical development timelines, the probability of success and development costs can differ materially from expectations. Candid anticipates that it will make determinations as to which drug candidates and indications to pursue and how much funding to direct to each drug candidate and indication on an ongoing basis in response to the results of ongoing and future preclinical studies and clinical trials, regulatory developments, and its ongoing assessments as to each drug candidate's commercial potential. In addition, Candid cannot forecast which drug candidates, if any, may be subject to future collaborations, when such arrangements will be secured, if at all, and to what degree such arrangements would affect its development plans and capital requirements.

Candid's development costs may vary significantly based on factors such as:

- per patient trial costs;
- the number of indications Candid pursues for its drug candidates;
- the number of trials required for approval;
- the number and scope of preclinical and IND-enabling studies;
- the number of sites included in the trials;
- the countries in which the trials are conducted;
- the length of time required to enroll eligible patients;
- the number of patients that participate in the trials;
- the number of doses that patients receive;
- the choice of comparator arms in the clinical trials;
- the drop-out or discontinuation rates of patients;

- potential alterations in the clinical development plan, including if additional safety monitoring is requested by regulatory authorities;
- the duration of patient participation in the trials and follow-up;
- the phase of development of a drug candidate;
- the timing, receipt and terms of approvals from applicable regulatory authorities, if any;
- the efficacy and safety profile of a drug candidate;
- the cost of manufacturing; and
- the extent to which Candid establishes additional collaboration, license or other arrangements.
- A change in the outcome of any of these variables with respect to the development of Candid's drug candidates may significantly impact the costs and timing associated with the development of those candidates.

In-Process Research and Development

Intangible assets that are acquired in an asset acquisition for use in research and development activities that have an alternative future use are capitalized as IPR&D. Acquired IPR&D that has no alternative future use is expensed immediately. IPR&D is related to assets acquired by the Predecessors in connection with certain license and collaboration agreements, assets acquired in the 2024 Merger and subsequent milestone payments made in connection with the license and collaboration agreements assumed in the 2024 Merger, and assets acquired in connection with certain early-stage research licenses entered into subsequent to the 2024 Merger.

General and Administrative

General and administrative expenses primarily consist of personnel and related expenses, including salaries, bonuses, payroll taxes and employee benefits, for personnel in executive, finance and other administrative functions. Other significant costs include legal fees relating to intellectual property and corporate matters, professional fees for accounting and consulting services, insurance and facilities and related costs. Candid anticipates that its general and administrative expenses will increase substantially for the foreseeable future to support its continued research and development activities and, if any of its drug candidates receive marketing approval, commercialization activities. Candid also anticipates increased expenses related to accounting, audit, legal, regulatory and tax-related services, costs associated with maintaining compliance with exchange listing and SEC requirements, director and officer insurance premiums, and investor relations and other costs associated with operating as a public company.

Other Income (Expense), Net

Other income (expense), net consists of (i) interest income, (ii) interest expense, (iii) change in fair value of convertible promissory note—related party, and (iv) other expense—related party.

Interest Income

Interest income primarily consists of interest income from cash and cash equivalents and short-term investments.

Interest Expense

Interest expense primarily consists of interest expense related to promissory notes Candid issued in June 2024 that were settled or repaid in August 2024.

Change in Fair Value of Convertible Promissory Note—Related Party

The change in fair value of convertible promissory note—related party represents the change in fair value of a convertible promissory note, for which Candid elected the fair value option, between the June 2024 issuance date and August 2024 settlement in connection with its Series B convertible preferred stock financing.

Other Expense—Related Party (Applicable to TRC Only)

Other expense—related party consists of discounts on Candid Common Stock issuances to related party investors.

Research and development expenses were $62.2 million and $14.1 million for the year ended December 31, 2025 and the period from May 1, 2024 (inception) to December 31, 2024, respectively. The increase of $48.1 million was primarily driven by an increase in external expenses of $35.3 million and an increase in internal expenses of $12.8 million. The increase of $35.3 million in external expenses was primarily driven by an increase of $6.6 million related to the clinical development of cizutamig for autoantibody driven autoimmune diseases, $9.8 million related to the clinical development of CND261 for autoimmune diseases, and $18.9 million in preclinical and indirect program expenses, including increases in the manufacturing of drug candidates for Candid's preclinical programs, toxicology, third-party research activities and laboratory supplies. In 2024, other income (expense), net primarily consisted of $5.1 million of interest income on Candid's cash and cash equivalents, partially offset by a $0.2 million change in the fair value of a convertible promissory note.

Liquidity and Capital Resources

Sources of Liquidity for Candid

Since Candid's inception, it has funded its operations primarily through the issuance of shares of its convertible preferred stock, the issuance of shares of its capital stock in connection with the 2024 Merger, and interest income on its investment portfolio. Candid has incurred net losses and negative cash flows from operations since its inception and anticipates it will continue to incur net losses for the foreseeable future.

Funding requirements

As of December 31, 2025, Candid had cash, cash equivalents and short-term investments of $223.3 million. Based on its current operating plan, Candid estimates that its existing cash, cash equivalents and short-term investments as of the date of this proxy statement/prospectus, together with the estimated net proceeds from the 2024 Merger and the Concurrent Financing, will be sufficient to fund Candid's operating expenses and capital expenditures through 2030. However, Candid's forecast of the period of time through which its financial resources will be adequate to support its operations is a forward-looking statement that involves risks and uncertainties, and actual results could differ materially. Candid has based this estimate on assumptions that may prove to be wrong, and Candid could use its capital resources sooner than it currently expects, requiring it to seek additional funds sooner than planned. Candid may also decide to raise capital opportunistically. Additionally, the process of testing drug candidates in clinical trials is costly, and the timing of progress and costs to conduct these trials is uncertain.

Candid's future capital requirements will depend on many factors, including but not limited to:

- the number, scope, rate of progress and costs of its planned clinical trials for cizutamig, CND261, CND319, CND460 and drug discovery and preclinical development activities for any future drug candidates;
- the number and scope of clinical programs it decides to pursue;
- the scope and costs of manufacturing development for any of its current or future drug candidates, including commercial manufacturing at scale, if any drug candidate receives marketing approval, including as a result of inflation or any supply chain issues;
- the costs associated with hiring additional personnel and consultants as its business grows, including additional research and development personnel;
- the cost, timing and outcome of regulatory review of cizutamig, CND261, CND319, CND460 and any future drug candidates;
- the costs of preparing, filing and prosecuting patent applications, maintaining and enforcing its intellectual property rights and defending intellectual property-related claims;
- the terms and timing of establishing and maintaining collaborations, licenses and other similar arrangements;
- the timing of any milestone and royalty payments to its existing or future suppliers, collaborators or licensors;
- the costs associated with enhancing its operational systems and being a public company;
- the extent to which it acquires or in-licenses other drug candidates and technologies; and
- the costs associated with commercializing cizutamig, CND261, CND319, CND460 or any future drug candidates, if they receive marketing approval.

Until such time, if ever, as Candid can generate substantial revenue to support its cost structure, Candid expects to finance its cash needs through public or private equity or debt financings, or other sources, potentially including collaborations and other strategic arrangements with third parties. To the extent that Candid raises additional capital through the sale of equity or convertible debt securities, the ownership interest of its stockholders could be diluted, and the terms of these securities may include liquidation or other preferences that adversely affect the rights of Candid's common stockholders. Debt financing and equity financing, if available, may involve agreements that include covenants limiting or restricting Candid's ability to take specific actions, such as incurring additional debt, making capital expenditures or declaring dividends. If Candid raises funds through collaborations, or other similar arrangements with third parties, it may have to relinquish valuable rights to its technologies, future revenue streams, research programs or drug candidates or grant licenses on terms that may not be favorable to it and/or may reduce the value of its common stock. If Candid is unable to raise additional funds through equity or debt financings on acceptable terms when needed, it may be required to delay, limit, reduce or terminate its drug development or future commercialization efforts or grant rights to develop and market cizutamig, CND261, CND319, CND460 or any future drug candidates even if it would otherwise prefer to develop and market such drug candidates ourselves.

Contractual Obligations and Commitments

Candid's operating lease obligations relate to its office space for its headquarters located in San Diego, California, as well as office space in Shanghai, China.

Under its license and collaboration agreements, Candid has payment obligations that are contingent upon future events, such as the achievement of specified development, regulatory and commercial milestones, and Candid is required to make royalty payments in connection with the sales of products developed under those agreements.

Although Candid could be required to make substantial milestone payments under its license and collaboration agreements as of December 31, 2025, it is unable to estimate the timing or likelihood of achieving the milestones or making future product sales. For additional details regarding these agreements, see the section titled "Candid's Business—License and Collaboration Agreements."

Candid has entered into, or may enter into in the future, contracts in the normal course of business with clinical trial sites and clinical supply manufacturers and with vendors for preclinical studies and clinical trials, research supplies and other services and drugs for operating purposes. These contracts generally provide for termination after a notice period, and, therefore, are cancelable contracts.

For additional information regarding Candid's contractual obligations and commitments, see Note 4 and Note 6 to Candid's consolidated financial statements included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

Off-Balance Sheet Arrangements

Candid did not have, during the periods presented, and does not currently have any off-balance sheet arrangements, as defined in the rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The Predecessors did not have any off-balance sheet arrangements during the period presented.

Critical Accounting Policies and Estimates

This management's discussion and analysis of financial condition and results of operations is based on the financial statements of Candid, Vignette and TRC, which have been prepared in accordance with U.S. generally accepted accounting principles ("GAAP"). The preparation of these consolidated financial statements requires estimates and judgments that affect the reported amounts of assets, liabilities and expenses and the disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities in the consolidated financial statements. On an ongoing basis, evaluations of estimates and judgments are performed, including those related to accrued research and development expenses and various fair value measurements. The estimates are based on historical experience, known trends and events, and various other factors that are believed to be reasonable under the circumstances, the results of which form the basis for making judgments about the carrying values of assets and liabilities that are not readily apparent from other sources. Actual results may differ from these estimates under different assumptions or conditions.

While Candid's significant accounting policies are described in more detail in Note 2 to its consolidated financial statements appearing elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus, Candid believes the following accounting policies and estimates to be most critical to the preparation of its consolidated financial statements. The significant accounting policies of the Predecessors are described in more detail in Note 1 to their financial statements appearing elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

The critical accounting policies and estimates of Vignette and TRC are substantially the same as those of Candid, except as noted below related to the valuation of capital stock. The Predecessors had no material accrued research and development expenses.

Accrued research and development expenses

As part of the process of preparing Candid's consolidated financial statements, Candid is required to estimate its accrued expenses as of each balance sheet date. This process involves reviewing open contracts and purchase orders, communicating with its personnel to identify services that have been performed on its behalf and estimating the level of service performed and the associated cost incurred for the service when it has not yet been invoiced or otherwise notified of the actual cost. Candid makes estimates of its accrued expenses as of each balance sheet date based on facts and circumstances known to it at that time. Candid periodically confirms the accuracy of its estimates with the service providers and, if necessary, makes adjustments. The significant estimates in its accrued research and development expenses includes the costs incurred for services performed by its vendors in connection with research and development activities for which Candid has not yet been invoiced. Candid bases its expenses related to research and development activities on its estimates of the services received and efforts expended pursuant to quotes and contracts with vendors that conduct research and development on its behalf. The financial terms of these agreements are subject to negotiation, vary from contract to contract and may result in uneven payment flows. There may be instances in which payments made to its vendors will exceed the level of services provided and result in a prepayment of the research and development expense. In accruing service fees, Candid estimates the time period over which services will be performed and the level of effort to be expended in each period. If the actual timing of the performance of services or the level of effort varies from its estimate, Candid adjusts the accrual or prepaid expense accordingly. Advance payments for goods and services that will be used in future research and development activities are expensed when the activity has been performed or when the goods have been received rather than when the payment is made.

Although Candid does not expect its estimates to be materially different from amounts actually incurred, if its estimates of the status and timing of services performed differ from the actual status and timing of services performed, it could result in Candid reporting amounts that are too high or too low in any particular period. To date, there have been no material differences between Candid's estimates of such expenses and the amounts actually incurred.

Business Combinations and Asset Acquisitions

Acquisitions of assets or a group of assets that do not meet the definition of a business are accounted for as asset acquisitions, with a cost accumulation model used to determine the cost of the acquisition. For an asset acquisition, the fair value of acquisition consideration is allocated to the identifiable assets acquired and liabilities assumed at cost on a relative fair value basis. If a single asset is acquired, the entire cost is attributed to the acquired asset. In addition, for such asset acquisitions, no goodwill is recognized, acquisition-related costs are capitalized, and any associated contingent consideration is recorded when the underlying contingencies have been resolved. Common stock and preferred stock issued as consideration in an acquisition of assets are measured based on the acquisition date fair value of the equity interests. Intangible assets that are acquired in an asset acquisition for use in research and development activities that have an alternative future use are capitalized as IPR&D. Acquired IPR&D that has no alternative future use is expensed immediately.

Stock-based Compensation Expense

Candid measures its stock-based awards based on the estimated grant date fair value of the awards. For stock-based awards with only service conditions, compensation expense is recognized over the requisite service period using the straight-line method. For stock-based awards that include performance conditions, compensation expense is not recognized until the performance condition is probable to occur. Candid estimates the fair value of restricted common stock based on the fair value of the underlying common stock and the fair value of stock options using the Black-Scholes option pricing model and recognizes forfeitures of stock-based awards as they occur. Estimating the fair value of equity awards as of the grant date using valuation models, such as the Black-Scholes option pricing model, is affected by assumptions regarding a number of variables, including the risk-free interest rate, the expected stock price volatility, the expected term of stock options, the expected dividend yield and the fair value of the underlying common stock on the date of grant. Changes in the assumptions can materially affect the fair value and ultimately how much stock-based compensation expense is recognized. See Note 8 to Candid's consolidated financial statements included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus for information concerning certain of the specific assumptions Candid used in applying the Black-Scholes option pricing model to determine the estimated fair value of its stock options granted for the period from May 1, 2024 (inception) to December 31, 2024 and the year ended December 31, 2025. As of December 31, 2025, the total unrecognized stock-based compensation expense for outstanding performance-based options was $4.3 million. As of December 31, 2025, total unrecognized stock-based compensation expense (excluding performance-based options) was $6.1 million, which is expected to be recognized over a remaining weighted-average period of approximately 2.6 years.

Neither Vignette nor TRC had stock-based compensation expense during the periods presented for those entities.

Fair Value of Capital Stock

The fair value of the capital stock issued in the transactions described below was determined using methodologies, approaches and assumptions consistent with the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants Accounting and Valuation Guide: Valuation of Privately Held Company Equity Securities Issued as Compensation (the Practice Aid). The Practice Aid prescribes several valuation approaches for setting the value of an enterprise, such as the cost, income and market approaches, and various methodologies for allocating the value of an enterprise to its capital stock. The cost approach establishes the value of an enterprise based on the cost of reproducing or replacing the property less depreciation and functional or economic obsolescence, if present. The income approach establishes the value of an enterprise based on the present value of future cash flows that are reasonably reflective of our company's future operations, discounting to the present value with an appropriate risk adjusted discount rate or capitalization rate. The market approach is based on the assumption that the value of an asset is equal to the value of a substitute asset with the same characteristics. Each valuation methodology was considered in each of the following valuations.

TRC

In July and August 2024, TRC issued common stock in connection with a license agreement and various sales of common stock. After considering TRC's Series A preferred stock financing with new and existing investors in August 2024, and the potential of a merger and acquisition ("M&A") transaction, TRC concluded a hybrid method utilizing both M&A and alternative exit scenarios was most appropriate. The hybrid method is useful when certain discrete future outcomes can be predicted, but also accounts for uncertainty regarding the timing or likelihood of specific alternative exit events. The equity value in the M&A scenario was determined using the fully diluted backsolve method, which assumes the undiscounted fair value of all shares the company are equal to the most recent round of financing on a fully diluted basis. The equity value in the alternative exit scenario was determined using the backsolve method that considers the rights and preferences of each class of equity and solving for the total market value of invested capital that is consistent with a recent transaction in the company's own securities. The equity value in the alternative exit scenario was allocated using the option pricing method, whereby shares are valued by creating a series of call options with exercise prices based on the liquidation preferences and conversion terms of each equity class. The values of the preferred and common stock are inferred by analyzing these options.

Candid

In August 2024, in connection with the 2024 Merger described above, Candid issued capital stock as consideration in the transaction. After considering Candid's Series B preferred stock financing in August 2024 with new investors, and a potential initial public offering ("IPO"), Candid concluded a hybrid method utilizing both IPO and alternative exit scenarios was most appropriate. The hybrid method is useful when certain discrete future outcomes can be predicted, but also accounts for uncertainty regarding the timing or likelihood of specific alternative exit events. The equity value in the IPO scenario was determined using the fully diluted backsolve method, which assumes that all shares in Candid are equal to the most recent round of financing on a fully diluted basis. The equity value in the alternative exit scenario was determined using the backsolve method that considers the rights and preferences of each class of equity and solving for the total market value of invested capital that is consistent with a recent transaction in Candid's own securities, considering the rights and preferences of each class of equity. The equity value in the alternative exit scenario was allocated using the option pricing method, whereby shares are valued by creating a series of call options with exercise prices based on the liquidation preferences and conversion terms of each equity class. The values of the preferred and common stock are inferred by analyzing these options.

Determination of the fair value of common stock underlying stock-based awards

Candid is required to estimate the fair value of the common stock underlying its stock-based awards when performing fair value calculations. The fair value of the common stock underlying its stock-based awards was determined on each grant date by its board of directors, taking into account input from management and independent third-party valuation analyses. All options to purchase shares of its common stock are intended to be granted with an exercise price per share no less than the fair value per share of its common stock underlying those options on the date of grant, based on the information known to it on the date of grant. In the absence of a public trading market for its common stock, on each grant date Candid developed an estimate of the fair value of its common stock in order to determine an exercise price for the option grants. As noted above, Candid's determinations of the fair value of its common stock were made using methodologies, approaches and assumptions consistent with the Practice Aid.

In addition to considering the results of independent third-party valuations, our board of directors considered various objective and subjective factors, along with input from management, to determine the fair value of our common stock as of each grant date, including:

- the prices of Candid's convertible preferred stock sold to investors in arm's length transactions and the rights, preferences and privileges of our convertible preferred stock relative to those of Candid's common stock;
- Candid's stage of development and business strategy and the material risks related to its business and industry;
- the progress of Candid's research and development programs, including the status of preclinical studies and clinical trials for Candid's drug candidates;
- Candid's results of operations and financial position, including its levels of available capital resources;
- the valuation of publicly traded companies in the life sciences and biotechnology sectors, as well as recently completed mergers and acquisitions of peer companies;
- the lack of marketability of Candid's common stock as a private company;
- the likelihood of achieving a liquidity event for the holders of Candid's common stock, such as an initial public offering or a sale of the company, given prevailing market conditions;
- trends and developments in Candid's industry;
- external market conditions affecting the life sciences and biotechnology industry sectors; and
- the economy in general.

The fair value of the common stock underlying Candid's stock-based awards for options granted or modified from October 2, 2024 (Candid's first option grant date) through May 4, 2025 was determined utilizing the model described above in connection with the 2024 Merger. To determine the fair value of the common stock underlying its stock-based awards for options granted or modified from May 5, 2025 through December 31, 2025, Candid continued to use a hybrid method utilizing both IPO and alternative exit scenarios. The methods used to determine the equity value in both the IPO scenario and alternative exit scenario were updated to reflect the time elapsed since its last sale of equity securities to third-party investors. As a result, the equity value in the IPO scenario was updated to use the guideline public company method, and the equity value in the alternative exit scenario was updated to use an adjusted enterprise value. To determine the adjusted enterprise value, the equity value used in the previous backsolve model was modified to reflect subsequent changes in the market environment and return on productive expenses since the equity financing that was the basis for the previous backsolve model. The equity value in the IPO scenario continued to be allocated to each class of shares using the fully-diluted shares outstanding and the equity value in the alternative exit scenario continued to be allocated using the option pricing method.

On May 5, 2025, Candid repriced 5,595,000 options to purchase shares of its common stock to lower the exercise price. The modification resulted in an increase of $0.3 million in the fair value of the repriced stock options. There were no vested options at the modification date and, as such, the incremental fair value will be recognized over the remaining requisite service period of the awards.

Retrospective reassessment of the fair value of our common stock for financial reporting purposes

As part of the preparation of the consolidated financial statements necessary for inclusion in this proxy statement/prospectus, Candid reassessed for financial reporting purposes, on a retrospective basis, the fair value of its common stock for each stock option granted or modified. For purposes of this reassessment, Candid evaluated its original inputs and the methodologies used to determine its enterprise value, the methods it used to allocate enterprise value and the timing of those valuations. Candid utilized the reassessed fair values to determine the stock-based compensation expense which is recorded in its consolidated financial statements.

There are significant judgments and estimates inherent in the determination of the fair value of capital stock. These judgments and estimates include assumptions regarding future operating performance, the time to complete an initial public offering or other liquidity event and the determination of the appropriate valuation methods. If Candid had made different assumptions, its stock-based compensation expense, net loss and net loss per common share could have been significantly different.

Following the completion of the Merger, the fair value of the Combined Company's common stock will be based on the closing price as reported on the date of grant on the primary stock exchange on which the Combined Company's common stock is traded.

Recent Accounting Pronouncements

See Note 2 to Candid's consolidated financial statements appearing elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus for information about recent account pronouncements, the timing of their adoption, and its assessment, if any, of their potential impact on Candid's financial condition and results of operations.

Quantitative and Qualitative Disclosures About Market Risk

Interest Rate Risk

Candid's cash, cash equivalents and short-term investments consist of cash held in readily available checking and money market funds, as well as high-quality U.S. treasury securities and corporate debt securities. The primary objectives of Candid's investment activities are to preserve principal, provide liquidity and maximize income without significantly increasing risk. Candid's primary exposure to market risk is interest rate sensitivity, which is affected by changes in the general level of United States interest rates. However, due to the nature of the cash, cash equivalents, and short-term investments, Candid does not believe that a hypothetical 10% change in interest rates during any of the period presented would have had a material effect on Candid's consolidated financial statements included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

Effects of Inflation

Inflation generally affects Candid by increasing its cost of labor and research and development costs. Candid does not believe that inflation had a material effect on its business, results of operations, or financial condition, or on its consolidated financial statements included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

Family Relationships

There are no family relationships among any of Candid's current directors and executive officers, and there are no family relationships among any of the combined company's proposed directors and executive officers.

Composition of the Board of Directors Following the Merger

The Rallybio Board is divided into three classes, which staggered structure will remain in place following the Closing. Each class has a three-year term, with one class elected at each annual meeting. Vacancies on the combined company board of directors and newly-created directorships shall be filled exclusively pursuant to a vote of a majority of the directors then in office, even if less than a quorum, or by a sole remaining director, except that any vacancy created by the removal of a director by the stockholders for cause shall be filled, in addition to any other vote otherwise required by law, only by vote of a majority of the outstanding shares of common stock. No decrease in the number of directors constituting the combined company board of directors shall shorten the term of any incumbent director. A director elected to fill a vacancy shall be elected for the unexpired term of his or her predecessor in office and a director chosen to fill a position resulting from an increase in the number of directors shall hold office until the next election of the class for which such director shall have been chosen, subject to the election and qualification of his or her successor and to his or her earlier death, resignation or removal.

Pursuant to the Merger Agreement, each of the directors and officers of Rallybio shall resign immediately prior to the Effective Time. Following the completion of the Merger, Candid anticipates that the combined company board of directors will consist of six directors, all of whom will be designated by Candid. Candid currently expects that all of its current directors will continue to serve as directors on the combined company board of directors following the Merger.

Independence of the Board of Directors

Nasdaq Rule 5605 requires a majority of a listed company's board of directors to be comprised of independent directors. In addition, Nasdaq requires that, subject to specified exceptions, each member of a listed company's audit, compensation and nominating and corporate governance committees be independent and that audit committee members also satisfy independence criteria set forth in Rule 10A-3 under the Exchange Act. Under Rule 5605(a)(2), a director will only qualify as an "independent director" if, in the opinion of the company, that person does not have a relationship that would interfere with the exercise of independent judgment in carrying out the responsibilities of a director. In order to be considered independent for purposes of Rule 10A-3, a member of an audit committee of a listed company may not, other than in his or her capacity as a member of the audit committee, the board of directors, or any other board committee, accept, directly or indirectly, any consulting, advisory, or other compensatory fee from the listed company or any of its subsidiaries or otherwise be an affiliated person of the listed company or any of its subsidiaries.

Each individual expected to serve on the combined company board of directors upon the completion of the Merger, other than Ken Song, M.D., will qualify as an independent director under the Nasdaq listing standards.

Board Leadership Structure

Candid expects that the combined company board will maintain the flexibility to determine whether the roles of Chair of the combined company board and Chief Executive Officer should be combined or separated, based on what it believes is in the best interests of the combined company at a given point in time. Candid believes that this flexibility is in the best interest of the combined company and that a one-size-fits-all approach to corporate governance, with a mandated independent Chair, would not result in better governance or oversight.

At this time, the Candid believes that Ken Song, M.D., Candid's current President and Chief Executive Officer and the expected President and Chief Executive Officer of the combined company, is best situated to serve as Chair of the combined company board of directors. Dr. Song is highly knowledgeable and has longstanding experience with respect to Candid's business, operations and industry and is expected to have an ongoing executive responsibility for the combined company. Dr. Song is well positioned to identify strategic priorities and lead the combined company's consideration and analysis of such priorities. In addition, Dr. Song offers a robust understanding of risks facing Candid and risks that the combined company will face. In Candid's view, this enables the combined company board of directors to better understand the combined company and work with management to enhance stockholder value. In addition, the Candid believes that this structure will enable the combined company to better fulfill its risk oversight responsibilities and enhances the ability of the President and Chief Executive Officer to effectively communicate the combined company board of director's view to management.

Candid expects that _____ will be appointed as the lead independent director of the combined company to help reinforce the independence of the combined company board of directors as a whole. The position of lead independent director is expected to be structured to serve as an effective balance to a combined Chief Executive Officer/Chair of the combined company board of directors: the lead independent director will be empowered to, among other duties and responsibilities, preside over board meetings in the absence of the Chair, act as liaison between the Chair and the independent directors, preside over meetings of the independent directors, and consult with the Chair in planning and setting schedules and agendas for board meetings to be held during the year. As a result, Candid believes that the lead independent director will help ensure the effective independent functioning of the combined company board of directors in its oversight responsibilities. In addition, Candid believes that the lead independent director will be better positioned to build a consensus among directors and to serve as a conduit between the other independent directors and the Chair of the combined company board of directors, for example, by facilitating the inclusion on meeting agendas of matters of concern to the independent directors. In light of Dr. Song's extensive history with and knowledge of Candid, and because the combined company board of directors' lead independent director will be empowered to play a significant role in the combined company board of directors' leadership and in reinforcing the independence of the combined company board of directors, Candid believes that it will be advantageous for the combined company to combine the positions of Chief Executive Officer and Chair of the combined company board of directors.

Role of the Board in Risk Oversight

The audit committee of the combined company board of directors is expected to be primarily responsible for overseeing the risk management processes on behalf of its board of directors. Candid expects that the audit committee of the combined company board of directors will receive reports from management periodically regarding the assessment of risks of the combined company. In addition, the audit committee will be expected to report regularly to the combined company board of directors, which will also consider its risk profile. The audit committee and the combined company board of directors will focus on the most significant risks the combined company faces and its general risk management strategies. While the combined company board of directors will oversee the combined company's risk management, management will be responsible for day-to-day risk management processes. The combined company board of directors will expect management to consider risk and risk management in each business decision, to proactively develop and monitor risk management strategies and processes for day-to-day activities and to effectively implement risk management strategies adopted by the audit committee and the combined company board of directors. Candid believe this division of responsibilities will be the most effective approach for addressing the risks the combined company faces and that the combined company board of directors' leadership structure, which also emphasizes the independence of the combined company board of directors in its oversight of its business and affairs, supports this approach.

Policies and Procedures for Transactions with Related Persons

Following the Closing, combined company plans to adopt a new written related-person transactions policy that sets forth its policies and procedures regarding the identification, review, consideration and oversight of "related-person transactions." For purposes of the combined company's policy only, a "related-person transaction" will be a transaction, arrangement or relationship (or any series of similar transactions, arrangements or relationships) in which the combined company and any "related person" are participants involving an amount that exceeds the lesser of $120,000 and 1% of the average of the combined company's total assets at year-end for the last two completed fiscal years. Transactions involving compensation for services provided to the combined company as an employee, consultant or director will not be considered related-person transactions under this policy. A related person will be any executive officer, director, nominee to become a director or a holder of more than five percent of the combined company's common stock, including any of their immediate family members and affiliates, including entities owned or controlled by such persons.

Under the policy, it is expected that where a transaction has been identified as a related-person transaction, management will need to present information regarding the proposed related-person transaction to the combined company's audit committee (or, where review by the combined company's audit committee would be inappropriate, to another independent body of the combined company's board of directors) for review. The presentation will need to include a description of, among other things, all of the parties thereto, the direct and indirect interests of the related persons, the purpose of the transaction, the material facts, the benefits of the transaction to the combined company and whether any alternative transactions are available, an assessment of whether the terms are comparable to the terms available from unrelated third parties and management's recommendation. To identify related-person transactions in advance, the combined company will rely on information supplied by its executive officers, directors and certain significant stockholders. In considering related-person transactions, the combined company's audit committee or another independent body of the combined company's board of directors will take into account the relevant available facts and circumstances including, but not limited to:

- the risks, costs and benefits to the combined company;

- the impact on a director's independence in the event the related person is a director, immediate family member of a director or an entity with which a director is affiliated;
- the terms of the transaction;
- the availability of other sources for comparable services or products; and
- the terms available to or from, as the case may be, unrelated third parties.

In the event a director has an interest in the proposed transaction, the director will need to recuse himself or herself from the deliberations and approval.

Policies for Approval of Related Party Transactions

The Rallybio Board has adopted a written related person transaction policy setting forth the policies and procedures for the review and approval or ratification of related person transactions. This policy covers, with certain exceptions set forth in Item 404 of Regulation S-K under the Securities Act, any transaction, arrangement or relationship, or any series of similar transactions, arrangements or relationships, in which we were or are to be a participant, where the amount involved exceeds the lesser of (i) $120,000 or (ii) one percent of the average of Rallybio's total assets at year end for the last two completed fiscal years, in any fiscal year and a related person had, has or will have a direct or indirect material interest, including without limitation, purchases of goods or services by or from the related person or entities in which the related person has a material interest, indebtedness, guarantees of indebtedness and employment by us of a related person. In reviewing and approving any such transactions, the audit committee is tasked with considering all relevant facts and circumstances, including, but not limited to, whether the transaction is on terms comparable to those that could be obtained in an arm's length transaction and the extent of the related person's interest in the transaction.

UNAUDITED PRO FORMA CONDENSED COMBINED FINANCIAL INFORMATION

Defined terms included below shall have the same meaning as terms defined and included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

Introduction

On March 1, 2026, Rallybio, Merger Sub, and Candid entered into the Merger Agreement, pursuant to which, and subject to the satisfaction or waiver of the conditions set forth in the Merger Agreement, Merger Sub will merge with and into Candid, with Candid surviving as a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio. The Merger is expected to close in the second quarter of 2026 following the effectiveness of this registration statement, receipt of approval by the stockholders of each of Rallybio and Candid and the satisfaction or waiver of the other conditions to the Merger. Upon completion of the Merger, the business of Candid will continue as the business of the combined company. After the completion of the Merger, Rallybio expects to change its corporate name from "Rallybio Corporation" to "Candid Therapeutics, Inc."

Subject to the terms and conditions of the Merger Agreement, at the Effective Time:

- Each outstanding share of Candid Capital Stock (other than the shares issued in the Concurrent Financing) will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Exchange Ratio.
- Each outstanding share of Candid Common Stock issued in the Concurrent Financing will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio.
- Each outstanding share of Candid Common Stock that is unvested or subject to a repurchase option or a risk of forfeiture, will be exchanged for the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock based on the Exchange Ratio, and will to the same extent be unvested and subject to the same repurchase option or risk of forfeiture.
- Each outstanding and unexercised stock option to purchase Candid Common Stock will be assumed by Rallybio and will be converted into an option to purchase the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock with an exercise price, both of which are based on the Exchange Ratio, and will to the same extent otherwise remain unchanged as to the term, exercisability, vesting schedule and other provisions of such stock options.

In connection with the Merger, Candid entered into the Subscription Agreement with the Investors, and Rallybio expects to enter into the Rallybio CVR Agreement.

Each of the Exchange Ratio and the Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio is assumed to be 0.0716 shares of Rallybio Common Stock for each share of Candid Capital Stock upon the Closing and is subject to the assumptions set forth below. Under the expected Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company, and the Investors are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. In addition, a proposed reverse stock split at a ratio of 1-for-2.5 has been assumed as discussed below.

Rallybio will ask its stockholders to approve an amendment to its amended and restated certificate of incorporation to effect the reverse stock split. Upon the effectiveness of the amendment to its amended and restated certificate of incorporation effecting the reverse stock split, the outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock will be reduced by a ratio to be agreed upon by Rallybio and Candid. For purposes of the unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information a reverse stock split of 1-for-2.5 has been assumed, and any references herein to the proposed reverse stock split shall account for such assumption.

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information gives effect to the Merger, which is expected to be accounted for as a reverse recapitalization under GAAP, as well as the Concurrent Financing and assumes the proposed reverse stock split at a ratio of 1-for-2.5. For further details related to the accounting for the Merger see Notes 1 and 3 below. All share amounts have been adjusted to reflect the estimated Exchange Ratio of 0.0716 shares of Rallybio Common Stock for each share of Candid Capital Stock, unless otherwise stated.

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined balance sheet assumes that the Merger took place on December 31, 2025, and combines the historical balance sheets of Rallybio and Candid as of such date. The unaudited pro forma condensed combined statements of operations for the year ended December 31, 2025 assume that the Merger took place as of January 1, 2025, and combines the historical results of Rallybio and Candid for the year ended December 31, 2025. The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information was prepared pursuant to the rules and regulations of Rule 8-05 and Article 11 of SEC Regulation S-X.

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information, including the notes thereto, should be read in conjunction with the separate historical financial statements of Rallybio and Candid, and their respective management's discussion and analysis of financial condition and results of operations included elsewhere in this proxy statement/prospectus.

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information is based on the assumptions and adjustments that are described in the accompanying notes. The pro forma adjustments are preliminary, subject to further revision as additional information becomes available and additional analyses are performed including but not limited to changes in Rallybio's assets and liabilities, additional financing, additional direct and incremental offering costs and the final reverse stock split. Adjustments have been made solely for the purpose of providing unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information. Differences between these preliminary estimates and the final accounting expected to be completed after the Closing may occur, and these differences could have a material impact on the accompanying unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information.

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information does not give effect to the potential impact of current financial conditions, regulatory matters, operating efficiencies or other savings or expenses that may be associated with the integration of the two companies. The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information is not necessarily indicative of the financial position or results of operations in the future periods or the result that actually would have been realized had Rallybio and Candid been a combined organization during the specified period. The actual results reported in periods following the Merger may differ significantly from those reflected in the unaudited condensed combined pro forma financial information presented herein for a number of reasons, including, but not limited to, differences in the assumptions used to prepare this unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information.

- Each outstanding share of Candid Common Stock issued in the Concurrent Financing will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock equal to the Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio.
- Each outstanding share of Candid Common Stock that is unvested or subject to a repurchase option or a risk of forfeiture, will be exchanged for the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock based on the Exchange Ratio, and will to the same extent be unvested and subject to the same repurchase option or risk of forfeiture.
- Each outstanding and unexercised stock option to purchase Candid Common Stock will be assumed by Rallybio and will be converted into an option to purchase the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock with an exercise price, both of which are based on the Exchange Ratio, and will to the same extent otherwise remain unchanged as to the term, exercisability, vesting schedule and other provisions of such stock options.

In connection with the Merger, Rallybio equity awards are expected to be accelerated and fully vested prior to the Closing, after giving effect to the proposed reverse stock split of Rallybio Common Stock at an assumed ratio of 1-for-2.5 to be implemented prior to the Closing.

Anticipated Concurrent Financing

Concurrent with the execution and delivery of the Merger Agreement, Candid and the Investors executed the Subscription Agreement, pursuant to which the Investors agreed to purchase shares of Candid Common Stock immediately prior to the Closing, for aggregate gross cash proceeds of $505.5 million before estimated expenses, subject to no less than $450.0 million in aggregate gross cash proceeds. Approximately 360.7 million shares of Candid Common Stock before giving effect to the Exchange Ratio, at an estimated purchase price of $1.40 per share are expected to be issued immediately prior to or concurrent with the Closing.

The following table summarizes the pro forma number of shares of common stock of the combined company expected to be outstanding immediately upon the consummation of the Merger on a fully diluted basis using the treasury stock method, assuming (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid, (iv) the anticipated proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million and (v) a proposed reverse stock split of Rallybio Common Stock at an assumed ratio of 1-for-2.5 to be implemented prior to the Closing:

Concurrent Financing stockholders	25,836,096	38.80%
Total shares of common stock of the combined company	66,590,897	100.00%

Consummation of the Merger is subject to certain closing conditions, including but not limited to, approval by Rallybio stockholders, approval by Candid stockholders, Nasdaq's approval of the listing of the shares of Rallybio Common Stock to be issued in connection with the Merger, the Concurrent Financing with cash proceeds of at least $200.0 million, and the effectiveness of the registration statement of which this proxy statement/prospectus forms a part.

The employment agreements for Rallybio employees include entitlement to change in control payments for certain executives and severance for certain non-executives, which is expected to be treated as pre-Merger compensation expense of Rallybio and reflected as a reduction in cash of Rallybio. Prior to the Closing, Rallybio also has or expects to (i) discontinue its research and development activities, and (ii) close out and terminate all contracts related to Rallybio's clinical trials. To the extent such severance costs and any other termination costs are not settled in cash by Rallybio prior to Closing, they will be assumed by the combined company at Closing and adjusted through Rallybio's valuation.

Contingent Value Rights Agreement

During the year ended December 31, 2025, Rallybio sold Rallybio's REV102 to Recursion in July 2025. In connection with the sale, Rallybio recorded contract assets related to potential future proceeds from the sale in the amount of $3.0 million, representing the Legacy Assets.

Immediately prior to the Closing, Rallybio expects to enter into the Rallybio CVR Agreement, pursuant to which holders of Rallybio Common Stock, pre-funded warrants, restricted stock units and in the money stock options will receive one Rallybio CVR for each outstanding share, or share underlying such pre-funded warrant or equity award held. Each Rallybio CVR holder will be entitled to receive on a pro rata basis a share of all of the net proceeds, if any, received by Rallybio from (i) upfront, milestone, or royalty fees under any disposition agreements related to the Legacy Assets, and (ii) all of the cash proceeds, if any, received from Recursion related to the sale of Rallybio's REV102 in July 2025. The combined company will use commercially reasonable efforts to effect the disposition of the Legacy Assets for a period of one year after the Closing.

The Company concluded that the Rallybio CVRs represent financial instruments and anticipates that they will be accounted for at fair value. Accordingly, the Rallybio CVRs will be remeasured, with changes in fair value, if any, reflected in the consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss, as of each reporting period date. The estimated fair value of the Rallybio CVR liability was determined using the discounted cash flow method to estimate future cash flows associated with the Legacy Assets and those arising from the sale of REV102, including the expected milestone and royalty payments. The fair value of the Rallybio CVR liability arising from the sale of REV102 is estimated to be equal to the book value of the related contract asset of $3.0 million. The fair value of the CVR liability related to any remaining Legacy Assets is immaterial.

As a result of the Merger, such Rallybio CVR liabilities represent an obligation because they are expected to be issued to pre-Closing Rallybio equityholders, and the combined company will not be entitled to any proceeds (other than reimbursement for any reasonable disposition costs).

Note 2—Basis of Pro Forma Presentation

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information has been prepared in accordance with Article 11 of Regulation S-X and depicts the proposed reverse stock split and accounting for the Merger ("Transaction Accounting Adjustments"). The unaudited pro forma condensed combined balance sheet as of December 31, 2025 assumes that the proposed reverse stock split and Merger had been approved or consummated on December 31, 2025. The unaudited pro forma condensed combined statement of operations for the year ended December 31, 2025 assumes that the proposed reverse stock split and Merger took place as of January 1, 2025, and combines the historical results of Rallybio and Candid for the year ended December 31, 2025.

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information is based on the assumptions and adjustments that are described in the accompanying notes. The pro forma adjustments are subject to further revision as additional information becomes available and additional analyses are performed, including but not limited to changes in Rallybio's assets and liabilities, additional financing, additional direct and incremental offering costs and the final reverse stock split. Adjustments have been made solely for the purpose of providing unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information. There will be differences between the pro forma adjustments and the final accounting expected to be completed after the Closing, and such differences could be material.

Note 3—Accounting for the Merger

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information gives effect to the Merger, which is expected to be accounted for under GAAP as an in-substance reverse recapitalization of Candid. The treatment as an in-substance reverse recapitalization is based on the assessment that as a result of Rallybio's discontinuation of its research and development activities and settlement of its other remaining operating assets and liabilities, immediately prior to the Closing, Rallybio is expected to have nominal operations and nominal assets, apart from cash and cash equivalents and marketable securities. Under a reverse recapitalization, Candid is considered to effect a financing transaction in exchange for issuing equity.

Rallybio is not considered to be the accounting acquirer in the Merger based on the following considerations:

- Candid stockholders will own a majority of the voting rights of the combined company.
- Candid will designate all initial members of the board of directors of the combined company.
- Candid's executive management team will become the executive management team of the combined company.
- The combined company will be renamed "Candid Therapeutics, Inc." and its headquarters will be Candid's current headquarters, in San Diego, California.

As the transaction is a reverse recapitalization, Candid's assets and liabilities will be carried into the books of Rallybio at their pre-combination carrying amounts. Candid's historical equity carrying values will become the equity of the combined company, with the number of shares outstanding and the common stock aggregate par value adjusted for the effects of the exchange of Candid Capital Stock for Rallybio's Common Stock. For periods prior to the Closing, the historical financial statements of Candid will become the historical financial statements of the combined company.

The assets and liabilities of Rallybio will be adjusted upon completion of the Merger to their fair values, which are expected to approximate their carrying values. No goodwill is recognized. The adjusted values of cash and cash equivalents, marketable securities and nominal other net assets acquired will be recorded as an adjustment to the post-Merger equity of the combined company.

With respect to the related Rallybio CVRs asset and liability, Management's preliminary conclusion is that (i) there is no value associated with the Rallybio CVRs related to any potential future disposition of any Legacy Assets as the likelihood of any payments received in connection with the Legacy Assets following the Closing is remote and (ii) the value associated with the Rallybio CVRs related to the disposition of the Legacy Assets in July 2025, has been recorded within prepaid and other current assets and other assets, noncurrent with a corresponding obligation recorded within accrued expenses and other current liabilities and other liabilities, noncurrent in the pro forma condensed combined balance sheet as of December 31, 2025.

Note 4—Shares of Rallybio Common Stock Issued to Candid Stockholders upon the Closing of the Merger

At Closing, all outstanding shares of Candid Capital Stock will be exchanged for shares of Rallybio Common Stock based on the preliminary estimated Exchange Ratio of 0.0716 shares of Rallybio Common Stock for each share of Candid Capital Stock and preliminary estimated Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio of 0.0716 (rounded) shares of Rallybio Common Stock for each share of Candid Common Stock issued in the Concurrent Financing, in each case, determined in accordance with the terms of the Merger Agreement and after giving effect to the proposed reverse stock split at an assumed ratio of 1-for-2.5. The estimated number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock that Rallybio expects to issue to Candid's stockholders assumes Rallybio Net Cash at Closing is $37.5 million, and is determined as follows:

Shares of Candid common stock issued ⁽¹⁾	141,521,816
Shares of Candid convertible preferred stock	367,005,749
Total Candid shares prior to Closing, pre-Exchange Ratio	508,527,565
Concurrent Financing, pre-Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio	360,658,753
Total Candid shares and Concurrent Financing prior to Closing, pre-Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio	869,186,318
Estimated Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio (rounded)	0.0716
Estimated shares expected to be issued to existing Candid stockholders and investors participating in Candid Concurrent Financing upon Closing	62,246,687

⁽¹⁾ Includes 141,472,337 shares of Candid Common Stock issued as of December 31, 2025, and 49,479 shares of Candid Common Stock issued after December 31, 2025 to February 28, 2026. Also includes shares of Candid's restricted common stock subject to vesting conditions that are legally issued.

Note 5—Pro Forma Adjustments

The unaudited pro forma condensed combined financial information has been prepared to illustrate the effect of the Merger based on preliminary estimates that could change materially as additional information is obtained.

Adjustments to the historical consolidated financial statements of Rallybio to conform to the accounting policies of Candid are not expected to be significant.

Pro Forma Adjustments to Unaudited Pro Forma Condensed Combined Balance Sheet

The adjustments included in the unaudited pro forma condensed combined balance sheet as of December 31, 2025, were as follows:

- (A) To reflect preliminary estimated incremental compensation expense of $5.4 million related to severance and change in control payments resulting from pre-existing employment agreements or severance plan arrangements that will be incurred upon the Closing as a reduction to cash and cash equivalents and a corresponding increase to accumulated deficit.
- (B) To reflect the anticipated proceeds in cash and cash equivalents and a corresponding increase to additional paid-in capital from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million effected immediately prior to or at the Closing, net of estimated transaction costs in the amount of $12.6 million.
- (C) To reflect the liability related to the Rallybio CVR that is payable to the pre-Closing Rallybio stockholders, and therefore is an obligation upon the Closing. The current and noncurrent liability in the aggregate amount of $3.0 million is reflected with a corresponding increase to accumulated deficit.
- (D) To reflect the preliminary estimated Merger-related transaction costs in the amount of $7.6 million, not reflected in the historical financial statements, that are expected to be incurred by Candid in connection with the Merger. These costs include advisory, legal, consulting and accounting and other professional fees that are direct and incremental and treated as a cost of raising equity since the Merger is accounted for as a reverse recapitalization, equivalent to the issuance of equity for the net assets of Rallybio. The $7.6 million is recognized as a liability and a corresponding reduction of the net proceeds received in additional paid-in capital.
- (E) To reflect the conversion of Candid's convertible preferred stock into Rallybio Common Stock in an aggregate amount of $427.7 million, recorded to common stock for the par value and additional paid-in capital of the combined company for the excess over the par value.
- (F) To reflect derecognition of Rallybio's historical accumulated deficit, and the recapitalization of Candid as additional paid-in capital.

The pro forma adjustments recorded to Rallybio's accumulated deficit as of December 31, 2025, were determined as follows (in thousands):

Rallybio's historical accumulated deficit	$301,998
Compensation expense related to Rallybio in connection with the Merger (Note A)	5,400
Recognition of liability related to CVR assets (Note C)	2,976
Rallybio's incremental stock-based compensation for acceleration of unvested awards (Note H)	578
Total adjustments to derecognize Rallybio's historical accumulated deficit	$310,952

The pro forma adjustments recorded to Rallybio's additional paid-in capital as of December 31, 2025, were determined as follows (in thousands):

Rallybio's additional paid-in capital	(359,932)

Compensation expense related to Rallybio in connection with the Merger (Note A)	(5,400)

Par value adjustment to historical Rallybio for proposed reverse stock split (Note J)	(4)
Total adjustments to derecognize Rallybio's historical additional paid-in capital	$ (310,934)

- (G) To adjust the par value of common stock of the combined company expected to be outstanding at the Closing.
- (H) To reflect incremental stock-based compensation in the amount of $0.6 million, not reflected in the historical financial statements, expected to be recognized on Closing related to the acceleration of Rallybio's equity awards in accumulated deficit and additional paid-in capital.
- (I) To reflect stock-based compensation in the amount of $1.7 million, not reflected in the historical financial statements, expected to be recognized on Closing related to a cumulative catch-up for Candid's equity awards with both service and liquidity performance based vesting conditions in accumulated deficit and additional paid-in capital.
- (J) To adjust the par value of Rallybio after giving effect to the proposed reverse stock split at an assumed ratio of 1-for-2.5.

Pro Forma Adjustments to Unaudited Pro Forma Condensed Combined Statement of Operations

The adjustments included in the unaudited pro forma condensed combined statement for the year ended December 31, 2025, were as follows:

- (BB) To reflect the recognition of $0.6 million estimated incremental stock-based compensation in research and development expense and in general and administrative expense, not reflected in the historical financial statements, due to the acceleration of Rallybio's equity awards.
- (CC) To reflect the recognition of $3.0 million in general and administrative expense for the liability related to the Rallybio CVRs that are expected to remain with pre-Closing Rallybio stockholders upon the Closing.
- (DD) To reflect the recognition of $5.4 million for estimated incremental compensation expense in general and administrative expense related to severance and change in control payments resulting from pre-existing employment agreements or severance plan arrangements that are expected to be incurred upon the Closing.

(EE) The pro forma basic and diluted net loss per common share have been adjusted to reflect the pro forma net loss for the year ended December 31, 2025. In addition, the number of shares used to calculate the pro forma basic and diluted net loss per common share has been adjusted to reflect the estimated total number of shares of common stock of the combined company that would be outstanding as of the date of the Closing, including the shares to be issued in the Concurrent Financing, as if they have been outstanding for the entirety of the period presented. For the year ended December 31, 2025, the pro forma weighted average common shares outstanding and pro forma net loss per common share, basic and diluted, were calculated as follows:

DESCRIPTION OF RALLYBIO CAPITAL STOCK

The following description of Rallybio Capital Stock and provisions of Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation and Rallybio's bylaws are summaries and are qualified by reference to such charter and bylaws and applicable provisions of the DGCL. Copies of Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation and Rallybio's bylaws are filed as exhibits to the registration statement of which this proxy statement/prospectus is a part.

General

Rallybio's authorized capital stock consists of 200,000,000 shares of Rallybio Common Stock, with a par value of $0.0001 per share, and 50,000,000 shares of preferred stock, with a par value of $0.0001 per share.

Common Stock

Holders of Rallybio Common Stock are entitled to one vote for each share held on all matters submitted to a vote of stockholders and do not have cumulative voting rights. An election of directors by Rallybio's stockholders shall be determined, in an uncontested election, by a majority of the votes cast by the stockholders entitled to vote on the election and, in a contested election, by a plurality of the votes cast by the stockholders entitled to vote on the election. Holders of Rallybio Common Stock are entitled to receive proportionately any dividends as may be declared by the Rallybio Board, subject to any preferential dividend rights of any series of preferred stock that Rallybio may designate and issue in the future.

In the event of our liquidation or dissolution, the holders of Rallybio Common Stock are entitled to receive an amount of Rallybio's net assets available for distribution to stockholders after the payment of all debts and other liabilities and subject to the prior rights of any outstanding preferred stock. Holders of Rallybio Common Stock have no preemptive, subscription, redemption or conversion rights. Outstanding shares of Rallybio Common Stock are validly issued, fully paid and nonassessable. The rights, preferences and privileges of holders of Rallybio Common Stock are subject to and may be adversely affected by the rights of the holders of shares of any series of preferred stock that Rallybio may designate and issue in the future.

Preferred Stock

Under the terms of Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation, the Rallybio Board is authorized to direct Rallybio to issue shares of preferred stock in one or more series without stockholder approval. The Rallybio Board has the discretion to determine the rights, preferences, privileges and restrictions, including voting rights, dividend rights, conversion rights, redemption privileges and liquidation preferences, of each series of preferred stock.

The purpose of authorizing the Rallybio Board to issue preferred stock and determine its rights and preferences is to eliminate delays associated with a stockholder vote on specific issuances. The issuance of preferred stock, while providing flexibility in connection with possible acquisitions, future financings and other corporate purposes, could have the effect of making it more difficult for a third-party to acquire, or could discourage a third-party from seeking to acquire, a majority of Rallybio's outstanding voting stock.

Pre-Funded Warrants

As of February 27, 2026, Rallybio had pre-funded warrants outstanding to purchase 416,673 shares of Rallybio Common Stock.

Each pre-funded warrant entitles the registered holder to purchase one share of Rallybio Common Stock at an exercise price of $0.0008 per share of Rallybio Common Stock. The exercise price of the pre-funded warrants and the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock issuable upon exercise of the pre-funded warrants is subject to appropriate adjustment in the event of certain stock dividends and distributions, stock splits, stock combinations, reclassifications or similar events affecting Rallybio Common Stock, as well as upon any distribution of assets, including cash, stock or other property, to Rallybio's stockholders. The pre-funded warrants have no expiration date and are exercisable, at the option of each holder, in whole or in part, by delivering notice and payment of the exercise price or by means of cashless exercise as further described in the pre-funded warrant.

Rallybio may not effect the exercise of any pre-funded warrant, and a holder will not be entitled to exercise any portion of any such warrant if, upon giving effect to such exercise, the aggregate number of shares of common stock beneficially owned by the holder (together with its affiliates, any other persons acting as a group together with the holder or any of the holder's affiliates, and any other persons whose beneficial ownership of common stock would or could be aggregated with the holder's for purposes of Section 13(d) or Section 16 of the Exchange Act) would exceed 9.99% of the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock outstanding immediately after giving effect to the exercise, as such percentage ownership is determined in accordance with the terms of such pre-funded warrant, which percentage may be increased or decreased at the holder's election upon 61 days' notice to us subject to the terms of such pre-funded warrants, provided that such percentage may in no event exceed 19.99%.

Upon the consummation of a fundamental transaction (as described in the pre-funded warrants), the pre-funded warrants will automatically be converted into the right of the holder of such pre-funded warrant to receive the same kind and amount of securities, cash or other property that such holders would have received had they exercised the pre-funded warrants immediately prior to such fundamental transaction, without regard to any limitations on exercise contained in the pre-funded warrants.

Subject to applicable laws, the pre-funded warrants may be offered for sale, sold, transferred or assigned without Rallybio's consent.

Anti-takeover Effects of Rallybio's Amended and Restated Certificate of Incorporation, Amended and Restated Bylaws and the DGCL

Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation and amended and restated bylaws contain certain provisions that are intended to enhance the likelihood of continuity and stability in the composition of the Rallybio Board, but which may have the effect of delaying, deferring or preventing a future takeover or change in control of Rallybio unless such takeover or change in control is approved by the Rallybio Board.

These provisions include:

Classified board. Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation provides that the Rallybio Board is divided into three classes of directors, with the classes as nearly equal in number as possible. As a result, approximately one-third of the Rallybio Board will be elected each year. The classification of directors will have the effect of making it more difficult for stockholders to change the composition of the Rallybio Board. Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation also provides that, subject to any rights of holders of preferred stock to elect additional directors under specified circumstances, the number of directors will be fixed exclusively pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Rallybio Board.

Action by written consent; special meetings of stockholders. Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation provides that stockholder action can be taken only at an annual or special meeting of stockholders and cannot be taken by written consent in lieu of a meeting. Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation and Rallybio's amended and restated bylaws also provide that, except as otherwise required by law, special meetings of the stockholders can only be called pursuant to a resolution adopted by a majority of the Rallybio Board. Except as described above, stockholders will not be permitted to call a special meeting or to require the Rallybio Board to call a special meeting.

Removal of directors. Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation provides that Rallybio's directors may be removed only for cause by the affirmative vote of at least 75% of the voting power of our outstanding shares of capital stock, voting together as a single class. This requirement of a supermajority vote to remove directors could enable a minority of Rallybio's stockholders to prevent a change in the composition of the Rallybio Board.

Advance notice procedures. Rallybio's amended and restated bylaws establish an advance notice procedure for stockholder proposals to be brought before an annual meeting of Rallybio's stockholders, including proposed nominations of persons for election to the Rallybio Board. Stockholders at an annual meeting will only be able to consider proposals or nominations specified in the notice of meeting or brought before the meeting by or at the direction of the Rallybio Board or by a stockholder who was a stockholder of record on the record date for the meeting, who is entitled to vote at the meeting and who has given Rallybio's Secretary timely written notice, in proper form, of the stockholder's intention to bring that business before the meeting. Although Rallybio's amended and restated bylaws do not give the Rallybio Board the power to approve or disapprove stockholder nominations of candidates or proposals regarding other business to be conducted at a special or annual meeting, Rallybio's amended and restated bylaws may have the effect of precluding the conduct of certain business at a meeting if the proper procedures are not followed or may discourage or deter a potential acquirer from conducting a solicitation of proxies to elect its own slate of directors or otherwise attempting to obtain control of Rallybio.

Supermajority approval requirements. The DGCL generally provides that the affirmative vote of a majority of the shares entitled to vote on any matter is required to amend a corporation's certificate of incorporation or bylaws, unless either a corporation's certificate of incorporation or bylaws requires a greater percentage. Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation and Rallybio's amended and restated bylaws provide that the affirmative vote of holders of at least 75% of the total votes eligible to be cast in the election of directors will be required to amend, alter, change or repeal specified provisions. This requirement of a supermajority vote to approve amendments to Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation and Rallybio's amended and restated bylaws could enable a minority of our stockholders to exercise veto power over any such amendments.

Authorized but unissued shares. Rallybio's authorized but unissued shares of Rallybio Common Stock and preferred stock are available for future issuance without stockholder approval. These additional shares may be utilized for a variety of corporate purposes, including future public offerings to raise additional capital, corporate acquisitions and employee benefit plans. The existence of authorized but unissued shares of Rallybio Common Stock and preferred stock could render more difficult or discourage an attempt to obtain control of a majority of Rallybio Common Stock by means of a proxy contest, tender offer, merger or otherwise.

Exclusive forum. Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation provides that, subject to limited exceptions, the state or federal courts within the State of Delaware will be exclusive forums for (1) any derivative action or proceeding brought on our behalf, (2) any action asserting a claim of breach of a fiduciary duty owed by any of Rallybio's directors, officers or other employees to Rallybio or Rallybio's stockholders, (3) any action asserting a claim against Rallybio arising pursuant to any provision of the DGCL, Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation or Rallybio's amended and restated bylaws, (4) any action to interpret, apply, enforce or determine the validity of Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation or Rallybio's amended and restated bylaws or (5) any other action asserting a claim against Rallybio that is governed by the internal affairs doctrine; provided that, the exclusive forum provision does not apply to suits brought to enforce any liability or duty created by the Exchange Act or to any claim for which the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction. Rallybio's amended and restated certificate of incorporation also provides that, unless Rallybio consents in writing to the selection of an alternative forum, the U.S. federal district courts shall be the exclusive forum for the resolution of any claims arising under the Securities Act. Although Rallybio believes these provisions benefit Rallybio by providing increased consistency in the application of Delaware and certain federal securities law, these provisions may have the effect of discouraging lawsuits against Rallybio's directors and officers.

Section 203 of the DGCL

Rallybio is subject to the provisions of Section 203 of the DGCL. In general, Section 203 prohibits a publicly held Delaware corporation from engaging in a "business combination" with an "interested stockholder" for a three-year period following the time that this stockholder becomes an interested stockholder, unless the business combination is approved in a prescribed manner. A "business combination" includes, among other things, a merger, asset or stock sale or other transaction resulting in a financial benefit to the interested stockholder. An "interested stockholder" is a person who, together with affiliates and associates, owns, or did own within three years prior to the determination of interested stockholder status, 15% or more of the corporation's voting stock.

Under Section 203, a business combination between a corporation and an interested stockholder is prohibited unless it satisfies one of the following conditions: before the stockholder became interested, the corporation's board of directors approved either the business combination or the transaction which resulted in the stockholder becoming an interested stockholder; upon consummation of the transaction which resulted in the stockholder becoming an interested stockholder, the interested stockholder owned at least 85% of the voting stock of the corporation outstanding at the time the transaction commenced, excluding for purposes of determining the voting stock outstanding, shares owned by persons who are directors and also officers, and employee stock plans, in some instances; or at or after the time the stockholder became interested, the business combination was approved by the board of directors of the corporation and authorized at an annual or special meeting of the stockholders by the affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of the outstanding voting stock which is not owned by the interested stockholder.

A Delaware corporation may "opt out" of these provisions with an express provision in its original certificate of incorporation or an express provision in its certificate of incorporation or bylaws resulting from a stockholders' amendment approved by at least a majority of the outstanding voting shares. We have not opted out of these provisions. As a result, mergers or other takeover or change in control attempts of us may be discouraged or prevented.

resulting corporation or entity is a wholly owned subsidiary of another corporation or entity immediately following such merger, consolidation, statutory conversion, transfer, domestication, or continuance, the parent corporation or entity of such surviving or resulting corporation or entity; or (b) (i) the sale, lease, transfer, exclusive license or other disposition, in a single transaction or series of related transactions, by Candid or any subsidiary of Candid of all or substantially all the assets of Candid and its subsidiaries taken as a whole, or (ii) the sale, lease, transfer, exclusive license or other disposition (whether by merger, consolidation, statutory conversion, domestication, continuance or otherwise, and whether in a single transaction or series of related transactions) of one or more subsidiaries of Candid if substantially all of the assets of Candid and its subsidiaries taken as a whole are held by such subsidiary or subsidiaries, except where such sale, lease, transfer, exclusive license or other disposition is to a wholly owned subsidiary of Candid.

In the event of any voluntary or involuntary liquidation, dissolution, winding up of Candid or a Deemed Liquidation Event, the holders the holders of shares of each series of Candid Preferred Stock are entitled to certain preferential payments out of the assets of Candid available for distribution to Candid's stockholders, and, in the case of a Deemed Liquidation Event, payable to Candid stockholders or received by Candid in a Deemed Liquidation Event (net of certain retained liabilities and expenses), on a pari passu basis based on their respective liquidation amounts, and before any payment shall be made to the holders of Candid Common Stock by reason of their ownership thereof, an amount per share of each such series of Candid Preferred Stock equal to the greater of (i) the applicable original issue price, plus any dividends declared but unpaid thereon, or (ii) such amount per share as would have been payable had all shares of such series of Candid Preferred Stock been converted into Candid Common Stock immediately prior to such liquidation, dissolution, winding up or Deemed Liquidation Event. After payment in full of all liquidation amounts required to be paid to the holders of shares of Candid Preferred Stock, the remaining assets of Candid available for distribution to Candid's stockholders, and, in the case of a Deemed Liquidation Event, payable to Candid stockholders or received by Candid in a Deemed Liquidation Event (net of certain retained liabilities and expenses), shall be distributed among the holders of Candid Common Stock, pro rata based on the number of shares of Candid Common Stock held by each such holder.

Rallybio

Holders of Rallybio Common Stock have no preemptive rights to subscribe for any shares of any class of Rallybio stock nor conversion rights to convert their common stock into or exchange their common stock for shares of any other class or classes or of any other series of the same class of Rallybio's capital stock. The rights, preferences and privileges of the holders of Rallybio Common Stock are subject to and may be adversely affected by the rights of the holders of shares of any series of Rallybio preferred stock that it may designate in the future.

Upon the dissolution, liquidation or winding up of the affairs of Rallybio, whether voluntary or involuntary, after payment or provision for payment of the debts and liabilities of Rallybio and of the preferential and other amounts, if any, to which the holders of preferred stock shall be entitled, holders of Common Stock shall be entitled to receive all assets of Rallybio available for distribution to its stockholders, ratably in proportion to the number of shares held by each such stockholder. A merger or consolidation of Rallybio with or into any other corporation or other entity or a sale or conveyance of all or any part of the Rallybio's assets, in any such case that does not in fact result in the liquidation of Rallybio and the distribution of assets to its stockholders, shall not be deemed to be a voluntary or involuntary liquidation or dissolution or winding up of the Corporation.

The Rallybio Board is authorized, subject to limitations prescribed by Delaware law, to issue up to 50,000,000 shares of preferred stock in one or more series, to establish from time to time the number of shares to be included in each series and to determine or alter for each such series, such voting powers, full or limited, or no voting powers and such designation, preferences, and relative, participating, optional, or other rights and such qualifications, limitations, or restrictions thereof. The Rallybio Board can also increase or decrease the number of shares of any series, but not below the number of shares of that series then outstanding, without any further vote or action by the company's stockholders. The Rallybio Board may authorize the issuance of preferred stock with voting or conversion rights that could adversely affect the voting power or other rights of the holders of the common stock. The issuance of preferred stock, while providing flexibility in connection with possible acquisitions and other corporate purposes, could, among other things, have the effect of delaying, deferring or preventing a change of control of Rallybio or other corporate action and may adversely affect the market price of Rallybio's common stock and the voting and other rights of the holders of common stock.

Candid's amended and restated certificate of incorporation provides that if the holders of any class or series of any Candid Capital Stock who have a right to elect a director pursuant to the provisions of Candid's amended and restated certificate of incorporation fail to elect such director, then such directorship shall remain vacant until such time as such holders fill such directorship, except that a vacancy in any At-Large Director seat can be filled by either (a) the stockholders entitled to elect the At-Large Directors or (b) all of the director(s) then seated.

SECURITIES ACT RESTRICTIONS ON RESALE OF COMBINED COMPANY COMMON STOCK

Pursuant to Rule 144, a person who has beneficially owned restricted combined company common stock for at least six months would be entitled to sell their securities provided that (i) such person is not deemed to have been an affiliate of the combined company at the time of, or at any time during the three months preceding, a sale and (ii) combined company is subject to the Exchange Act periodic reporting requirements for at least three months before the sale and have filed all required reports under Section 13 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act during the 12 months (or such shorter period as combined company was required to file reports) preceding the sale.

Persons who have beneficially owned restricted combined company common stock shares for at least six months but who are affiliates of combined company at the time of, or at any time during the three months preceding, a sale, would be subject to additional restrictions, by which such person would be entitled to sell within any three-month period only a number of securities that does not exceed the greater of:

- 1% of the total number of combined company common stock then outstanding; or
- the average weekly reported trading volume of the combined company common stock during the four calendar weeks preceding the filing of a notice on Form 144 with respect to the sale.

Sales by affiliates of combined company under Rule 144 are also limited by manner of sale provisions and notice requirements and to the availability of current public information about the combined company.

Restrictions on the Use of Rule 144 by Shell Companies or Former Shell Companies

Rule 144 is not available for the resale of securities initially issued by shell companies (other than business combination related shell companies) or issuers that have been at any time previously a shell company. However, Rule 144 also includes an important exception to this prohibition if the following conditions are met:

- the issuer of the securities that was formerly a shell company has ceased to be a shell company;
- the issuer of the securities is subject to the reporting requirements of Section 13 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act;
- the issuer of the securities has filed all Exchange Act reports and material required to be filed, as applicable, during the preceding 12 months (or such shorter period that the issuer was required to file such reports and materials), other than Form 8-K reports; and
- at least one year has elapsed from the time that the issuer filed current Form 10 type information with the SEC reflecting its status as an entity that is not a shell company.

We anticipate that following the consummation of the Merger, the combined company will no longer be a shell company, and so, once the conditions set forth in the exceptions listed above are satisfied, Rule 144 will become available for the resale of the above noted restricted securities.

PRINCIPAL STOCKHOLDERS OF THE COMBINED COMPANY

The following table sets forth information regarding beneficial ownership of the combined company's capital stock immediately after consummation of the Merger and the Concurrent Financing, assuming the consummation of the Merger occurred as of February 28, 2026, by:

- each person, or group of affiliated persons, expected by Rallybio and Candid to become the beneficial owners of more than 5% of the combined company's outstanding common stock;
- each person expected to be a director of the combined company;
- each person expected to be a named executive officer of the combined company; and
- all of the combined company's expected executive officers and directors as a group.

The table lists applicable percentage ownership based on 64,362,557 shares of combined company common stock expected to be outstanding immediately following the consummation of the Merger, is based on Rallybio's and Candid's capitalization as of February 28, 2026, and assumes (i) no exercise of outstanding options to purchase shares of Candid Common Stock, outstanding options to purchase Rallybio Common Stock or outstanding Rallybio pre-funded warrants prior to the Closing, (ii) Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing, (iii) an estimated Exchange Ratio of 0.0716, (iv) an assumed Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio of 0.0716 per share (v) a Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million, (vi) a reverse stock split of Rallybio Common Stock of 1-for-2.5 and (vii) the Closing on February 28, 2026. Immediately after the Closing, under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than Investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the Investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company (assuming a Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (a) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio Net Cash of $37.5 million as of the Closing), (b) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (c) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equity holders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments as described in the Merger Agreement, including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at Closing. There can be no assurances any of these assumptions will be accurate at the Closing.

Beneficial ownership is determined in accordance with the rules of the SEC. These rules generally attribute beneficial ownership of securities to persons who possess sole or shared voting power or investment power with respect to those securities. In addition, the rules include shares of common stock issuable pursuant to the exercise of stock options or pre-funded warrants that are either immediately exercisable or exercisable on or before April 29, 2026, which is 60 days after February 28, 2026. These securities are deemed to be outstanding and beneficially owned by the person holding those options or pre-funded warrants for the purpose of computing the percentage ownership of that person, but they are not treated as outstanding for the purpose of computing the percentage ownership of any other person. Unless otherwise indicated, Rallybio and Candid believe based on information provided to Rallybio and Candid, the persons or entities identified in this table have sole voting and investment power with respect to all shares shown as beneficially owned by them, subject to applicable community property laws.

Except as otherwise noted below, the address for each person or entity listed in the table is c/o Candid Therapeutics, Inc., 11622 El Camino Real, Suite 150, San Diego, CA 92130.

Requirements for Stockholder Proposals or Director Nominations to be Brought Before an Annual Meeting. Householding of Proxy Statement/Prospectus

SEC rules concerning the delivery of annual disclosure documents allow Rallybio or your broker to send a single Notice of Proxy Materials or, if applicable, a single set of our proxy materials to any household at which two or more of our stockholders reside, if Rallybio or your broker believes that the stockholders are members of the same family, unless Rallybio or your broker has received contrary instructions from one or more of the stockholders. This practice, referred to as "householding," benefits both you and Rallybio. It reduces the volume of duplicate information received at your household and helps to reduce our expenses. The rule applies to Rallybio's Notices of Proxy Materials, annual reports, proxy statements and information statements.

Rallybio will undertake to deliver promptly, upon written or oral request, a separate copy to a stockholder at a shared address to which a single copy of the Notice of Proxy Materials or proxy materials was delivered. You may make a written or oral request by sending a notification to Rallybio's Secretary at the address or telephone number above, providing your name, your shared address, and the address to which Rallybio should direct the additional copy of the Notice of Proxy Materials or proxy materials. Multiple stockholders sharing an address who have received one copy of a mailing and would prefer Rallybio to mail each stockholder a separate copy of future mailings should contact us at our principal executive offices. Additionally, if current stockholders with a shared address received multiple copies of a mailing and would prefer Rallybio to mail one copy of future mailings to stockholders at the shared address, notification of that request may also be made through Rallybio's principal executive offices. Stockholders who participate in householding will continue to have access to and utilize separate proxy voting instructions.

Other Matters

As of the date of this proxy statement, the Rallybio Board does not intend to present any matters other than those described herein at the Rallybio annual meeting and is unaware of any matters to be presented by other parties. If other matters are properly brought before the meeting for action by the stockholders, proxies will be voted in accordance with the recommendation of the Rallybio Board or, in the absence of such a recommendation, in accordance with the judgment of the proxy holder.

REPORT OF INDEPENDENT REGISTERED PUBLIC ACCOUNTING FIRM

To the stockholders and the Board of Directors of Rallybio Corporation

Opinion on the Financial Statements

We have audited the accompanying consolidated balance sheets of Rallybio Corporation and subsidiaries (the "Company") as of December 31, 2025 and 2024, the related consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss, changes in stockholders' equity, and cash flows, for each of the two years in the period ended December 31, 2025, and the related notes (collectively referred to as the "financial statements"). In our opinion, the financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Company as of December 31, 2025 and 2024, and the results of its operations and its cash flows for each of the two years in the period ended December 31, 2025, in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.

Basis for Opinion

These financial statements are the responsibility of the Company's management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on the Company's financial statements based on our audits. We are a public accounting firm registered with the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board (United States) (PCAOB) and are required to be independent with respect to the Company in accordance with the U.S. federal securities laws and the applicable rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission and the PCAOB.

We conducted our audits in accordance with the standards of the PCAOB. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement, whether due to error or fraud. The Company is not required to have, nor were we engaged to perform, an audit of its internal control over financial reporting. As part of our audits, we are required to obtain an understanding of internal control over financial reporting but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the Company's internal control over financial reporting. Accordingly, we express no such opinion.

Our audits included performing procedures to assess the risks of material misstatement of the financial statements, whether due to error or fraud, and performing procedures that respond to those risks. Such procedures included examining, on a test basis, evidence regarding the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. Our audits also included evaluating the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall presentation of the financial statements. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

Notes to Consolidated Financial Statements

1. BUSINESS

Rallybio Corporation and subsidiaries ("Rallybio", the "Company", "we", "our", or "us") is a clinical-stage biotechnology company comprised of experienced biopharma industry leaders with extensive research, development, and rare disease expertise with a mission to develop and commercialize life-transforming therapies for patients with severe and rare diseases. The Company's lead program, RLYB116, is a differentiated complement component 5 ("C5") inhibitor with the potential to treat diseases of complement dysregulation. In addition, RLYB332, a long-acting matriptase-2 ("MTP-2") antibody for the treatment of diseases of iron overload is currently in preclinical development. In 2025, the Company completed a confirmatory pharmacokinetic ("PK") and pharmacodynamic ("PD") study of RLYB116 in healthy volunteers and reported data in the first quarter of 2026. In April 2025, the Company announced the discontinuation of its RLYB212 program for the prevention of fetal and neonatal alloimmune thrombocytopenia ("FNAIT") based on PK data from the Phase 2 clinical trial that demonstrated an inability of the RLYB212 dose regimen to achieve predicted target concentrations, as well as the minimum target concentration required for efficacy. In July 2025, the Company entered into a definitive agreement to sell its interest in REV102, an Ectonucleotide Pyrophosphatase/Phosphodiesterase 1 ("ENPP1") inhibitor in preclinical development for the treatment of patients with hypophosphatasia ("HPP"), to a subsidiary of its joint venture partner Recursion Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Recursion") (the "JV Sale").

On March 1, 2026, Rallybio entered into an Agreement and Plan of Merger and Reorganization (the "Merger Agreement") with Candid Therapeutics, Inc., a Delaware corporation ("Candid"), a clinical-stage biotechnology company advancing a leading portfolio of T-cell engager ("TCE") therapeutics for autoimmune diseases, and Farmington Merger Sub, Inc., a Delaware corporation and wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio ("Merger Sub"). Upon the terms and subject to the satisfaction of the conditions described in the Merger Agreement, Merger Sub will be merged with and into Candid, with Candid surviving as a wholly owned subsidiary of Rallybio (the "Merger" and, together with all of the other transactions contemplated by the Merger, the "Contemplated Transactions"). The Merger is intended to qualify as a tax-free reorganization for U.S. federal income tax purposes.

Concurrently with the execution and delivery of the Merger Agreement, certain investors entered into a subscription agreement with Candid, pursuant to which such investors have agreed to purchase, immediately prior to the Merger, shares of Candid common stock representing an aggregate commitment of approximately $505.5 million in the concurrent financing (the "Concurrent Financing"). The shares of Candid common stock that are issued in the Concurrent Financing will be or will have the right to be, respectively, converted into shares of Rallybio common stock, par value $0.0001 per share ("Rallybio Common Stock"), in the Merger.

Subject to the terms and conditions of the Merger Agreement, at the effective time of the Merger (the "Effective Time"), (a) each then-outstanding share of common stock or preferred stock of Candid (each such share, a "Candid Share") (excluding any share described in clauses (b) or (c) below and Candid Shares held by stockholders who have exercised and perfected appraisal rights for such shares) will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock calculated in accordance with the Exchange Ratio as set forth in the Merger Agreement (the "Exchange Ratio"), (b) each Candid Share issued in the Concurrent Financing will be converted into the right to receive a number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock calculated in accordance with the Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio as set forth in the Merger Agreement (the "Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio"), (c) any Candid Shares held as treasury shares or held or owned by Rallybio, Merger Sub or any subsidiary of Rallybio or Candid immediately prior to the Effective Time will be canceled and shall cease to exist, and no consideration shall be delivered in exchange therefor. Each then-outstanding option to purchase Candid Shares will be converted into an option to purchase Rallybio Common Stock, subject to adjustment as set forth in the Merger Agreement.

Under the Exchange Ratio and Concurrent Financing Exchange Ratio formulas in the Merger Agreement, immediately after the Closing, on a pro forma basis and based upon the number of shares of Rallybio Common Stock expected to be issued in connection with the Merger, pre-Merger equityholders of Candid (other than investors in the Concurrent Financing) are expected to own approximately 57.55% of the combined company, pre-Merger equityholders of

Rallybio are expected to own approximately 3.65% of the combined company and the Investors in the Concurrent Financing are expected to own approximately 38.80% of the combined company (assuming proceeds from the Concurrent Financing of $505.5 million), in each case, calculated on a fully diluted basis, using the treasury stock method, and subject to certain assumptions, including (i) a valuation for Rallybio of $47.5 million (assuming Rallybio has net cash ("Rallybio Net Cash") of $37.5 million as of the closing of the Merger (the "Closing" and such date, the "Closing Date")), (ii) a fixed valuation for Candid of $750.0 million, and (iii) the relative capitalization of Rallybio and Candid. The percentage of the combined company that each party's equity holders will own following the Closing is subject to certain adjustments as described in the Merger Agreement, including the amount of the final Rallybio Net Cash at Closing.

Immediately prior to the Effective Time, Rallybio and a rights agent are expected to enter into a Contingent Value Rights Agreement (the "CVR Agreement"), pursuant to which holders of record of certain Rallybio securities as of the close of business on the last business day prior to the day on which the Effective Time occurs will receive one contingent value right (each, a "CVR") for each outstanding share of Rallybio Common Stock, prefunded warrant, Rallybio restricted stock unit or In the Money Parent Option (as defined in the CVR Agreement) held as of such date. Pursuant to the CVR Agreement, each CVR holder will be entitled to receive their pro rata share of (i) all of the net proceeds (including cash the value of stock to the extent listed on a national exchange, at the time of disposition), if any, received by Rallybio as a result of payments made to Rallybio of any upfront, milestone, royalty and other payments received under any disposition agreement related to Rallybio's pre-Merger assets (the "Legacy Assets"), and (ii) all of the cash proceeds, if any, received from Recursion under the Membership Interest Purchase Agreement, dated July 8, 2025, by and among Recursion, Exscientia Ventures I, Inc., Rallybio Corporation and Rallybio IPB, LLC. For a period of one year after the Closing Date, Rallybio will use commercially reasonable efforts to effect the disposition of the Legacy Assets. Such net proceeds will be subject to certain permitted deductions, including for applicable tax payments, certain expenses incurred or other liabilities borne by Rallybio or its affiliates in respect of the Legacy Assets, and losses incurred by Rallybio or its affiliates due to a third-party proceeding in connection with such disposition.

2. SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND PRINCIPLES OF CONSOLIDATION

Basis of Presentation—The accompanying consolidated financial statements of the Company have been prepared in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States ("GAAP"), and pursuant to the rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission (the "SEC"). Any reference in these notes to applicable guidance is meant to refer to GAAP as found in the Accounting Standards Codification ("ASC") and Accounting Standards Updates ("ASU") promulgated by the Financial Accounting Standards Board ("FASB").

In the opinion of the Company, the information furnished reflects all adjustments, all of which are of a normal and recurring nature, necessary for a fair presentation of the financial position and results of operations for the reported periods. The Company considers events or transactions that occur after the balance sheet date but before the financial statements are issued to provide additional evidence relative to certain estimates or to identify matters that require additional disclosure.

On February 6, 2026, the Company executed a reverse stock split of its issued and outstanding common stock, par value $0.0001, at a ratio of 1-for-8 with a record date of December 30, 2025 (the "Reverse Stock Split"). All common share, per share and related information included in the accompanying financial statements and footnote disclosures have been adjusted retroactively, where applicable, to reflect the Reverse Stock Split. See Note 14, "Subsequent Events" for additional details.

Principles of Consolidation—The consolidated financial statements include the accounts of the Company and its wholly owned subsidiaries. All intercompany balances and transactions have been eliminated in consolidation.

Use of Estimates—The preparation of the Company's consolidated financial statements in conformity with GAAP requires management to make certain estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts and disclosures in the consolidated financial statements. While management believes that estimates and assumptions used in the preparation of the consolidated financial statements are appropriate, actual results could differ from those estimates. The most significant estimates are those used in the determination of the fair value of its common units and incentive units awarded to employees prior to the Company's initial public offering ("IPO"), for purposes of recording share-based incentive compensation, the fair value of stock options, as well as contracted research and development expenses incurred.

Liquidity and Ability to Continue as a Going Concern—The accompanying consolidated financial statements have been prepared assuming that the Company will continue as a going concern. Management has evaluated whether there are conditions and events that raise substantial doubt about the Company's ability to continue as a going concern within one year after the date the financial statements are issued. Since its inception, the Company has incurred net losses and negative cash flows from operations.

During the years ended December 31, 2025 and 2024, the Company incurred a net loss of $9.0 million and $57.8 million, respectively. The loss for the year ended December 31, 2025 included a $23.0 million gain in connection with the JV Sale in 2025. In addition, as of December 31, 2025, the Company had an accumulated deficit of $302.0 million. The Company expects to continue to generate operating losses and negative cash flows in the foreseeable future.

The Company had cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities of $54.7 million as of December 31, 2025. The Company currently expects that its cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities will be sufficient to fund its operating expenses and capital requirements for more than 12 months from the date these consolidated financial statements are issued. However, the Company does not anticipate that its current cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities as of December 31, 2025 will be sufficient to fund any of its product candidates through regulatory approval, and it will need to raise substantial additional capital to complete the development and commercialization of its product candidates, if approved. Rallybio may satisfy its future cash needs through the sale of equity securities, debt financings, corporate collaborations or license agreements, working capital lines of credit, grant funding, interest income earned on invested cash balances or a combination of one or more of these sources.

Collaboration Arrangements—The Company considers the nature and contractual terms of an arrangement to assess whether an arrangement involves a joint operating activity that expose two or more parties to significant risks and rewards dependent on the commercial success of the activity. If the Company is an active participant and is exposed to significant risks and rewards dependent on the commercial success of the activity, the Company accounts for such arrangement as a collaborative arrangement under ASC 808, Collaborative Arrangements ("ASC 808"). ASC 808 describes arrangements within its scope and considerations surrounding presentation and disclosure, with recognition matters subjected to other authoritative guidance, in certain cases by analogy.

For arrangements determined to be within the scope of ASC 808 for certain research and development activities where a collaborative partner is not a customer following the guidance of ASC 606, Revenue Recognition ("ASC 606"), the Company accounts for payments due to a collaboration partner as research and development expense and for payments owed to us from our collaboration partner for the reimbursement of research and development costs as a contra-expense in the period such expenses are incurred. The Company classifies payments owed or receivables recorded as other current liabilities and other current assets, respectively, in the Company's consolidated balance sheets. See Note 3, "Collaboration and License Agreements" for additional details.

Asset Acquisitions—The Company evaluates acquisitions of assets and other similar transactions to assess whether or not the transaction should be accounted for as a business combination or asset acquisition by first applying a screen test to determine whether substantially all of the fair value of the gross assets acquired is concentrated in a single identifiable asset or group of similar identifiable assets. If this screen criteria is met, the transaction is accounted for as an asset acquisition. If not, further determination is required as to whether or not the Company has acquired inputs and processes that have the ability to create outputs, which would meet the definition of a business.

The Company measures and recognizes asset acquisitions that are not deemed to be business combinations based on the cost to acquire the assets, which includes transaction costs. In an asset acquisition, the cost allocated to acquire in-process research and development ("IPR&D") with no alternative future use is charged to research and development expense at the acquisition date. See Note 3, "Collaboration and License Agreements" for additional details.

Variable Interest Entity—The Company evaluates its ownership, contractual, and other interests in entities to determine if it has any variable interest in a variable interest entity ("VIE"). These evaluations are complex, involve judgment, and the use of estimates and assumptions based on available historical information, among other factors. If the Company determines that an entity in which it holds a contractual, or ownership, interest is a VIE and that the Company is the primary beneficiary, the Company consolidates such entity in its consolidated financial statements. The primary beneficiary of a VIE is the party that meets both of the following criteria: (i) has the power to make decisions that most significantly affect the economic performance of the VIE; and (ii) has the obligation to absorb losses or the right to receive benefits that in either case could potentially be significant to the VIE. Management performs ongoing reassessments of whether changes in the facts and circumstances regarding the Company's involvement with a VIE will cause the consolidation conclusion to change. Changes in consolidation status are applied prospectively. The Company evaluated its investment in RE Ventures I, LLC, a limited liability company ("REV-I"), defined in Note 9, and concluded that it represented a VIE and the Company was not deemed the primary beneficiary. If the Company is not deemed to be the primary beneficiary in a VIE, the Company accounts for the investment or other variable interests in a VIE in accordance with the applicable GAAP. See Note 9, "Investment in Joint Venture" for additional details.

Equity Method Investments—The Company accounts for investments for which it does not have a controlling interest in accordance with ASC 323, Investments—Equity Method and Joint Ventures ("ASC 323"). The Company recognizes its pro-rata share of income and losses in "loss on investment in joint venture" on the consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss, with a corresponding change to the investment in joint venture asset on the consolidated balance sheets.

Financial Instruments—The Company's principal financial instruments are comprised of cash, cash equivalents, available for sale marketable securities, accounts payable and accrued liabilities. The carrying value of all financial instruments approximates fair value.

Concentrations of Credit Risk—Financial instruments that potentially subject the Company to significant concentration of credit risk consist primarily of cash, cash equivalents and marketable securities. The Company invests its excess cash in money market funds and marketable securities in government insured financial institutions that are subject to minimal credit and market risk. Management believes that the Company is not exposed to significant credit risk as the Company's deposits are held at financial institutions that management believes to be of high credit quality, and the Company has not experienced any losses on these deposits.

Cash and Cash Equivalents—The Company classifies amounts on deposit in banks and cash invested temporarily in various instruments, primarily money market funds, with original maturities of three months or less at the time of purchase as cash and cash equivalents. The carrying amounts reported on the consolidated balance sheets represent the fair values of cash and cash equivalents.

Marketable Securities—We invest our excess cash balances in highly rated United States ("U.S.") government-backed debt securities and treasuries. We classify our marketable securities as available-for-sale and accordingly, record such securities at fair value. Debt securities with original maturities of greater than 90 days are classified as available-for-sale marketable securities and debt securities with original maturities of less than 90 days from the date of purchase are classified as cash equivalents.

Unrealized gains and losses on our marketable debt securities that are deemed temporary are included in accumulated other comprehensive gain (loss) as a separate component of stockholders' equity. If any adjustment to fair value reflects a significant decline in the value of the security, we evaluate the extent to which the decline is determined to be other-than-temporary and would mark the security to market through a charge to our consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss. Credit losses are identified when we do not expect to receive cash flows sufficient to recover the amortized cost basis of a security. In the event of a credit loss, only the amount associated with the credit loss is recognized in operating results, with the amount of loss relating to other factors recorded in accumulated other comprehensive gain (loss).

RALLYBIO CORPORATION

Property and Equipment—Property and equipment are recorded at cost and consist of computer and other equipment, capitalized software, furniture and fixtures and leasehold improvements. Depreciation is calculated using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the assets, or for leasehold improvements, over the remaining term of the lease, if shorter. The estimated useful life for each major asset classification are as follows:

Asset Classification	Estimated Useful Life
Computer and other equipment	3 years
Capitalized software	3 years
Furniture and fixtures	6 years
Leasehold improvements	lesser of lease life or useful life

Maintenance and repairs which do not extend the lives of the assets are charged directly to expense as incurred. Upon retirement or disposal, cost and related accumulated depreciation are removed from the related accounts, and any resulting gain or loss is recognized as a component of income or loss in the consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss.

Impairment of Long-Lived Assets—When indications of potential impairments are present, the Company evaluates the carrying value of long-lived assets. The Company adjusts the carrying value of the long-lived assets if the sum of undiscounted expected future cash flows is less than the carrying value. No such impairments were recorded during the years ended December 31, 2025 or 2024.

Leases—At the inception of an arrangement, we determine if an arrangement is, or contains, a lease based on the facts and circumstances present in that arrangement. Lease classification, recognition, and measurement are then determined at the lease commencement date. For arrangements that contain a lease we (i) identify lease and non-lease components, (ii) determine the consideration in the contract, (iii) determine whether the lease is an operating or financing lease; and iv) recognize lease right-of-use ("ROU") assets and liabilities. Lease liabilities and their corresponding ROU assets are recorded based on the present value of fixed, or in substance fixed, lease payments over the expected lease term. When the interest rate implicit in lease contracts is not readily determinable we use our incremental borrowing rate based on the information available at the lease commencement date, which represents an internally developed rate that would be incurred to borrow, on a collateralized basis, over a similar term, an amount equal to the lease payments in a similar economic environment.

We have elected to combine lease components with non-lease components on our office real estate asset class. Fixed, or in substance fixed, lease payments on operating leases are recognized over the expected term of the lease on a straight-line basis. Variable lease expenses that are not considered fixed, or in substance fixed, are recognized as incurred. Fixed and variable lease expense on operating leases is recognized within operating expenses within our consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss. Some leases include options to extend or terminate the lease and the Company includes these options in the recognition of the Company's ROU assets and lease liabilities when it is reasonably certain that the Company will exercise such options. We have elected the short-term lease exemption and, therefore, do not recognize a ROU asset or corresponding liability for lease arrangements with an original term of 12 months or less.

Income Taxes—The Company uses the asset and liability method of accounting for income taxes, as set forth in ASC 740, Accounting for Income Taxes ("ASC 740"). Under this method, deferred tax assets and liabilities are recognized for the expected future tax consequence of temporary differences between the carrying amounts and the tax basis of assets and liabilities and net operating loss carry forwards, all calculated using presently enacted tax rates for the years and jurisdictions in which the temporary differences are expected to be recovered. Changes in deferred tax assets and liabilities are recorded in the provision for income taxes.

The Company evaluates whether deferred tax assets are more likely than not of being realized in determining whether a valuation allowance is necessary. In making such a determination, the Company considers all available positive and negative evidence, including the future reversals of existing taxable temporary differences, projected future taxable income exclusive of reversing temporary differences and carryforwards, tax-planning strategies, taxable income in prior carryback years if permitted under tax law, and the results from prior years. If the Company determines it is more likely than not, that all or a portion of a deferred tax asset will not be realized a valuation allowance is recorded with a charge to income tax expense. Alternatively, if the Company determines that all or a portion of a deferred tax asset previously not meeting the more likely than not threshold will be realized, the Company reduces its valuation allowance and recognizes a benefit in income tax expense. As of December 31, 2025 and 2024, the Company determined that it is more likely than not that deferred taxes will not be realized and as a result recorded a full valuation allowance against its deferred tax assets.

The Company files a consolidated U.S. federal income tax return and has elected to include all subsidiaries owned more than 80%.

The Company recognizes and measure uncertain tax benefits in accordance with ASC 740 based on a two-step process in which (1) the Company determines whether it is more likely than not that the tax position will be sustained based on the technical merits of the position, and (2) for those tax positions that meet the more-likely-than-not recognition threshold, the Company recognizes the largest amount of tax benefit that is more than fifty percent likely to be realized upon ultimate settlement with the related tax authority. The Company's policy is to recognize interest and penalties related to uncertain tax positions, if any, in income tax expense.

Research and Development Expenses—Research and development expenses are comprised of costs incurred in performing research and development activities including personnel salaries, benefits, and share-based compensation; external research and development expenses incurred under arrangements with third parties, such as contract research organization agreements, investigational sites, and consultants; the cost of developing and manufacturing clinical study materials, program regulatory costs, expenses associated with obligations under asset acquisitions, license agreements and other direct and indirect costs. Costs incurred in connection with research and development activities are expensed as incurred. Costs are considered incurred based on an evaluation of the progress to completion of each contract using information and data provided by the respective vendors, including the Company's clinical sites. Depending upon the timing of invoicing by the service providers, the Company recognizes prepaid expenses or accrued expenses related to these costs. These prepaid expenses or accrued expenses are based on management's estimates of the work performed under service agreements, milestones achieved, and experience with similar contracts. The Company monitors each of these factors and adjusts estimates accordingly.

Stock Warrants—The Company accounts for stock warrants as either equity-classified or liability-classified instruments based on an assessment of the warrant's specific terms and applicable authoritative guidance included in ASC 480, Distinguishing Liabilities from Equity ("ASC 480") and ASC 815, Derivatives and Hedging ("ASC 815"). The assessment considers whether the warrants are freestanding financial instruments pursuant to ASC 480, whether the warrants meet the definition of a liability pursuant to ASC 480, and whether the warrants meet all of the requirements for equity classification under ASC 815. This assessment, which requires the use of professional judgment, is conducted at the time of warrant issuance and as of each subsequent quarterly period end date while the warrants are outstanding. Warrants that meet all of the criteria for equity classification are required to be recorded as a component of additional paid-in capital at the time of issuance. For issued or modified warrants that do not meet all the criteria for equity classification, the warrants are required to be recorded at their initial fair value on the date of issuance and remeasured each balance sheet date thereafter.

Share-Based Compensation—The Company accounts for share-based compensation in accordance with ASC 718, Compensation—Stock Compensation (“ASC 718”). Generally, share-based compensation is measured at the grant date for all equity-based awards made to employees based on the fair value of the awards and is recognized over the requisite service period, which is generally the vesting period. Share-based compensation for awards with performance conditions are recognized over the service period when achievement of the performance condition is probable. The Company has elected to recognize the actual forfeitures by reducing the share-based compensation in the same period as the forfeitures occur. The Company classifies share-based compensation in its consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss in the same manner in which the award recipients’ payroll costs are classified.

The Company estimates the fair value of options granted using the Black-Scholes option pricing model (“Black-Scholes”) for stock option grants. The fair value of the Company’s common stock is used to determine the fair value of restricted stock awards. Black-Scholes requires inputs based on certain subjective assumptions, including the expected stock price volatility, the expected term of the award, the risk-free interest rate and expected dividends. Due to the lack of a public market for the Company’s common stock and lack of company-specific historical and implied volatility data, the Company has based its computation of expected volatility on the historical volatility of a representative group of public companies with similar characteristics to the Company and in 2024, the Company began to include its historical volatility rate in the computation. The historical volatility is calculated based on a period of time corresponding with expected term assumption. The Company uses the simplified method to calculate the expected term for options granted where the expected term equals the arithmetic average of the vesting term and the original contractual term of the options due to its lack of sufficient historical data. The risk-free interest rate is based on U.S. Treasury securities with a maturity date corresponding with the expected term of the associated award. The expected dividend yield is assumed to be zero as the Company has never paid dividends and has no current plans to pay any dividends on its common stock.

Fair Value Measurements—ASC Topic 820, Fair Value Measurement (“ASC 820”), establishes a fair value hierarchy for instruments measured at fair value that distinguishes between assumptions based on market data (observable inputs) and the Company’s own assumptions (unobservable inputs). Observable inputs are inputs that market participants would use in pricing the asset or liability based on market data obtained from sources independent of the Company. Unobservable inputs are inputs that reflect the Company’s assumptions about the inputs that market participants would use in pricing the assets or liabilities and are developed based on the best information available in the circumstances. ASC 820 identifies fair value as the price that would be received to sell an asset or paid to transfer a liability, in an orderly transaction between market participants at the measurement date. As a basis for considering market participant assumptions in fair value measurements, ASC 820 establishes a three-tiered value hierarchy that distinguishes between the following:

Level 1—Quoted market prices in active markets for identical assets or liabilities.

Level 2—Inputs other than Level 1 inputs that are either directly or indirectly observable, such as quoted market prices, interest rates and yield curves.

Level 3—Unobservable inputs for the asset or liability (i.e., supported by little or no market activity). Level 3 inputs include management’s own assumptions about the assumptions that market participants would use in pricing the asset or liability (including assumptions about risk).

To the extent the valuation is based on models or inputs that are less observable or unobservable in the market, the determination of fair values requires more judgement. Accordingly, the degree of judgement exercised by the Company in determining fair value is greatest for instruments categorized as Level 3. A financial instrument’s level within the fair value hierarchy is based on the lowest level of any input that is significant to the fair value measurement.

In determining fair value, the Company utilizes valuation techniques that maximize the use of observable inputs and minimize the use of unobservable inputs to the extent possible, as well as considers counterparty credit risk in its assessment of fair value.

RALLYBIO CORPORATIONNotes to Consolidated Financial Statements - (Continued)Future Milestone and Royalty Assets

As part of the JV Sale, the Company received consideration including an estimated $3.0 million in future contingent milestones and royalty payments, which are recognized as a contingent consideration asset within prepaid expenses and other current assets on the consolidated balance sheets. The fair value of this contingent consideration was determined using a model that incorporates significant unobservable inputs based on Company estimates, external data, and management's judgment and forecasts. Key assumptions in the model include the discount rate, the timing of expected cash flows, the probability of achieving the milestone and royalty payments, and projected future net revenues.

The Company periodically reviews the carrying value of the Contingent Consideration when impairment indicators arise and records an impairment loss if the carrying amount materially exceeds the reassessed fair value. Increases in the carrying value are recognized only when contingent gains are realized. Since the contingent payments are tied to Phase 1 clinical study milestones and future royalty payments, the Company believes the likelihood of timely payment by Recursion is remote. See Note 9, "Investment in Joint Venture" for additional details.

Segment Information—Operating segments are defined as components of an enterprise for which discrete financial information is regularly reviewed by the chief operating decision maker ("CODM") in deciding how to allocate resources and in assessing operating performance. The Company manages its operations as a single segment for the purposes of allocating resources, assessing performance, and making operating decisions. All tangible assets of the Company are held in the U.S. See Note 12, "Segments" for additional details.

Basic and Diluted Net Loss Per Share—The Company calculates basic net loss per share by dividing the net loss by the weighted-average number of common shares outstanding during the period, without consideration of potential dilutive securities. Basic shares outstanding includes the weighted-average effect of the Company's pre-funded warrants to purchase shares of our common stock requiring little consideration upon exercise. Unvested restricted common shares as of December 31, 2025 and 2024 are not considered participating securities and as such are excluded from the weighted-average number of shares used for calculating basic and diluted net loss per share. Diluted net loss per share is computed by dividing the net loss by the sum of the weighted-average number of common shares outstanding during the period plus the dilutive effects of potentially dilutive securities outstanding during the period. Potentially dilutive securities include restricted common shares and stock options. The Company has generated a net loss for all periods presented, therefore diluted net loss per share is the same as basic net loss per share since the inclusion of potentially dilutive securities would be anti-dilutive.

Revenue Recognition—The Company recognizes revenue in accordance with the provisions of ASC Topic 606, Revenue from Contracts with Customers ("ASC 606"). The Company recognizes revenue when the Company's customer obtains control of promised goods or services, in an amount that reflects the consideration which the Company expects to receive in exchange for those goods and services. To determine revenue recognition for arrangements within the scope of ASC 606, the Company performs the following five steps: (i) identify the contract(s) with a customer; (ii) identify the performance obligations in the contract; (iii) determine the transaction price; (iv) allocate the transaction price to the performance obligations in the contract; and (v) recognize revenue when or as the Company satisfies a performance obligation. The Company only applies the five-step model to contracts when it is probable that the Company will collect the consideration to which it is entitled in exchange for the goods or services it transfers to the customer.

The Company evaluates the promised goods or services in these agreements to determine which ones represent distinct performance obligations. These agreements may include the following types of promised goods or services: (i) grants of licenses and related transfer of know-how, (ii) performance of research and development services, and (iii) participation on joint research and/or development committees. They also may include options to obtain further research and development services and licenses to the Company's intellectual property. The payment terms of these agreements may include nonrefundable upfront fees, payments based upon the achievement of certain milestones, and additional payments based on product sales derived from the collaboration.

The Company exercises judgment in assessing those promised goods and services that are distinct and thus representative of performance obligations. To the extent the Company identifies multiple performance obligations in a contract or group of contracts signed together, the Company must develop assumptions that require judgment to determine the estimated standalone selling price for each performance obligation in order to allocate the transaction price among the identified performance obligations. The transaction is allocated on a relative standalone selling price basis.

Prior to recognizing revenue, the Company makes estimates of the transaction price, including variable consideration that is subject to a constraint. Amounts of variable consideration are included in the transaction price to the extent that it is probable that a significant reversal in the amount of cumulative revenue recognized will not occur and when the uncertainty associated with the variable consideration is subsequently resolved. These estimates are reassessed at each reporting period as required.

The Company then recognizes revenue in the amount of the transaction price that is allocated to the respective performance obligations when or as the performance obligations are satisfied. For performance obligations satisfied over time, the Company estimates the efforts needed to complete the performance obligations and recognizes revenue over the satisfaction of the performance obligations.

Restructuring—The Company accounts for restructuring charges in accordance with ASC Subtopic 420-10, Exit or Disposal Cost Obligations. The charges related to the workforce reductions are cash-based expenditures related primarily to severance and benefit payments, with such amounts reflected in the Company's consolidated statements of operations and other comprehensive loss. See Note 13, "Restructuring" for additional details.

Recently Adopted Accounting Pronouncements—In December 2023, the FASB issued, ASU 2023-09, Income Taxes (Topic 740): Improvements to Income Tax Disclosures ("ASU 2023-09") which establishes new income tax disclosure requirements in addition to modifying and eliminating certain existing requirements. The ASU is effective for public business entities for fiscal years beginning on or after December 15, 2024 with early adoption permitted. The amendments in ASU 2023-09 were early adopted by the Company on a prospective basis. There was no material impact to the Company's financial statements as a result of adopting ASU 2023-09. See Note 8, "Income Taxes" for additional detail.

In May 2025, the FASB issued ASU 2025-03, Business Combinations (Topic 805) and Consolidation (Topic 810): Determining the Accounting Acquirer in the Acquisition of a Variable Interest Entity ("ASU 2025-03"), which revises current guidance for determining the accounting acquirer for a transaction effected primarily by exchanging equity interests in which the legal acquiree is a variable interest entity that meets the definition of a business. The amendments require that an entity consider the same factors that are currently required for determining which entity is the accounting acquirer in other acquisition transactions. The Company early adopted this ASU on a prospective basis as of October 1, 2025. There was no material impact to the Company's financial statements as a result of adopting ASU 2025-03.

Recently Issued Accounting Pronouncements—In November 2024, the FASB issued ASU 2024-03, Income Statement-Reporting Comprehensive Income-Expense Disaggregation Disclosures (Subtopic 220-40): Disaggregation of Income Statement Expenses ("ASU 2024-03"). This ASU requires public entities to disclose additional transparency on certain costs and expenses. ASU 2024-03 is effective for annual periods beginning after December 15, 2026, and interim reporting periods beginning after December 15, 2027. Early adoption is permitted. The Company has chosen not to early adopt this standard and is currently evaluating the potential impact of adopting this standard on its consolidated financial statements.

3. COLLABORATION AND LICENSE AGREEMENTSJohnson & Johnson Collaboration

In April 2024, the Company entered into a two-year collaboration agreement (the "J&J Collaboration Agreement") with Johnson & Johnson, through its wholly owned subsidiary, Momenta Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("J&J") to facilitate the advancement of research into products to address unmet needs relating to FNAIT.

In April 2025, the Company announced that RLYB212 Phase 2 PK results did not achieve target concentrations, including the minimum target concentration required for efficacy, and that the Company would discontinue its RLYB212 program for the prevention of FNAIT. The Company will continue to follow any previously screened Phase 2 participant who was also eligible to enroll in the multinational FNAIT natural history study, in accordance with the study's protocol.

Pursuant to the J&J Collaboration Agreement, the Company received an upfront payment of $0.5 million from J&J for the information dissemination and data provision services under the agreement. The J&J Collaboration Agreement provides that the Company is eligible for payments upon the achievement of certain screening-related events, however, the Company has discontinued screening and enrollment in both the FNAIT natural history study and the RLYB212 Phase 2 clinical trial.

The Company evaluated the agreement and determined it was within the scope of ASC 606. The Company determined there were performance obligations as follows:

- (1) Data collection & submission revenue – derived from Rallybio's ongoing management of the studies including the maintenance of a minimum site footprint, the license to utilize, and timely, semi-annual submission of the anonymized data, in the required formats.
- (2) Dissemination of J&J materials & participant revenue – derived from Rallybio's dissemination of content, information or materials related to the J&J-Sponsored Studies that are developed by J&J and are provided by Rallybio for the purpose of disseminating such content, information, or materials to staff at Rallybio study sites to provide to potential eligible participants regarding J&J's independent study.

In April 2024, the Company also entered into a securities purchase agreement (the "JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement") with Johnson & Johnson Innovation – JJDC, Inc. ("JJDC"). Under the terms of the JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement, JJDC made an equity investment purchasing 454,545 shares of common stock with a par value of $0.0001 per share for a share purchase price of $14.56 per share which includes a 10% premium for an aggregate purchase price of $6.6 million. The JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement contains provisions related to the registration of the shares and the restriction on the sale or transfer of the shares for a period of time. The Company determined the J&J Collaboration Agreement and the JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement represented combined agreements. In accordance with ASC 606 and ASC 820, total consideration of $1.2 million for the shares of common stock from the JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement, which represents the premium of $0.7 million and discount for lack of marketability of $0.5 million, has been allocated to revenue and will be recognized over the two year expected performance period.

The Company valued the common stock issued to JJDC, in connection with the JJDC Securities Purchase Agreement at fair value. The resulting fair value of $5.4 million was determined by applying the discount due to lack of marketability during the registration and lock-up period to the public trading price of the common stock, which is a Level 1 input, on the date of sale. The Company determined the value of the lack of marketability during the registration and lock-up period by utilizing put option models, which are considered Level 3 inputs. Such option models included the Company's historical volatility of 113.2% and the risk-free rate of 5.28% based on U.S. Treasury bond rates, as key inputs.

The Company recognized $0.8 million and $0.6 million, respectively, in revenue during the years ended December 31, 2025 and 2024, related to data collection and data submission with the identified performance obligations, and the premium and discount allocated to revenue from the sale of the common stock to JJDC. The remaining revenue is included in deferred revenue on the Company's consolidated balance sheets as of December 31, 2025, and will be recognized as the performance obligations are satisfied.

The Company determined that the J&J Collaboration Agreement is not in the scope of ASC 808, Collaborative Arrangements.

RALLYBIO CORPORATIONNotes to Consolidated Financial Statements - (Continued)*Asset Acquisition

In May 2022, we obtained worldwide exclusive rights to RLYB331, with Kymab Limited ("Sanofi") a preclinical antibody. In 2024, we re-engineered RLYB331 to extend its half-life and renamed the program RLYB332. We believe RLYB332 has the potential to address a significant unmet need for patients with severe anemias with ineffective erythropoiesis and iron overload, including beta thalassemia and a subset of lower risk myelodysplastic syndromes ("MDS"). Under the terms of the license agreement, we made an upfront payment to Sanofi of $3.0 million in the second quarter of 2022 for the exclusive license to KY1066. We could also be required to pay up to an aggregate of $43.0 million in development and regulatory milestones and up to an aggregate of $150.0 million in commercial milestones for a product in its first indication, plus tiered low-to-mid double digit percentages of such milestone amounts for up to three additional indications, and mid to high single digit royalties on net sales.

The license was accounted for as an asset acquisition as substantially all of the fair value of the asset acquired was concentrated in a single asset and thus the acquisition was deemed not to be a business combination. The acquired license rights represent an IPR&D asset that was determined to have no alternative future use. Accordingly, the Company recorded an IPR&D charge of $3.1 million to research and development expense, including transaction costs associated with this asset acquisition of $0.1 million, in the consolidated statements of operations and comprehensive loss for the year ended December 31, 2022. The Company did not record an IPR&D charge for the years ending December 31, 2025 and 2024 and did not achieve any milestones related to the terms of the license agreement.

AbCellera Collaboration

In December 2022, the Company entered into a multi-year, multi-target collaboration with AbCellera Biologics ("AbCellera") to discover, develop, and commercialize novel antibody-based therapeutics for rare diseases. Under the terms of the agreement, AbCellera and Rallybio will co-develop and share the development costs of up to five rare disease therapeutic targets, which will be chosen together by both companies. At the point one party in the collaboration opts-out of future co-development cost sharing, that party will be entitled to a share of future profit sharing from commercialization of the collaboration target, dependent on the proportion of their co-development contributions compared to the total development costs of a target as defined within the agreement. The agreement also has defined profit sharing floors that correspond to the stage of development at the time a collaboration party opts-out of co-developing a target.

The Company concluded that the agreement with AbCellera will be accounted under the scope of ASC 808 as both parties will actively participate in joint operating activities and are exposed to significant risks and rewards that depend on the commercial success of those activities. Under ASC 808, certain transactions between collaborative arrangement participants should follow the accounting for revenue under ASC 606 when the collaborative arrangement participant is a customer.

The Company determined that co-development arrangement as defined in our agreement with AbCellera does not meet the definition of a customer as defined by ASC 606. As a result, these activities will be accounted for as research and development costs. Payments due because of the co-development will be recorded as research and development expense in the period such expenses are incurred and for payments owed to us from our collaboration partner for the reimbursement of research and development costs will be recorded as a contra-research and development expense in the period such expenses are incurred. Costs related to the AbCellera collaboration were $0.4 million for the year ended December 31, 2024. There were no costs related to the AbCellera collaboration for the year ended December 31, 2025.

The Company has made no income tax payments and received no income tax refunds during the periods ended December 31, 2025 and 2024. All payments made to taxing authorities were for non-income based tax liabilities and are outside the scope of ASC 740.

The One Big Beautiful Bill Act (the "OBBBA") was enacted on July 4, 2025. The Company has evaluated whether the OBBBA has a material impact on its 2025 financial statements. The only provision of the OBBBA that impacts the Company's income tax accounting under Accounting Standards Codification 740 is the new Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended, Section 174A ("Section 174A"), which permanently allows taxpayers to fully expense domestic research or experimental ("R&E") expenditures paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2024. The requirement to capitalize foreign expenses under Internal Revenue Code Section 174 over 15 years has not changed. On August 28, 2025, the Internal Revenue Service released procedural guidance (Rev. Proc. 2025-28) for implementing Section 174A and related elections for domestic R&E. Transition rules provide taxpayers with options to account for any remaining unamortized domestic R&E expenditures paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2021, and before January 1, 2025. Taxpayers may continue to amortize such unamortized amounts over the remaining five-year period; alternatively, they may elect to deduct any remaining unamortized domestic R&E expenditures either entirely in the first tax year beginning after December 31, 2024, or ratably over two taxable years (e.g., 2025 or ratably in 2025 and 2026). The company has decided it will elect to continue to amortize previously capitalized and unamortized domestic R&E expenditures over the remaining five-year period. As of December 31, 2024, the company had approximately $41.4 million of remaining unamortized domestic research and development expenditures, representing approximately $11.4 million of its gross deferred tax assets. As of December 31, 2025, the company had approximately $25.5 million of remaining unamortized domestic research and development expenditures, representing approximately $7.0 million of its gross deferred tax assets.
